I am not going to discriminate in any such fashion against the individual producers in this country. If they have proper collateral, safe security, and want to borrow money from the War Finance Corporation, I am not going to prevent them from doing it and compel them to go to a bank or some intermediary organizations and pay additional charge in order to obtain the advancement. We are not empowering the War Finance Corporation with greater powers to benefit middlemen and banks to make increased dividends with Government funds. We are trying to render to the men who produce our food and clothing—aye, the wealth of the world—some service. We are trying to offer some way out of their present deplorable plight. We can not do it by constructing tollgates along the way through which they must travel in order to reach their destination. Let us open and clear the way—make their journey easy, without obstruction and additional and unnecessary embarrassments.

The Kellogg substitute, in my opinion, was splendid as far as it went.

The provisions that the distinguished Senator from South Carolina discussed about making advances to the banks that hold securities on agricultural products were fine. That is going to aid the producers very much. I believe that will really render more benefit than any other provision, but let us go further than that, go further than the proposal in the Kellogg substitute, and say to the individual who produces that if he offers the proper securities he can obtain the money, too, and let us not compel him to organize himself into an association or compel him to go to a bank or a middleman and pay a higher rate of interest and then let the bank come up here and get the money for 2 per cent less. Do not understand me to be criticizing the banks for doing that. It is the natural thing to do. It is what we all would do. I have much faith in our banks. They have and are now rendering great public service. They are, in most instances to the limit of their resources, trying to meet the abnormal conditions of to-day, but they are natural. Their officers are human; so they will, of course, exact charges for their service. That is proper and reasonable; but why by law compel this exaction of additional charges by the banks if the results can be accomplished directly between the corporation and the individual?

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President—

Mr. HARRISON. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. SMITH. I do not propose to have anything more to say until I take the floor in my own time and give my views on the measure except to say that the Senator is well aware that it would be more economical and more satisfactory in every respect for the farmers to get together and pool their cotton, and thereby be enabled to deal directly with the War Finance Corporation in an economical manner, than to insist on the proposition which the Senator is making, where every man might come individually and where there would have to be an unlimited number of inspectors and estimators in order for him to get anything at all, when in his local community, under the terms of the amendment proposed, he could organize an association, get a volume of stuff together sufficiently large for them to be guaranteed in making the loan, and thereby meet every purpose in a better way than if they were to compel, in this time of emergency, each individual to handle it for himself.

Mr. HARRISON. The success of the whole system is going to depend on the way it is administered, and I have faith, as I have said, in the personnel and the business acumen of the men who compose the War Finance Corporation. If they fail, with this bill enacted into law, to establish an office, if it is only one man in a little room to take applications in that particular section, and let it go out through the country that each producer can make his application at that office, their securities looked over, thoroughly investigated, and sent by that office to headquarters here with recommendations, then they will have failed in the discharge of their duties, in my opinion.

Mr. SMITH. All the banks in the State can not do that now.

Mr. HARRISON. Perhaps they can not, but let us give them power to do it, if they will, and if they fail to carry out the policies of the bill, it is up to them.

There is another difference between the Kellogg substitute and the Norris bill to which I wish to refer, in the matter of making advances to persons, governments, or subgovernments, in the purchase of agricultural products here. I believe very strongly that that is almost essential to the resumption of prosperity in this country. We know that we have surplus products. We are working in this legislation toward two ends: One is to seek a market for our surplus agricultural products, and the other is to make advances to the people who have the surplus products so that they can be carried until the products are exported and sold. If we can find customers abroad, whether they are subgovernments or governments, firms, corporations, or individuals, that can furnish us collateral that is safe and sound, and purchase our agricultural products here and expend the money here, there will be a great revival of business in this country. Why, of course, no Senator, no American citizen would for a moment indorse the action of any organization that would extend credit to a foreign concern or Government where the collateral was not good. Some one will say, "You never know." If the War Finance Corporation have any doubt about it, they should not make the advance.

But if they can be convinced, either by an individual purchaser or a subdivision of a government or a government, that their securities are good, then they should try to put through the deal in order that we may rid ourselves of that much surplus agricultural products, thereby adding to our wealth and international balance sheet. So those are the main differences between the committee substitute and the Kellogg amendment.

In the provision of the Kellogg amendment by which the War Finance Corporation is authorized to advance money to the banks in cases where the banks had advanced it to individual customers for agricultural purposes, there is no limitation or restriction except that which might be imposed under its general powers by the War Finance Corporation on the banks as to the amount of interest that the banks might charge the borrower. In the pending committee amendment there has been inserted a provision, as I have heretofore stated, an amendment offered by the distinguished junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY], which provides that in no instance shall one of the banks or the middlemen when they borrow money from the War Finance Corporation charge to the individual producer or the persons borrowing from them 2 per cent more than they may be paying to the War Finance Corporation. So while the Senator from South Carolina says that the rate of interest that one bank charges to an individual should be governed by the laws of the State—and that is so in most States, I take it; it is in my State, and I take it it is so in all the other States—other Senators know, and I know, that in their States and in my State banks can now loan all the money they desire to loan, which they have at this time to loan, and they can obtain the highest rate of interest that the State law allows them to obtain, which in many States is 10 per cent. If the law provides that they can not charge over 10 per cent, that is the rate which they are charging to-day. So when they loan money to the agricultural producers of the country they are going to charge the maximum rate of interest. It is, therefore, well and good that there should be some restriction placed upon the rate of interest that the banks and the middlemen may charge the producer or the borrower when the money which they may be loaning shall have been obtained from the War Finance Corporation.

There was one other amendment reported by the Senate committee, which is not included in the Kellogg amendment, and that is an amendment allowing the corporation to issue in bonds four times the amount of its capital, or $2,000,000,000. So now it may have $2,500,000,000 on which to operate. The Kellogg amendment placed the amount at $1,500,000,000.

We also struck out the provision in the Kellogg amendment which attached a condition to the advancements that might be made. The Kellogg amendment provided that—which is normally exported in substantial quantities.

Whenever the board of directors of the corporation shall be of the opinion that conditions arising out of the war, or out of the disruption of foreign trade created by the war, have resulted in or may result in an abnormal surplus accumulation of any staple agricultural product of the United States—

And this is the part to which I wish to call the Senator's attention—

Then the provision shall apply. We struck out the words "which is normally exported in substantial quantities," because there are many agricultural products on which persons should be permitted to obtain advancements from member banks or from the War Finance Corporation under the provisions of the bill that are not "normally exported in substantial quantities." So we thought it was well to strike out those words.

In the course of the consideration of this measure I intend to offer an amendment to it. It is not a committee amendment. I offered it in the committee, and I do not think I am revealing any of the secrets of the committee when I say that it was defeated by only one vote. I think the committee made a mistake when it did not incorporate the amendment in the substitute, but I shall offer it upon the floor of the Senate and I shall ask for a roll call upon it.

In my opinion, there is no governmental agency that is in the position to render more and real benefit to the small farmer who actually needs some governmental agency to help him out right now than the farm loan bank system. There are thousands and thousands of applications for loans now pending before the board, but there is little money on hand with which to make the loans. We thought that there would be; we did not believe there would be any difficulty when the litigation which was pending so long in the Supreme Court of the United States testing the constitutionality of the bond was settled. As Senators will recall, we had adopted in the Senate on one of the appropriation bills an amendment providing for the purchase by the Secretary of the Treasury during this year and next year of $100,000,000 of farm-loan bonds. That amendment passed the Senate by a practically unanimous vote. It went to the other House; there was no difficulty there; it would have passed there, but during the time in which the amendment had passed the Senate and its consideration in the other House the Supreme Court rendered the decision on the suit which had been pending before that court for months.

Of course, as Senators will recall, because of the pendency of that litigation the Farm Loan Board could not sell its bonds. After the decision was rendered, however, and the suggestion went to the other body—everybody practically agreeing upon it—that there was no necessity for passing the amendment to which I have referred, because the bonds could be sold, so that provision was held up and finally eliminated. The Federal Farm Loan Board recently offered for sale $45,000,000 of their bonds. It took them some time to sell them; it was a very difficult undertaking, and that is all they have sold. On the other hand, there are thousands upon thousands of applications pending of which the board are unable to take care.

Senators, we can render a real service by providing the means of taking care of those applications that are pending and which have been approved. So I shall offer an amendment authorizing the War Finance Corporation to purchase or to advance, in their discretion, $100,000,000 this year and an equal sum next year on farm loan bonds. I hope that the amendment will receive the approval of this body, so that the small farmers throughout the country may be taken care of. If this amendment can be passed and the other admirable features incorporated in the committee substitute are adopted, then we will have rendered a great service to the farmers, business people, and bankers throughout America.

FOREIGN COMMERCE, TRANSPORTATION, OVERSEAS MARKETS, AND OCEAN SHIPPING.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, closely related to the subject under consideration and directly bearing upon some phases of it are the broad questions of foreign commerce, transportation, overseas markets, and ocean shipping. The more pertinent financial arrangements and requirements involved in the pending proposals others have presented and still others will discuss.

In this connection, as well as in view of some matters we are approaching, I regard it worth while to submit some facts and comment on the general questions indicated.

The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] yesterday stressed the importance of getting our surplus products into foreign markets. Let us see where those markets are and the process of reaching them.

FOREIGN COMMERCE.

The Department of Commerce gives us the figures for the year 1920, as follows:

Value of exports.....	$8, 228, 759, 748
Value of imports.....	5, 279, 398, 211
Total.....	13, 508, 157, 959

This exceeds any previous year, and the prices were higher than during any former period.

Expressed in net tons, the figures would show, approximately, as follows:

Exports.....	63, 199, 456
Imports.....	37, 092, 841
Total.....	100, 292, 297

Exports for the year 1920 from the United States consisted of—

	Per cent.
First, raw material for use in manufacturing.....	23
Second, manufactures for further use in manufacturing.....	12
Total.....	35

This was largely made up of cotton, lumber, forest products, naval stores, phosphate, copper, tobacco, hides, and oil.

The next largest items may be classified as—

	Per cent.
Third, foodstuffs in crude condition.....	11
Fourth, foodstuffs partly or wholly prepared.....	14
Total.....	25

Under these heads may be mentioned grain, grain products, and meats.

The last item, making up the 100 per cent, should be placed.

Fifth. Manufactured articles for consumption, 40 per cent.

Heretofore from 50 to 65 per cent of our foreign commerce has been with European countries.

The movement of raw material and foodstuffs will doubtless continue largely to such countries.

Within the near future, however, everything points to our best customers being found in Cuba and other West Indian islands, Porto Rico, Central America, and, through the Panama Canal, the Orient.

South America also offers a splendid field. We have for some years past purchased more from South America, largely in raw materials, than we have sold them. The rate of exchange has been favorable to us. But within the last year the rate of dollar exchange in the United States has greatly increased and the purchase of our goods by South American countries has greatly diminished. It is said that large quantities of goods from the United States are now in storage in South American countries on account of their inability to pay for them. Uruguay is about the only country whose dollar is at par as compared to ours. In Argentina the United States dollar is worth $1.40. These countries, as, indeed, will practically all foreign markets now, require long-term credits.

To handle this business, particularly during the first nine months of 1920, there was active demand for tonnage at unusually high rates. At times it was difficult to obtain cargo space with reasonable promptness, and ship operators could name, in most instances, their own terms.

They made money rapidly and abundantly as long as the volume of traffic continued.

Some operators made small fortunes on single voyages.

But this business could not be maintained.

The buying power of foreign countries became in large measure exhausted. They could not furnish return cargoes either.

Shipping declined. Ship profits disappeared. Ship operators began to lose money. Since the first of this year our foreign business shows a marked decline.

For the first four months of 1921, as compared with the same period of 1920, a decrease appears in our exports of about $1,000,000,000, or 35 per cent, and in our imports of about the same, $1,000,000,000, or 52.5 per cent.

Of course, the decline in prices accounts in part for that showing.

For instance, cotton alone covers $466,000,000 of the shrinkage in value of exports.

This shrinkage appears in such leading commodities as cotton—raw and manufactured—meat, flour, automobiles, copper, chemicals, phosphate, naval stores, leather products, manufactured rubber, tobacco, manufactured wool, and manufactured wood.

The tonnage decrease is not so great as the decrease in value, but it has been enormous.

FUTURE PROSPECTS.

The United States at the beginning of the World War was indebted to foreign nations—I do not mean the Governments—some $5,000,000,000. We paid that up and now citizens of those countries owe us quite that much in private obligations, and foreign governments owe our Government some $10,000,000,000 more. We have passed from a debtor to a large creditor Nation. Our manufacturing establishments have increased their capacities. Our production in every direction has increased. Our surplus has grown and will continue to grow, and we must find outlets for it. Our domestic market will not take our products. The result must follow, and I need not dwell upon its unhappy character.

Foreign countries have been practically paying cash for their purchases heretofore, as evidenced by the fact that the balance of trade due the United States about equals our imports of gold. If this continued it would produce an improvement in exchange. But there is a limit to their gold supply, and their credit is quite at the vanishing point. They can only take our goods and pay us what they owe us or reduce their indebtedness if we take theirs. If we exclude their goods from our market, we destroy the opportunity to dispose of our surplus, we enhance the exchange difficulty, and make it impossible for them to liquidate their indebtedness.

MUCH DEPENDS THEREFORE ON OUR PUBLIC POLICY.

If we establish a protective tariff for the purpose of shutting out imports, we make it impossible to accomplish an expansion of our foreign commerce or to develop our merchant marine.

It is plainly true that "if our manufacturers are unable to meet foreign competition in our own market there is little hope of being able to do so in foreign markets."

Congress in one breath proposes to limit and restrict products that might come from foreign countries and in the next breath proposes to have the Government undertake to find markets in foreign countries for our products.

If foreign countries are producing a surplus which would come in competition with our products, why should they take ours?

If they are in need of our products, then they are not producing enough to supply the home demand of their own consumers, and why raise barriers against their coming here?

These positions are inconsistent.

EFFECT ON SHIPPING.

The startling decline in exports and imports accounts, in large measure, for the losses in shipping sustained by the Government, but, perhaps, in no greater degree than that sustained by private shipowners.

This demoralization of foreign trade is the primary cause of such losses and accounts for idle ships.

It resulted in reduction of freight rates, half empty vessels, returns in ballast, and decrease of earnings below operating costs.

It depends, as stated, on our policy, as well as our properly directed efforts, whether that chaotic condition will continue or not.

There are those who seem to be willing to sacrifice our foreign trade.

They argue that, taking the figures of 1920, the division between our domestic and foreign trade would appear substantially this:

		Per cent.
Domestic	$62,500,000,000	82
Foreign	13,500,000,000	18
Total	76,000,000,000	100

Of course, if either must be sacrificed, foreign trade must go. It would seem there is no real necessity for sacrificing our foreign trade in taking proper care of our domestic trade. In fact, one largely depends on the other.

Unless foreign trade is developed our production will inevitably decrease, because our consumption will not equal it, and that means distress; and likewise unless we have a fair volume of import business, it will be impossible to give profitable employment to our merchant marine. However, we require a merchant marine because, for one reason, we must have foreign trade, and we are not seeking foreign trade in order to sustain our merchant marine. It is true, though, there must be cargoes in both directions if steamship operation is to be successful. An increase in our export trade is necessary to a revival of American industry. A general revival of business in this country is dependent very largely on our foreign trade.

That it is our duty and entirely feasible to not only revive but to increase and extend our foreign trade, notwithstanding the depressed condition of some of our hitherto principal markets, I have no doubt.

For instance, the figures as to exhausted and hard-pressed Germany are somewhat surprising. She is now taking merchandise from us, measured in American dollars, in ratio equaling prewar periods.

Based on the first eight months, it is estimated that exports to Germany from the United States for the fiscal year 1921 will be $400,000,000 as against the prewar high record in 1913 of $352,000,000.

Present exports to Germany consist largely of food and manufactured material, such as wheat, grain products, cotton, tobacco, hides, and oil.

If Germany can conduct such transactions, why can not England, Belgium, France, Italy, and the Balkan States, to say nothing of the Scandinavian countries and Africa, do business?

PORTS.

Taking the exports and imports of 1920, and considering that part of the total movement handled entirely by water, as between group ports, I am advised that the division would be correctly stated about as follows:

	Per cent.
North Atlantic (including Hampton Roads):
Exports	65.6
Imports	82.2
South Atlantic and Gulf:
Exports	27.2
Imports	9.4
Pacific:
Imports	8.4

Let us suppose our trade with Europe is not revived—suppose, even, it continues to decline—the situation need not discourage us. One writer estimates that "four-fifths of the foreign trade of the United States in 1920—imports and exports combined—went to countries outside of Europe." He further says one-half of the total exports were in manufactured materials, and only one-fourth of the total foreign trade of this country was in raw commodities, exclusive of foodstuffs. The increase in the quantity of exported materials between the year 1915 and 1920 is estimated to be 40 per cent; the increase in value was approximately 220 per cent.

OUR NEEDS.

We need from other countries such articles as tea, coffee, sugar, rice, and the numerous spices in large quantities each year.

We require, also, certain metals and minerals, such as nickel, copper, iron, chromium, manganese ores, fertilizers, such as nitrate, potash, guano and manure salts, asphalt, and other material which we import by the hundreds of thousands of tons.

We now have the ships to bring to us the things we need and take to other countries the things we produce and they need.

We are better prepared with banking facilities, means of communication and transportation than ever before in our history to engage in and develop our foreign trade in competition with all comers.

A strong, vital fact, and element of success, is indicated by this record: We carried in American bottoms, imports and exports, to and from the United States, in 1846 81 per cent, in 1860 66 per cent, in 1875 26 per cent, in 1895 11 per cent, in 1901 8 per cent, in 1914 9.7 per cent, and in 1921 we are carrying 50 per cent and over.

Shall we keep this recent progress up, or shall we go backward and place ourselves at the mercy of foreign shipping interests?

We will maintain this American merchant marine, the benefits of which we now enjoy, or we will lapse into dependence on our competitors in foreign trade for the carriage of our goods.

We will establish and maintain and arrange to perpetuate an adequate American merchant marine, owned and operated for the benefit of American industry and American commerce, now or never.

NEW FIELDS.

Suppose, as suggested, our old-time sources of trade and prospects fail us, let us see, further about the new fields.

We have already seen that much the larger portion of our foreign trade is at present with countries outside of Europe.

If we reflect a moment we must conclude that our nearest field and the most susceptible of expansion and development in the future, is that which includes the countries bordering on the Gulf of Mexico and the Caribbean Sea. The lands contiguous to these waters comprise an area of 2,000,000 square miles and support a population of 40,000,000 people.

In 1920 the exports from these countries amounted in value to more than a billion dollars and imports to them more than $900,000,000.

They produce chiefly what we do not produce, and what we need, and they need principally the manufactured products which we desire to dispose of.

From those countries 20 years ago we imported things, in value, about $100,000,000, whereas now we take from them annually commodities valued at $600,000,000.

We exported to them 20 years ago goods to the value of $95,000,000, whereas our present sales to the Caribbean countries reach annually $500,000,000.

Our next nearest and best markets are the South American countries. They took from Europe in 1913 imports to the value of $677,767,815. We have acquired, to a considerable extent, that trade. Whether we will hold it or not depends on mutual cooperation and the transportation, banking, and credit facilities we extend to them.

Perhaps our greatest opportunities lie in Asia. Since 1914 that commerce with us has increased sixfold. In 1913 we exported to the Far East goods of the value of about $100,000,000. In 1920 our shipments to these same countries amounted to $850,000,000. In 1914 our imports from them amounted to $250,000,000, while in 1920 they totaled $1,350,000,000.

We could easily reduce the balance of trade now running against us in that region.

Electrical goods and mining equipment are in great demand in South Africa and in large quantities. Now is our favorable occasion to get and hold that business.

We never before had such a splendid opportunity to distribute throughout the world American products and bring in, mainly in American ships and through American agencies, the imports we need.

DISCRIMINATION BETWEEN PORTS.

The Federal Constitution provides (Art. I, sec. 9, clause 6) "Preference shall not be given by any regulation of commerce or revenue to the ports of one State over those of another."

Obviously if rail rates or ocean freight rates, or both, are unfairly or improperly adjusted and fixed such discrimination is effected.

We have seen that the chief items entering into our exports now are produced in or in territory contiguous to the South Atlantic and Gulf ports.

We have further seen that the most interesting and promising field for the future development of our foreign trade lies nearer the South Atlantic and Gulf ports than to the North Atlantic or Pacific ports. Even as to the Far East, through the Panama Canal, and South Africa, I have mentioned, the other ports have no advantage over the South Atlantic and Gulf.

Now, what is happening? The export rail rates at present are supposed to be fairly and justly fixed, but North Atlantic interests are complaining and are actually demanding that a differential from territory equally near the South Atlantic and Gulf ports shall be established in favor of North Atlantic ports.

I need not refer to the terrible congestion which occurred in those ports last year. I need not mention the lack of sufficient terminal facilities, the difficulty of obtaining berths, the tremendous increase in tonnage and lighterage and ports charges, the outrageous excess of stevedoring expenses and troubles constantly obtaining, particularly in New York, by way of showing they have all the traffic they can reasonably and expeditiously handle now, without continually demanding favors in order to get more.

It is to be hoped the Interstate Commerce Commission will hold fast to present schedules.

But the ocean rates, about which the United States Shipping Board has to speak, are discriminatory against the South Atlantic and Gulf ports.

Steamship lines are carrying the same ocean rates from North Atlantic, South Atlantic, and Gulf ports to Cuba and other West Indies ports, South and Central America, the Orient through the canal, and even to Central American ports, notwithstanding the great disparity in distance as between the Gulf and South Atlantic as compared to the North Atlantic. On the other hand, the ocean rates from the Gulf and South Atlantic to United Kingdom and continental ports carry differentials higher than from North Atlantic ports, the differential from Gulf ports being 15 cents per 100 pounds—except in case of iron and steel articles, which are the same—and from South Atlantic ports the differential is 7½ cents per 100 pounds, except on coal and iron and steel, which are the same as from North Atlantic ports.

This has been going on for years. It is an adjustment made by foreign flag vessels before we had a merchant marine and prior to the publication by rail lines of export rates from the Middle West.

Inland rates are adjusted so that through rates from interior competitive territory to these foreign ports are now the same through all ports, New York to New Orleans, inclusive.

Either one of two things should take place—the South Atlantic and Gulf ports should have a rate based on distance and therefore lower than the North Atlantic and eastern ports to the countries bordering on the Caribbean and Gulf or they should have the same rate as the North Atlantic and eastern ports to United Kingdom and continental ports.

The difference in distance in favor of eastern and North Atlantic ports to United Kingdom and continental ports should be disregarded to the same extent as distance in favor of South Atlantic and Gulf ports to Cuba and other Caribbean and Gulf ports is disregarded now.

To be more specific:

Distance from New York to Habana, 1,186 miles.

From Mobile to Habana, 533 miles. (Much less from Tampa and Jacksonville and Fernandina.)

Mobile less than New York, 633 miles, or 53.4 per cent.

Rates from New York and Mobile to Habana are the same.

Likewise from Tampa, Jacksonville, and Fernandina.

Distance from New York to Vera Cruz, 2,017 miles.

From New Orleans to Vera Cruz, 789 miles.

New Orleans less than New York, 1,228 miles, or 60.9 per cent.

Rates from New York and New Orleans to Vera Cruz are the same.

Distance from New Orleans to Tampico is only 711 miles, or 65 per cent less than from New York. (From Pensacola but little more.)

Distance from New York to Colon, 1,974 miles.

Mobile less than New York, 603 miles, or 30.5 per cent.

Rates from New York and from Mobile, or Fernandina, or Jacksonville, or Tampa, or Pensacola, to west coast of South America, the Orient, Philippines, Australia, New Zealand, and India, reached through Panama Canal, are the same.

Distance from New York to Gibraltar, 3,207 miles.

From New Orleans to Gibraltar, 4,593 miles. (From Savannah, Brunswick, Fernandina, or Jacksonville still less.)

New York less than New Orleans, 1,386 miles, or 30 per cent.

Rates from New Orleans to Mediterranean ports, reached through Gibraltar, are 15 cents per 100 pounds higher than from New York, except on iron and steel, which are the same. The differential as to South Atlantic ports is 7½ cents instead of 15 cents in the case of Gulf port rates.

Distance from New York to Gibraltar, 3,207 miles.

From Charleston, S. C., to Gibraltar, 3,619 miles.

New York less than Charleston, 412 miles, or 13 per cent.

Rates from Charleston to Mediterranean ports, reached through Gibraltar, are 7½ cents per 100 pounds higher than from New York, except on coal, iron, and steel, which are the same as from New York.

Distance from New York to Liverpool is 3,107 miles.

New York less than Charleston, 433 miles, or 12.2 per cent.

Rates from Charleston, Savannah, Brunswick, Fernandina, and Jacksonville to Liverpool are 7½ cents per 100 pounds higher than from New York, except on coal, iron, and steel, which are the same as from New York, and on cotton, which is 17½ cents per 100 pounds higher than from New York.

There are, no doubt, some exceptions that I have not mentioned, but in the main the general adjustment is as outlined.

The examples given can be multiplied without limit, but these are, no doubt, sufficient to be fully illustrative.

There is a fringe of territory extending all around from Halifax to Galveston for something like 500 miles into the interior from which territory rail rates to the seaboard are carried lowest to the nearest group of ports, as, for example, from territory on and east of the Pittsburgh-Buffalo line rail rates are lower to North Atlantic ports than to other competing ports; and from territory east of the Allegheny Mountains, including West Virginia, they are lowest to Virginia and South Atlantic ports; and from territory south of the Ohio River, embracing the Southeast and Mississippi Valley territory, they are lowest to South Atlantic and Gulf ports; and from Arkansas, Oklahoma, and Texas they are lowest to Gulf ports; but from competitive mid-West territory, including the States of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, Wisconsin, and other States north of the Missouri River, the rail rates to Gulf and South Atlantic ports, when for export, are the same as to New York, and if there was a parity in ocean rates from Gulf, South Atlantic, and North Atlantic ports it would allow traffic from this large and productive mid-West territory outlined to move to foreign ports on a parity of through rates all the way around the circle from Halifax to New Orleans, with the exception of a slight differential in inland rates that exists in favor of Norfolk, Baltimore, Philadelphia, and Canadian ports under New York.

This mid-West territory is highly productive of measurement cargo, which is regarded as being essential to profitable steamship operation.

Certainly if the present differential from Gulf and South Atlantic ports, higher than North Atlantic ports, is continued on transatlantic movement, then Gulf and South Atlantic ports are entitled to like differentials under North Atlantic ports to Cuba and other Gulf and Caribbean ports, made in like proportion, based on the lesser mileage to those ports.

What is needed for the ocean carriers is to place Gulf and South Atlantic ports upon a competing basis to the same extent that has been done by the rail carriers.

The same influences that established this discrimination in ocean rates are now at work to deprive the South Atlantic and Gulf of ships. They are loudest in their insistence that the Shipping Board shall sell to the highest bidders all the Government ships and go out of business.

Next to that they want the Shipping Board to discontinue entirely their allocating practice and require bare boat charter contracts exclusively. They believe the people of the South Atlantic and Gulf may not be in position to buy ships. They may not be prepared to charter the ships needed to serve their ports on a bare boat basis. If that is true, the result would be they would lose the ships now operated on the allocating plan. It is insisted, too, the Shipping Board should not operate the ships directly.

A further blow is thus directed at the South Atlantic and Gulf ports and all the region furnishing so large a portion of our exports.

The consequence, if the present policy of Government operation is abandoned, could not be escaped; the traffic would have to seek the North Atlantic ports and there take the ships the big lines would own and control. The rail carriers would be expected to adjust rates accordingly, and the world's routes of trade would be focused so as to exclude the South Atlantic and Gulf. This in spite of the fact that export associations are being formed, terminal and dock facilities are being greatly increased, chambers of commerce are actively interested, shippers are taking a financial interest in shipping, and a period of unprecedented commercial expansion is approaching in that region. In the presence of high railroad rates producers and shippers must turn to increased use of the waterways and employment of ships.

I do not mean to advocate the allocating plan as a permanent policy. What I mean to urge is that the Shipping Board should supply the necessary ships and see to their operation to serve the commerce of the country through the ports the traffic naturally, freely, and properly would flow.

It may be the Shipping Board should operate the ships directly and without the intervention of those serving as agents, particularly if they propose to serve on a commission basis or on a contract, under which they run no risk, and are only concerned with promoting their own interests.

By this time the Shipping Board may be able to command the services of men skilled in ocean transportation and may proceed, as does the Panama Canal Co. in the operation of that line, on their own responsibility and under their own direct management.

What I am now insisting on is that the routes of trade shall be developed and commerce shall be allowed to move along channels it seeks without forced, artificial diversion. That is what is contemplated in the merchant marine act of June 5, 1920.

That these routes of trade would prove profitable from the beginning no one was optimistic enough to suppose. Witnesses before the Commerce Committee estimated that from three to five years would be required to place the ventures on a profitable footing.

Because the routes do not show profits the first year of operation, the cry is raised that the whole enterprise is a failure, and losses from operation, according to my information, are grossly exaggerated.

I very much fear this ruthless attack on the Shipping Board and its work is inspired by those who never wanted to see an American merchant marine, joined by those who are thoroughly convinced they alone know how to operate ships. The desire for monopoly of ownership and monopoly of operation, combined with the ambition to direct and control the routes of trade, are powerful factors. Has the time come to reckon with them?

It is to be hoped that the thought "the greater the wreck the greater the glory in redeeming it" is not made to add color to the awful picture.

The fleet was built under war conditions and for war purposes.

Its transfer to the Shipping Board left them with three alternatives: First, sink the fleet; second, tie up the fleet; or, third, operate it.

We may dismiss the first.

Considering only the net financial cost in determining what was for the best interest of the Government, disregarding all consideration of serving and of extending American commerce, my information is it would have been more expensive to have tied up the fleet than it has cost to operate it.

The figures show that the loss per ton per day of the vessels in service during the first four months of 1921 was 3.253 cents, while for the steel vessels laid up the loss was 3.811 cents per ton per day. This does not take into consideration the 285 wooden vessels. Thus it will be seen that if the policy had been one of tie up rather than operate, the conservation of Government property would have cost the Government one-half cent per ton per day more than it has cost to operate the vessels, and in doing so serve the commerce of the Nation. The Shipping Board therefore wisely determined, as, indeed, did Congress by the merchant marine act, to adopt the third alternative.

So I believe it was wise to complete the construction of certain ships in the circumstances then existing.

The fleet had to be balanced to make it a well-appointed, commercial fleet. Contracts had been made. Damages resulting from cancellations had to be adjusted. Material, all prepared and finished for particular vessels, was on hand. In the cases where the contracts were continued the vessels were over 50 per cent completed. The material had been manufactured and assembled, for which payment had been made or obligations incurred. It was good business, wise economy, to complete the vessels, utilize the material, cancel claims for damages nearly equaling the cost of completion, and own the vessels.

The method pursued and the manner of carrying out the policy I have mentioned are different matters which I am not now undertaking to discuss. Certainly every agent, wherever desired or required, whatever his capacity, should be held to a strict and prompt accounting.

That the Shipping Board should undertake to operate the ships and should continue to do so until the aims and purposes expressed by Congress in the merchant marine act of 1920 are accomplished was and is eminently proper.

There was, in fact, no other alternative worthy of a moment's thought.

In continuing to operate the ships the interests of the Government, of course, should be carefully guarded. This can be done and should be done in a way that will supply the needs of commerce on the Pacific, Gulf, Atlantic, and Great Lakes; that will maintain the position of the United States as a respectable maritime power; that will afford suitable facilities for overseas trade on a footing of equality as to all ports in all portions of the country.

The people generally will not countenance discrimination in respect to ports. They will not permit, when they know it, unfair advantages promoted for selfish sectional reasons, by any agency of the Government. They believe in fair play, just and equal treatment.

Speaking for the moment for them, I am sure I can say for them this is all the South Atlantic and Gulf ports ask; it is all any other ports ought to desire or expect.

Mr. President, I will not take the time to discuss now the provisions of section 8 and section 28 of the merchant marine act, 1920, but I ask that they be inserted as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed, as follows:

SEC. 8. That it shall be the duty of the board, in cooperation with the Secretary of War, with the object of promoting, encouraging, and developing ports and transportation facilities in connection with water commerce over which it has jurisdiction, to investigate territorial regions and zones tributary to such ports, taking into consideration the economies of transportation by rail, water, and highway and the natural direction of the flow of commerce; to investigate the causes of the congestion of commerce at ports and the remedies applicable thereto; to investigate the subject of water terminals, including the necessary docks, warehouses, apparatus, equipment, and appliances in connection therewith, with a view to devising and suggesting the types most appropriate for different locations and for the most expeditious and economical transfer or interchange of passengers or property between carriers by water and carriers by rail; to advise with communities regarding the appropriate location and plan of construction of wharves, piers, and water terminals; to investigate the practicability and advantage of harbor, river, and port improvements in connection with foreign and coastwise trade; and to investigate any other matter that may tend to promote and encourage the use by vessels of ports adequate to care for the freight which would naturally pass through such ports: Provided, That if after such investigation the board shall be of the opinion that rates, charges, rules, or regulations of common carriers by rail subject to the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission are detrimental to the declared object of this section, or that new rates, charges, rules, or regulations, new or additional port terminal facilities, or affirmative action on the part of such common carriers by rail is necessary to promote the objects of this section, the board may submit its findings to the Interstate Commerce Commission for such action as such commission may consider proper under existing law.

SEC. 28. That no common carrier shall charge, collect, or receive for transportation, subject to the interstate commerce act, of persons or property, under any joint rate, fare, or charge, or under any export, import, or other proportional rate, fare, or charge, which is based in whole or in part on the fact that the persons or property affected thereby is to be transported to, or has been transported from, any port in a possession or dependency of the United States, or in a foreign country, by a carrier by water in foreign commerce, any lower rate, fare, or charge than that charged, collected, or received by it for the transportation of persons, or of a like kind of property, for the same distance, in the same direction, and over the same route, in connection with commerce wholly within the United States, unless the vessel so transporting such persons or property is, or unless it was at the time of such transportation by water, documented under the laws of the United States. Whenever the board is of the opinion, however, that adequate shipping facilities to or from any port in a possession or dependency of the United States or a foreign country are not afforded by vessels so documented, it shall certify this fact to the Interstate Commerce Commission, and the commission may, by order, suspend the operation of the provisions of this section with respect to the rates, fares, and charges for the transportation by rail of persons and property transported from, or to be transported to, such ports, for such length of time and under such terms and conditions as it may prescribe in such order, or in any order supplemental thereto. Such suspension of operation of the provisions of this section may be terminated by order of the commission whenever the board is of the opinion that adequate shipping facilities by such vessels to such ports are afforded and shall so certify to the commission.

WORLD WAR ORGANIZATIONS.

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 430) to protect the name and insignia of the World War organizations. It is just a short bill.

Mr. CURTIS. Of course, that would include temporarily laying aside the unfinished business.

Mr. BURSUM. Certainly; which I ask may be done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside and for the immediate consideration of Senate bill 430.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, let the bill be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read.

The Assistant Secretary read the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New Mexico? Without objection, the unfinished business is temporarily laid aside.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to the consideration of the bill (S. 430) to protect the name and insignia of the World War organizations, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, on page 3, after line 9, to strike out "That in case of a dispute arising between two or more veteran organizations in the right to use said organizational name or insignia the right thereto shall be determined by the Secretary of War," and to insert in lieu thereof the following: "That in the event of a dispute arising between two or more veteran organizations, whose membership is composed chiefly of persons whose military service was with the Army, as to the right to use said organizational name and insignia, the right thereto shall be determined by the Secretary of War; and in the event of a dispute between two or more such organizations whose membership is composed chiefly of those whose service was with the Navy, said dispute shall be determined by the Secretary of the Navy," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That veteran organizations as herein used is defined to be a voluntary association or a corporation the membership of which is composed of persons who served as officers or soldiers during the World War in the organization which is being perpetuated.

That the several veteran organizations of the World War organizations shall have the exclusive right to have and to use as an emblem, badge, or insignia the insignia adopted and worn by their respective organization during the World War.

That the said several veteran organizations shall have the exclusive right to have and to use the organization number and the name other than numerical designation adopted and used or by which the respective organization was known or by which it was designated in orders either of the Army of the United States or of the Allies.

That from and after the passage of this act it shall be unlawful for any person within the jurisdiction of the United States to falsely or fraudulently hold himself out as or represent or pretend himself to be a member of or an agent of any of the said veteran organizations for the purposes of soliciting, collecting, or receiving money or material, or for any person not a veteran of said World War organization to wear or display the said organizational insignia or to use or display the said known or designated organizational name or any imitation thereof for the fraudulent purpose of inducing the belief that he is a member of or an agent of said veteran organization. It shall be unlawful for any person, corporation, or association other than the veteran organizations of the several World War organizations or their duly authorized agent or employees for the purpose of trade or as an advertisement to induce the sale of any article whatsoever to use within the territory of the United States or any of its exterior possessions the organizational insignia or the known organizational name of said World War organizations or any combination or modification thereof.

That nothing in this act shall be taken to prevent the President of the United States perpetuating any or all of said World War organizations in the forces of the armies of the United States pursuant to the provisions of the national defense act and granting to them, under such regulations as he may prescribe, the right to use said known organizational name and the right to wear said organizational insignia.

That in the event of a dispute arising between two or more veteran organizations, whose membership is composed chiefly of persons whose military service was with the Army, as to the right to use said organizational name and insignia, the right thereto shall be determined by the Secretary of War; and in the event of a dispute between two or more such organizations whose membership is composed chiefly of those whose service was with the Navy, said dispute shall be determined by the Secretary of the Navy.

That if any person violates the provisions of this act he shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof in any Federal court shall be liable to a fine of not less than $100 and not more than $500 or by imprisonment for a term not exceeding one year, or by both said fine and imprisonment, for each and every offense.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BRITISH INFLUENCE IN THE SHIPPING BOARD.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE addressed the Senate on British influence in the Shipping Board. After having spoken for some time,

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Wisconsin if he wishes to conclude his remarks to-night or will he be willing to suspend and let us have a short executive session, and conclude his remarks at another time.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I think it would hardly be possible for me to conclude what I have to say to-night, unless the Senate extended its session far beyond the usual time of adjourning or recessing. I yield the floor for the time being for that purpose.

AMENDMENT OF NATIONAL PROHIBITION ACT.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, if the Senator from Kansas will yield, I wish to make a statement in reference to a unanimous-consent agreement which I was requested to ask.

Mr. CURTIS. I yield to the Senator from Ohio for that purpose.

Mr. WILLIS. In the absence of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING], and at his request, I had purposed at this time to ask for a unanimous-consent agreement to fix a time for voting on the bill (H. R. 7294) supplemental to the national prohibition act. I have, however, conferred with a number of Senators in reference to the matter, including those who are opposed to the measure, and I find that they are of the opinion that a time ought not now to be fixed for voting on it. It is late, and in order to submit the request it would require a call for a quorum. Therefore, I shall not now submit it.

EXPORTATION OF FARM PRODUCTS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1915) to provide for the purchase of farm products in the United States, to sell the same in foreign countries, and for other purposes.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CURTIS. I now renew my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

RECESS UNTIL MONDAY.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate take a recess until Monday next at 12 o'clock meridian.

The motion was agreed to, and (at 4 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until Monday, August 1, 1921, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, July 29, 1921.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Lord, our God, create within us that love that maketh not ashamed. Then shall we understand that it is this inward grace that inspires and directs the upright life. Receive the nameless longings of our hearts and interpret them according to the largeness of Thy mercy. Hear and regard the unuttered voices of our souls. Then shall we learn of Thy Divine Kingdom amid the emblems of this earthly dust. Through Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had pursuant to the provisions of section 13 of the act of Congress approved May 18, 1920, entitled "An act to increase the efficiency of the commissioned and enlisted personnel of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, Coast and Geodetic Survey, and Public Health Service" appointed Mr. WADSWORTH, Mr. NEWBERRY, Mr. MCKINLEY, Mr. FLETCHER, and Mr. WALSH of Montana as members on the part of the Senate of the special committee to investigate and report to Congress relative to the readjustment of the pay and allowance of the commissioned and enlisted personnel of the several services mentioned in the said act.

ENROLLED BILL PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. RICKETTS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that July 28 they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bill:

H. R. 5651. An act providing for a preliminary examination of the Yazoo River, Miss., with a view to the control of its floods.

"STARVATION" IN SOUTH GEORGIA.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by inserting in the RECORD an editorial from the Savannah Morning News, entitled "No 'Starvation' in South Georgia." This editorial refers to the pellagra question and alleged famine conditions in the southern part of the State.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The following is the editorial referred to:

NO "STARVATION" IN SOUTH GEORGIA.

Some excuse can be made for President Harding's too prompt publicity in regard to that alleged "semifamine" condition that was threatening the South, and that alleged pellagra outbreak that was worrying the cotton belt. When a man is told that there is a cry of distress he may be excused for answering it quickly without doing much thinking about it. At the same time he might do a lot of harm, and it appears right now that the President has hurt the South by his letter. He should not have been so vague in his description of the places where the alleged "semifamine" is "threatening." "Portions of the cotton belt" is a phrase that takes in a lot of territory. Some people likely will have the idea, after reading the letter, that south Georgia, which is a portion of the cotton belt, and an important one, is a place of pellagra and threatening famine. But south Georgians know better. They know that this empire of theirs is not a place where people starve. Elsewhere in the Morning News to-day are a number of telegrams received yesterday by the Morning News from many south Georgia counties, taken at random, all in the cotton belt, which shows that this part of the South has plenty to eat. As to all Georgia, it should not be forgotten that Georgia shipped this year more than 10,000 cars of peaches and 10,000 cars of watermelons.

The truth is that Georgians generally, including all classes, have probably more to eat than they had in any one of the 10 years just prior to the war. There has been a great increase in diversified farming, which means the producing of food and feed on the home place; there is a constantly increasing number of hogs and cattle, a very great acreage of beans and peas and corn and vegetables and fruits and nuts. Tenant farmers, more now than 5 or 10 years ago, have their patches of corn and cane and vegetables and their chickens and pigs. They don't need as much "carrying" as they used to need. Diversified farming has come not only for the man who cultivates hundreds of acres but for the tenant farmer who has had to depend upon cotton for his rent.

Maybe there is one particular in which President Harding's letter will serve the South. Perhaps it will make the South take stock of itself more carefully than ever before, and will be the means of showing to the rest of the Nation and to the world what a very wonderful place the South is, what its resources are, what varieties and quantities of crops it can produce. It is not starving, and it is not suffering terribly from pellagra, a disease which is found not merely in the Southern States but in at least as many States outside of the South.

Read the telegrams from south Georgia in the Morning News to-day and try to find any evidences of "starvation" in them. The Morning News would like to know if there is any county or any part of any county in south Georgia where there is not enough food, in quantity and variety, for the whole population of that county or section. It does not believe the whole power of the United States Government, if turned into a searching committee, could find any such condition in south Georgia.

FAMINE AND PELLAGRA IN THE SOUTH.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting an editorial from the Commercial Appeal, published at Memphis, Tenn., with reference to the charge that famine and pellagra are menacing the South.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by publishing the editorial referred to. Is there objection?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I did not quite catch the subject of the editorial.

Mr. RANKIN. I stated that it was with reference to this allegation as to famine and pellagra in the Southern States.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Does it involve some controversy or is it merely explanatory?

Mr. RANKIN. It is explanatory and refutes the charges that have been made as indicated by the President's statement of a few days ago.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The editorial referred to is as follows:

WHERE IS THE FAMINE AND PESTILENCE?

President Harding's request upon the Public Health Service and the American Red Cross to make an immediate investigation of "conditions of famine and pestilence" through the greater part of the cotton belt in the South, coupled with his suggestion that if it should be deemed necessary he would ask a congressional appropriation for relief, comes with all the shock of a flash of lightning out of a clear sky. It is all the more inexplicable and shocking because we have never heard of an appeal for aid having been made by the South, and the suggestions of the Chief Executive are most general in their implication of conditions most grave and menacing. Were the situation in the South anything like what the President represents of course we would be grateful for any aid offered, but since the South itself is without knowledge of such a situation it can not but feel that President Harding has acted with too much haste and too little discretion in letting the world understand that a great section of the United States is in the throes of starvation, misery, and death.

The words used by the President in his requests upon the health service and the Red Cross sound as if they were spoken of China, India, Austria, or some of the Balkan States that have been near the point of dissolution. We can not but feel wounded when we hear the leader of the Nation speak in this way:

"It must bring a shock to the American people to realize that a great section of their own country, which they are wont to think of as immune from such experiences, is actually menaced with famine and plague. For that is what it would be called if it should befall any other country, and we may as well give it its right name. It is, of course, a consequence of the economic disorganization following the war, and it demands instant and vigorous attention. Our people, so long and so often moved by splendid charitableness toward the unfortunates of other lands, will never permit such an affliction here at home."

These words will be more than shocking to the South. They will increase the burden that this section has been bearing so courageously for about a year, because they will put us in a false light before the remainder of the country and before the whole world. We speak it advisedly when we say they add insult to injury, although we do not in the least accuse the President of being actuated by any such motive. We do believe, however, that the President has been badly advised and that his advisers did not have the best interests of the South at heart. Some of the high-priced medical experts of the Government, no doubt, have just found out that the Negro share-croppers of the South have been subsisting chiefly on a diet of salt pork, cornbread, and molasses, and that this diet is causing famine and an epidemic of pellagra. It is evident that these new fangled experts are ignorant of the fact that for half a century and more the southern Negro has lived and grown strong on such a diet or one similar to it. It may be true that there has been a slight increase in pellagra in some sections, but this does not justify the assumption that the southern people are starving to death and being killed out by disease.

The communications of the President make it appear that the chief danger from famine and pestilence is in North Carolina, but the secretary of the board of health of that State declares he knows of nothing that would lead him to believe that pellagra is on the increase. His statement makes it all the more inexplicable as to where the President received his information. We can not believe that the head of this Nation would allow politics to enter into such a grave matter, and we would much rather choose to believe that his advisers were actuated by no good purpose toward the South.

It is true that this section of the country has suffered considerably from the economic reorganization caused by the war. It has carried over almost a whole crop of cotton, but it has been bearing its burden in a manly and courageous way. It has sought Government relief on a business and not on a charitable basis, and it will never solicit alms as long as it has the strength to work out its own salvation. The South will never be a charity patient on the Nation, and it wants the remainder of the country to understand this. We do not in the least accuse the President of meaning to do so, but he has caused more harm to this section than he can do good.

DESIGNATION OF SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will take this opportunity to announce that the Speaker expects to be away for three days next week, and appoints Mr. TOWNER to act as Speaker pro tempore during that time.

THE PRIVATE CALENDAR.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, I call up the regular order for to-day, which I believe is consideration of unobjected bills on the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The special order for to-day is the unobjectioned bills on the Private Calendar.

Mr. EDMONDS. I ask unanimous consent that they be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the bills on the Private Calendar be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the first bill.

HUBERT REYNOLDS.

The first business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2003) for the relief of Hubert Reynolds.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, may we have the bill reported? The bill was read in full.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I object.

M. FINE & SONS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1362) for the relief of M. Fine & Sons.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

A bill (H. R. 1362) for the relief of M. Fine & Sons.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay the sum of $13,473 to M. Fine & Sons, of New York, N. Y., to reimburse them for the purchase of 10,000 yards of flannel shirting which was returned to the depot quartermaster, Jeffersonville, Ind., on account of being 8½ ounces instead of 9½ ounces.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, I have an amendment which I would like to offer to the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. EDMONDS: In line 4, after the word "pay," add a comma and the following words: "out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. EDMONDS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ROLPH NAVIGATION & COAL CO.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5923) for the relief of the Rolph Navigation & Coal Co.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman reserve his objection?

Mr. BLANTON. I will reserve it for a statement.

Mr. EDMONDS. I want to say that there are a number of these bills where there have been collisions between Government vessels and private vessels, and providing that they may go to the court to have the cases heard. This is one of the bills of that kind, and I would be gratified if the gentleman would not object, because these men who are parties to the collision have a right to go to the court and be heard.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman will know, if he has looked into these cases, that there are several of them that are wholly without merit.

Mr. EDMONDS. The question of merit is going to be settled by the court.

Mr. BLANTON. Why authorize the sending of them to a court when we know that they have not any merit? Several of them show on the face that they are wholly without merit.

Mr. EDMONDS. The gentleman has expressed himself on the floor many times as being in favor of giving a man a chance in court. Here is a case where the Government can collect or the parties can collect.

Mr. BLANTON. There are enough bills on the calendar that probably have some merit to take up a good part of the day, and I think we ought to go to them.

Mr. EDMONDS. If the gentleman insists, he has the right to object.

FIDELITY & DEPOSIT CO. OF MARYLAND.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5382) for the relief of the Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland, Baltimore, Md.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. BLANTON. May we have it reported?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk proceeded to report the bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, there is a Senate bill of similar import, and I think that should be taken up instead of the House bill.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table Senate bill—

Mr. MANN. It is reported and on the calendar. It is No. 53 on the calendar, reported from the committee.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, I move that we pass over this bill for the present, and we will come to No. 53 on the calendar presently. It is a similar bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed over temporarily. Without objection, that will be done. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

GAETANO DAVIDE OLIVARI FU FORTUNATO.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6622) for the relief of Gaetano Davide Olivari fu Fortunato.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claim of Gaetano Davide Olivari fu Fortunato, managing owner of the Italian bark Doris, against the United States for damages alleged to have been caused by collision between the said bark and the United States collier Jupiter in Chesapeake Bay on the 17th day of October, 1916, may be sued for by the said Gaetano Davide Olivari fu Fortunato in the District Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Virginia, sitting as a court of admiralty and acting under the rules governing such court, and said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine such suit and to enter a judgment or decree for the amount of such damages and costs, if any, as shall be found to be due against the United States in favor of Gaetano Davide Olivari fu Fortunato, or against Gaetano Davide Olivari fu Fortunato in favor of the United States, upon the same principles and measures of liability as in like cases in admiralty between private parties and with the same rights of appeal: Provided, That such notice of the suit shall be given to the Attorney General of the United States as may be provided by order of the said court, and it shall be the duty of the Attorney General to cause the United States attorney in such district to appear and defend for the United States: Provided further, That said suit shall be brought and commenced within four months of the date of the passage of this act.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, I move to reconsider the last vote and to lay that motion on the table.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object. I do not think the time of the House ought to be taken up with that motion after the passage of each bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

SCHOONER "CHARLOTTE W. MILLER."

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2144) for the relief of the owners of the schooner Charlotte W. Miller.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claim of the owners of the schooner Charlotte W. Miller for damages alleged to have been caused by collision between said schooner and the United States steamship D-2 in the forenoon of Tuesday, July 31, 1917, about 2 miles east of Cornfield Shoal Lightship, in Long Island Sound, and subsequently on the afternoon of the same day and thereafterwards further injured so that she became a total loss, because the U. S. S. Ontario took charge of the sunken schooner, relieving the salvors of the owners then in charge thereof, and herself attempted to tow said sunken schooner to New London, Conn., may be sued for by the owners of the said schooner Charlotte W. Miller in the district court of the United States for the district of Rhode Island sitting as a court of admiralty, and acting under the rules governing such court, and said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine such suit and to enter a judgment or decree for the amount of such damages and costs, if any, as shall be found to be due against the United States in favor of the owners of the said schooner Charlotte W. Miller or against the owners of said schooner Charlotte W. Miller in favor of the United States and upon the same principles and measures of liability as in like cases in admiralty between private parties, and with the same rights of appeal: Provided, That such notice of the suit shall be given to the Attorney General of the United States as may be provided by order of the said court, and it shall be the duty of the Attorney General to cause the United States attorney in such district to appear and defend for the United States: Provided further, That said suit shall be brought and commenced within four months of the date of the passage of this act.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next one.

RELIEF OF OWNERS OF STEAMSHIP "FLYNDERBORG."

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5126) conferring jurisdiction upon the United States District Court for the Eastern District of South Carolina to hear and determine the claim of the owners of the Danish steamship Flynderborg against the United States, and for other purposes.

The title of the bill was read.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, the similar Senate bill being on the calendar, I suggest that we pass this one over until we reach the Senate bill.

Mr. MANN. The Senate bill is on the calendar.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman a question. In a case of this kind, why is it that these cases are not sent to the Court of Claims?

Mr. MANN. There is one bill here that is referred to the Court of Claims, but they all ought to go to an admiralty court, in my opinion.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, some of these courts to which they are sent have very little admiralty business. Of course, they sit in admiralty cases under the law.

Mr. MANN. Most of these courts along the coast have some judge in connection with the court who is specially versed in admiralty law.

Mr. BLANTON. Then I agree with the gentleman that they ought to go to that kind of a court. But we are sending one case here and another case there, and scattering them all over the country, some of which have very little admiralty business.

Mr. MANN. I do not remember; most of these cases, I think, would come before an admiralty judge who knew admiralty law.

The SPEAKER. Does the Chair understand the gentleman from Pennsylvania to ask that the Senate bill be substituted for the House bill?

Mr. EDMONDS. I would like to substitute Senate bill 997 for it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the Senate bill 997?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 997) conferring jurisdiction upon the United States District Court for the Eastern District of South Carolina to hear and determine the claim of the owners of the Danish steamship Flynderborg against the United States, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Dampskibsselskabet Dannebrog, of Copenhagen, Kingdom of Denmark, the owners of the Danish steamship Flynderborg, are hereby authorized to bring suit in personam against the United States, within one year after this act becomes law, to recover damages for any injury to such steamship Flynderborg which may have been caused by the United States steamship Prometheus, of the United States Navy, in a collision which took place between the United States steamship Prometheus and the steamship Flynderborg on December 4, 1919, in Charleston Harbor, S. C., eastern district of South Carolina, and jurisdiction in admiralty is hereby conferred upon the District Court of the United States for the Eastern District of South Carolina to hear, consider, and determine such suit upon the principles of liability and in accordance with the practice obtaining in like suits in admiralty between private parties and to enter a decree or judgment for or against the United States or such Dampskibsselskabet Dannebrog, including costs.

SEC. 2. That the suit herein authorized shall be brought and prosecuted in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to provide for the bringing of suits against the Government of the United States," approved March 3, 1887, as amended, in so far as such provisions are applicable thereto, unless otherwise provided herein. The right of appeal and review shall be afforded as now provided by law in like suits in admiralty between private parties.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. EDMONDS. Now, Mr. Speaker, in order to clear up the calendar, I would like to ask unanimous consent—

Mr. MANN. The gentleman should move to lay on the table the House bill first.

Mr. EDMONDS. I move, Mr. Speaker, to lay the bill H. R. 5126, a similar bill, on the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves to lay the House bill of similar tenor on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

RELIEF OF FIDELITY & DEPOSIT CO. OF MARYLAND.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, I move to take up Senate bill 1434, No. 53 on the calendar, in place of House bill 5382, No. 15 on the calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to take up the Senate bill, calendar No. 53, in lieu of the similar House bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 1434) for the relief of the Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland, Baltimore, Md.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HILL] whether this Senate bill likewise requires that bonds double in amount to the principal and interest shall be filed with the Treasury before the duplicates are issued? Does it not?

Mr. HILL. Yes; it does. The Senate bill is the same as the House bill which I introduced.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to redeem, after the 15th day of July, A. D. 1921, United States Treasury Department 5½ per cent coupon certificates of indebtedness, series B-1921, dated July 15, 1920, and due January 15, 1921, No. 32098 and 32099, of the denomination of $5,000 each, with interest from July 15, 1920, to the date of maturity of said certificates of indebtedness, January 15, 1921, and also to redeem, after the 15th day of September, A. D. 1921, United States Treasury Department 5½ per cent coupon certificates of indebtedness, series TM2-1921, dated July 15, 1920, and due March 15, 1921, No. 2216 and 2217, of the denomination of $5,000 each, with interest from July 15, 1920, to the date of maturity of said certificates of indebtedness, March 15, 1921, in favor of the Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland, without presentation of said certificates, the certificates of indebtedness having been lost, stolen, or destroyed: Provided, That the said certificates of indebtedness shall not have been previously presented for payment: Provided further, That the said Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland shall first file in the Treasury Department bonds, each in the penal sum of double the amount of the principal and interest of said certificates of indebtedness of the Treasury Department of the United States of America, in such form and with such sureties as may be acceptable to the Secretary of the Treasury to indemnify and save harmless the United States from any loss on account of the lost, stolen, or destroyed certificates of indebtedness hereinbefore described.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the bill H. R. 5382, calendar No. 15, be laid on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

SIX-MINUTE FERRY CO., VALLEJO, CALIF.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1268) for the relief of the Six-Minute Ferry Co., of Vallejo, Calif.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay to the Six-Minute Ferry Co., of Vallejo, Calif., the sum of $1,500, the total cost of repairing the damages caused to the ferry slip of the Six-Minute Ferry Co. during the launching of the United States steamship California in November, 1919.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, I have an amendment to offer to this bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. EDMONDS: In line 4, after the word "pay," add a comma and the following words: "Out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

SOUTHERN IRON & METAL CO., JACKSONVILLE, FLA.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1940) for the relief of the Southern Iron & Metal Co., Jacksonville, Fla.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I will ask the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SEARS] does this bill total the same amount which was recommended for payment by Secretary Weeks?

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Speaker, I will say to the gentleman from Texas—and I am glad he asked this question—that this bill authorizes the same amount as was contained in the bill passed by the Senate—

Mr. BLANTON. I mean the amount recommended for payment by the Secretary of War.

Mr. SEARS. And the same amount recommended by the Secretary of War. As a matter of fact, my constituents agreed to accept this amount in 1918 if prompt settlement of the claim was made. They are out the amount of the freight and the amount of the interest in 1918.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,189.35, for the relief of the Southern Iron & Metal Co., Jacksonville, Fla., for salvage material consisting of submarine cable sold and delivered at Key West, Fla., to the Southern Iron & Metal Co., at the instance of the Director of Purchase and Storage of the War Department, which salvage material was in good faith paid for but was not of the kind and quality represented.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

J. D. CALHOUN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2865) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to sell and patent to J. D. Calhoun, of Lincoln Parish, La., certain lands.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to sell and patent to J. D. Calhoun, of Lincoln Parish, La., the northwest quarter of the southwest quarter section 34, township 19 north, range 2 west, Louisiana meridian, situated in the parish of Lincoln, State of Louisiana, at not less than $1.25 per acre, land which he and his grantors have occupied under claim and color of title, and of which they have had the actual possession, beneficial use, and enjoyment, believing themselves to be owners in good faith for more than 30 years: Provided, That application for the purchase of the described tract of land under this authorization be filed at the United States land office at Baton Rouge, La., within 90 days after the passage of this act, and that no adverse claim thereto be officially of record as pending when the application is allowed and the sale consummated: Provided further, That the entry which may be made and the patent issued under the provisions of this act shall be subject to and contain a reservation to the United States of all oil, gas, and other minerals in the land so entered and patented and with the right to prospect for, mine, and remove same.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

CERTAIN LANDS IN LOUISIANA.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2866) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to sell and patent to parties named herein certain lands in Louisiana.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Reserving the right to object, I notice that this bill does not contain the reservation of the oil, gas, and other mineral rights, while the bill just passed does contain that reservation. What is the reason for the distinction?

Mr. WILSON. The Secretary of the Interior recommended that in the other bill. He found in connection with the examination that there were some oil leases in that section.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Would the gentleman object to the same reservation in this bill?

Mr. WILSON. Why, yes, Mr. Speaker; and really I do not think that reservation should have been in the other bill.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I shall have to object unless the gentleman is willing to have that go in. As far as I am concerned, I do not propose to let the Government part with title to any land hereafter, if I can help it, unless a reservation is made of the oil, gas, and mineral rights. I think that reservation ought to be made in all such transfers of land.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Speaker, these people have been in possession of these lands ever since 1868, thinking their titles were good. The Public Lands Committee investigated these cases. There is no oil in that section of Louisiana.

Mr. JONES of Texas. The gentleman does not know whether there is or not. Oil has been discovered in a good many places where they did not think there was any before. Anyway, no harm will be done to these people, because they get the intrinsic value of the land that they thought was there. It does them no harm to reserve these oil, gas, and mineral rights, so that if any is discovered the Government will be protected.

Mr. WILSON. The Government does not ask that. Besides, these are lands that were sold by the State of Louisiana under the swamp land grant, and these settlers bought them under the supposition that they were lands belonging to the State; but certain selections made by the State under the swamp land act have not been approved by the Secretary of the Interior. That is the reason why it is necessary to have Government action. If these were lands that absolutely belonged to the Government of the United States, as in the other case, the gentleman's objection might apply.

But I think it is very unfair where the State has sold these lands to the settlers, received the cash, and they have been in possession since 1858, to come now and ask to put in these restrictions.

Mr. CARTER. Is the gentleman trying to sell these lands that belong to the Government, or is he attempting to clear the lands that were sold to settlers by the State?

Mr. WILSON. To clear the title on lands sold by the State to the settlers.

Mr. JONES of Texas. That same argument applies to the bill which we have just passed. That party had been in possession 30 years, believing he had a title. He went there without any contemplation of gas, oil, or mineral rights, but for the intrinsic value of the land. These lands are on the same footing.

Mr. WILSON. The gentleman is unfair, because that is not this case. In the Calhoun case the land has always belonged to the Federal Government, and he found after being in possession 50 years that this was vacant and never had belonged to the State and never was his land. In this bill the lands were selected by the State of Louisiana under the swamp-land grant, and it was necessary in that locality to have the approval of the Secretary of the Interior to make the State's title perfect. In many of these lands they found that they did not have the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, although the State had sold the lands and received the money from the citizens.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILSON. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman state whether or not the claimant to this land has made any oil leases to any company?

Mr. WILSON. I have the abstracts of title in my office, and they do not show any oil leases.

Mr. BLANTON. And that he will not make any oil lease as soon as he gets a clear title?

Mr. WILSON. I suppose a man could give an oil lease at any time after he gets the title. This is a case where he wants a clear title to the land that he has occupied for years, supposing that it was his.

Mr. JONES of Texas. In the bill just passed it says:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to sell, etc., at not less than $1.25 per acre, land which he and his grantors have occupied under claim and color of title, and of which they have had the actual possession, beneficial use, and enjoyment, believing themselves to be owners in good faith for more than 30 years.

Mr. WILSON. But in that case the land belonged to the Government, and the Secretary of the Interior suggested that restriction.

Mr. JONES of Texas. It does not belong to the Government any more than this land.

Mr. WILSON. The gentleman fails to realize that this land was sold by the State to these citizens, and this bill is just to clear up the title.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Then why does the gentleman object to this reservation going into the bill?

Mr. WILSON. Well, I do not want any cloud on the title.

Mr. JONES of Texas. This is not a cloud on the title. This land was taken by these people to use for the soil and surface rights.

Mr. CARTER. If the gentleman will permit, at the time this was granted, or the land was sold by the State, there were no oil reservations, and so none were made. This is different from the other bill in this: In the other bill there was no original transfer from the Federal Government to the owner of the land. Now, this was transferred to the State and has been transferred to another party by the State. The Government evidently has transferred all its title and interest, and, anyway, the Government can not have any further interest. I do not think this restriction ought to be put on it, because it is different from the bill we just passed.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from Oklahoma knows that there has not been a bill of this character passed without this reservation being put on it.

Mr. CARTER. Oh, yes; there have been numerous cases where this reservation has not been put upon bills.

Mr. BLANTON. I know the gentleman from Massachusetts has insisted on such restrictions, as I have myself a number of times.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, here is land probably worth from $25 to $100 an acre. I do not know the value of land down there. Now, these people are really the owners of this land. Why, then, should we stand upon the question as to the possibility of there being oil there if they are really the owners of the land. Where we give public lands to a municipality for something or other, for a great many different purposes, we reserve the oil, gas, and mineral rights. I have been one of the most insistent in the past for putting that provision in the law, and I think that is where it belongs. These people have not the legal title to the land, but if they have the moral right to the land we ought not to hold them up by putting on this restriction. I do not know whether there is any oil there or not.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I realize the force of what the gentleman from Illinois says, but I think the Government made a mistake in not reserving the oil and gas from the beginning.

Mr. CARTER. But it did not do it.

Mr. JONES of Texas. No; no gas or oil was in contemplation at the time this land was taken. The oil, gas, and mineral rights were not in contemplation at all. Now it develops that under all the requirements they come before us and ask a courtesy of the Government; they have not complied with all the rules required, and surely in granting this courtesy the Government might claim the oil, gas, and mineral rights.

Mr. MANN. There is no doubt about that—the Government might say that they should buy the land again. It hardly seems to me that in giving up the title which the Government does not own in fact, although it has the legal title, that you should put on this restriction.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Does not the gentleman think that the same thing would apply to the other bill that we have just passed, where the owner had been in possession for 30 years, believing he had the title?

Mr. MANN. Oh, I read the provision in the other bill. It was recommended by the Land Office. I suppose that was the reason that was put in.

Mr. WILSON. I will state to the gentleman from Illinois—

Mr. MANN. I know there is a distinction between the two cases. This land was supposed to belong to the State. The State sold it, which was an error. The other land never did belong to the State. It belonged to the Government of the United States. The present owner of this land supposed that he had the title, and he has been in possession for 60 years.

Mr. JONES of Texas. The fact that it might have gone through the State is not a very great distinction. It originally came from the Government and this transfer is asked from the Government. The fact that in process of getting to the present occupants it might have gone through the medium of a State does not alter the situation as between this man in the preceding bill and the one in this.

Mr. MANN. Having been one of those who started the idea of putting this oil reservation into bills, I thought I would express my opinion in respect to it.

Mr. WILSON. The gentleman from Texas wants to be fair, I am sure.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Yes.

Mr. WILSON. The other proposition is quite different. Mr. Calhoun did not own it. It was Government land. It has been there for a number of years, and the Secretary of the Interior requested this reservation be inserted, but the land in this case went to the State, under the swamp-land grant, and if we were to put in the reservation it would probably inure to the State of Louisiana. It is not a parallel case.

Mr. JONES of Texas. This authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to grant patents direct to these individuals.

Mr. WILSON. That has been true in all of these swamp-land grants. We passed a dozen bills here last year in respect to land right in the oil belt, and they did not make any such reservation.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I have put the reservation in a number of them, and every time that I have noticed a bill come in the last year or two that did not carry the reservation of those rights I have offered the amendment, and it has usually been adopted.

Mr. WILSON. That is all right, if the land belongs to the Federal Government.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILSON. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to state to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] that he ought not in past years to have established a wise policy for the Government, for the younger generation of Representatives to follow, unless he is going to stand pat on it and not get weak knees.

Mr. MANN. Very few people call me weak kneed. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANTON. It is only in late years that the gentleman is receding from the wise policy that he has established from time to time in years past and which the younger Representatives are seeking to follow. If he is going to do away with all of his wise policies, then we are without guide or compass.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will just follow me, he will follow a very direct course. He need not be alarmed about that. I am not weakening, and I am not waiving any claims I have ever made in reference to matters of this sort. At times I can see a distinction between two propositions, and I think the gentleman from Texas can at times, and I hope he can at this time, because there is a distinction.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Speaker, for the present—

Mr. WILSON. I wish the gentleman would not object.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, if the other gentleman from Texas is getting weak-kneed, I object.

Mr. JONES of Texas. If the gentleman will put that reservation in his bill, it can pass now.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Speaker, these people are in possession of this land. It is not land that the Government claims; and if gentlemen see fit to insist upon this, of course I shall have to let the bill go over. We would have no objection in the world to the reservation being made if the land originally belonged to the Government.

Mr. CARTER. I shall object if the reservation goes in, so that will end it.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made, and the Clerk will report the next bill.

PURCHASE OF CERTAIN LAND BY THE CITY OF MEDFORD, OREG.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5684) to authorize the purchase by the city of Medford, Oreg., of certain lands formerly embraced in the grant to the Oregon & California Railroad Co. and revested in the United States by the act approved June 9, 1916.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk reported the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior shall be, and is hereby, authorized to issue a patent to the city of Medford, Oreg., for the following-described lands, being a part of the lands revested in the United States by the act of Congress enacted June 9, 1916 (39 Stats., p. 218), to wit: The southwest quarter of the southwest quarter of section 25 in township 36 south, range 2 east, and the northeast quarter of the southeast quarter of section 13, in township 36 south, range 1 east, of the Willamette meridian, in the State of Oregon; on condition that the said city first shall pay to the United States the sum of $2.50 per acre for all of said lands and in addition thereto the appraised price of the timber on all such lands as may be classified as timberlands: Provided, That there shall be reserved to the United States all oil, coal, and other mineral deposits that may be found in the lands so granted and all necessary use of the lands for extracting the same, and that there shall be reserved to the United States, as to the said southwest quarter of the southwest quarter of section 25, in township 36 south, range 2 east, or to its permittees or licensees, the right to enter thereon and take and use the same for power purposes in accordance with the terms and conditions of section 24 of the Federal water power act of June 10, 1920.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior shall prescribe all necessary regulations to carry into effect the foregoing provisions of this act.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

RECONVEYANCE OF CERTAIN LANDS IN MOUNT PLEASANT, MICH.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take up out of order the bill (H. R. 7051) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to execute deeds of reconveyance for certain lands in the city of Mount Pleasant, Isabella County, Mich.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to take up out of order the bill H. R. 7051. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk reported the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, let the bill be reported.

The Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to execute deeds on behalf of the United States of America to Walter F. Newberry, John C. Hicks, Barbara Granger Vowles (formerly Barbara Granger), Jean Gretchen Stickle, Bruce Granger Stickle, and Bruce Stickle, or their heirs, reconveying to said persons or their heirs certain lands in the city of Mount Pleasant, Mich., heretofore conveyed by them to the United States of America, the appropriation for the purchase price of said lands having lapsed by operation of law.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk again reported the bill.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. Fordney, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

RELIEF OF LIBERTY LOAN SUBSCRIBERS.

The next business on the private calendar was the bill (H. R. 5775) for the relief of Liberty loan subscribers of the North Penn Bank, Philadelphia, Pa.; Santa Rosa National Bank, Santa Rosa, Calif.; and Mineral City Bank, Mineral City, Ohio.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I object.

LUKE RATIGAN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2614) for the relief of Luke Ratigan.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, let us have the bill reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas Luke Ratigan, of San Francisco, Calif., was employed in the United States Revenue-Cutter Service as fireman for a period of over 25 years; and

Whereas the said Luke Ratigan, while in the discharge of his duty in said service and in the saving of human life, received physical injuries which compelled him to relinquish the position of a petty officer, to which he had just been promoted, and continue in the said United States Revenue-Cutter Service at the lower rating; and

Whereas by act of Congress approved January 28, 1915, the Revenue-Cutter Service and the Life-Saving Service were combined as the Coast Guard: Therefore

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of Luke Ratigan on the retired list of petty officers of the Coast Guard with the retired pay and allowances of a petty officer in said Coast Guard.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert "That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of Luke Ratigan on the retired list of the Coast Guard as an oiler, first class, retired, at the rate of pay he would be entitled to receive had he held the rating of oiler, first class, when retired."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Is the gentleman from Illinois going to object? If not, I shall object. I would like to hear something about this, but I do not think it will overcome my objection.

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, there does not seem to be anybody here who knows anything about it, apparently.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

EXCHANGE OF LANDS BETWEEN SWAN LAND &amp; CATTLE CO. AND THE UNITED STATES.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 488) providing for an exchange of lands between the Swan Land & Cattle Co. and the United States.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. May we have the bill reported, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That upon proper execution and delivery by the Swan Land & Cattle Co. (Ltd.), a corporation, of a deed conveying to the United States, its successors and assigns, a good merchantable title in fee, free of incumbrance, to certain lands needed by the United States for construction, operation, and maintenance purposes, in connection with the North Platte irrigation project, Nebraska-Wyoming, to wit: The southwest quarter of the northeast quarter and the southeast quarter of the northwest quarter of section 25, township 25 north, range 63 west, sixth principal meridian, Wyoming; then in exchange for such lands so conveyed a patent shall be issued by the United States to said Swan Land & Cattle Co., its successors and assigns, conveying to said company the northeast quarter of the northeast quarter of section 26 and the northeast quarter of the southwest quarter of section 23, township 25 north, range 63 west, sixth principal meridian.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, has this been approved by the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. It has been approved by the Secretary of the Interior; in fact, was introduced at the last session of Congress at his request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was read for amendment.

The bill was ordered to be read the third time; was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and lay that motion on the table.

Mr. MANN. Well, I object.

RELIEF OF LIBERTY LOAN SUBSCRIBERS.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to House Calendar No. 24, the gentleman who objected to the bill before having done so under a misunderstanding and is now willing that we should go ahead with the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I object.

TO QUIET TITLE TO CERTAIN LANDS IN THE CITY OF WALTERS, OKLA.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 530) to quiet title to certain tracts of land in the city of Walters, State of Oklahoma.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. I would like to have the bill reported.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That whatsoever right, title, or interest the United States may have, by reason of escheat or otherwise, in and to any of the public reserves shown upon the plat of the town site of Walters, State of Oklahoma, prepared under the direction of Warren H. Brown, probate judge of Comanche County, Okla., and any public reserves designated in the patent of said reserves issued by the Government to said town be, and the same is hereby, released and quitclaimed unto said city or town of Walters, State of Oklahoma.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was read for amendment.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, is there anybody in charge of the bill? If so, I desire to ask a question.

Mr. GENSMAN. I am in charge of the bill, in a way, and I can answer the question.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Why should the Government quitclaim any interest it should have in this town site?

Mr. GENSMAN. At the time of the opening of the Kiowa and Comanche country the Government under the town-site act transferred to Warren H. Brown, county judge, this particular tract of land. The plat showed a certain portion of the quarter section was transferred for park purposes, city hall purposes, and things of that kind. There was a direct patent issued by the Government to Walter H. Brown, county judge, for the benefit of the settlers upon the land, and this particular 10 acres and more was patented for the purposes of parks, city hall, and so forth. Now, later on the depot burned down and the town shifted in an entirely different direction from that contemplated by the early settlers, so that these particular little tracts for school purposes, city hall purposes, and things of that kind were not in the right location. They were not accessible to the citizens of the town and properly located for the purposes contemplated by the early settlers. Now, they desire to sell this land, which was transferred for the purposes stated, and buy land where they can put the city hall, parks, and school buildings and other things on.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the citizens themselves provide suitable and adequate quarters for this purpose?

Mr. GENSMAN. I presume so; certainly.

The bill was ordered to be read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

PREFERENTIAL RIGHTS TO M. M. WANT AS TRUSTEE, ETC.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1318) granting to certain claimants a preferential right to purchase certain alleged public lands in the State of Arkansas, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the necessity for this legislation.

Mr. DRIVER. Mr. Speaker, when the original survey was made of swamp lands contiguous to the lowlands created by an earth disturbance in 1811 and 1812 in the St. Francis Valley of Arkansas, there were errors made in delimiting the streams there known as Tyronza River, Dead Timber Lake, and a lake which is not designated by name. These parties purchased the land which were surveyed bordering upon these streams, improved those lands, and have been in possession for many years of those improved lands.

They have caused a levee district to be organized; they have caused drainage districts to be organized; and paid the taxes on these particular lands in order to develop a value for the lands. Recently an investigation determined that inaccuracies occurred in this original survey, and the riparian owners petitioned the Land Department to make an investigation to ascertain if these titles were actually in the Government. On account of the narrow limit of the unsurveyed lands along these streams the department failed to cause that survey to be made or to take cognizance of this question of title. Now, these parties have their titles clouded by virtue of this situation, and they are asking that the Land Department make the surveys, which they are willing to pay for, to enable them to purchase these lands. That is all there is in the bill. We have the report of the Interior Department recommending the passage of the bill. It is so framed that anyone who may be in possession claiming adverse to these parties seeking a title will be fully protected in this bill.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the reservation.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 1318) granting to certain claimants the preferential right to purchase certain alleged public lands in the State of Arkansas, and for other purposes.

Whereas certain lands in Poinsett County and Mississippi County, in the State of Arkansas, namely, those portions of sections 1, 2, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 14, 15, 16, 18, 21, 22, 27, 28, 33, 34, 35, 36, township 10 north, range 7 east, in Poinsett County, and sections 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, township 10 north, range 8 east, in Mississippi County, Ark., shown in the official surveys as Tyronza River, Dead Timber Lake, and lake on the official plats of these townships, have been, by Executive order, temporarily withdrawn from settlement, location, sale, or entry in order to adjust claims of patentees against the United States and among themselves arising from alleged incomplete or erroneous surveys; and

Whereas the land office, upon investigation, has found that the greater part of these lands in question have been put in cultivation down to the water's edge by parties who thought they had title to them and have been paying taxes on many of these lands, and the land office is now making a resurvey, and will replat these areas at the request of said adjacent landowners: Therefore

Be it enacted, etc., That M. M. Want, as trustee for all these owners of adjacent lands, his heirs, administrators, or assigns, are hereby granted preferential right at any time within 90 days after the passage of this act and the filing of the plats of said corrected survey in the United States land office at Little Rock, Ark., to purchase said lands of the United States of America and to pay for the same at the rate of $1.25 per acre, and said purchase shall be in trust for said adjacent landowners, and that upon the issue of said patents to him, he shall forthwith convey to each of the said adjacent landowners that portion of these lands which may lie adjacent to his lands upon the payment by said party of his proportionate part of said purchase price and entry fees for the same, and in case the lake or river may be the boundary line between two adjacent owners, then, if they have not otherwise agreed upon a line of division, the center of said lake or river shall be the boundary between said adjacent landowners: Provided, That if any person, in good faith, may have located and settled upon any portion of these lands prior to the Executive order withdrawing said lands from such location and settlement, then nothing in this act shall be construed to deprive said party of any rights he may have gained by said location and settlement.

The following committee amendments were severally read and severally agreed to:

Page 2, after the enacting clause, strike out:

"That M. M. Want, as trustee for all these owners of adjacent land, his heirs, administrators, or assigns, are hereby"

And insert:

"That M. M. Want, as trustee for the owners, their heirs, administrators, or assigns, of lands adjacent to those portions of sections 1, 2, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 14, 15, 16, 18, 21, 27, 28, 33, 34, 35, 36, township 10 north, range 7 east, in Poinsett County, and sections 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, township 10 north, range 8 east, in Mississippi County, Ark., shown in the official surveys as Tyronza River, Dead Timber Lake, and lake on the official plats of these townships, which have been, by Executive Order No. 3123, issued on July 19, 1919, temporarily withdrawn from settlement, location, sale, or entry in order to adjust claims of patentees against the United States and among themselves arising from alleged incomplete or erroneous surveys, is hereby"

Page 3, line 5, strike out the word "said" and insert the word "a."

Page 3, line 6, after the word "survey," insert the words "of said lands."

Page 3, line 10, strike out the word "issue" and insert the word "issuance."

Page 3, line 11, strike out the word "him" and insert the words "said trustee."

Page 3, line 12, strike out the word "these" and insert the word "said."

Page 3, line 15, after the word "case," strike out the words: "the lake or" and insert the words "either of said lakes or said."

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

CORTEZ OIL CO.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6525) for the relief of the Cortez Oil Co.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. May we have the bill reported, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the Cortez Oil Co. the sum of $4,229.50 for damages to its barge and launch when they were run into by the steamship Petrel of the United States Navy on the 2d day of May, 1919, while the said launch and barge were secured to the fiscal wharf, Tampico, Mexico.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, I want to ask the gentleman whether or not this bill has been approved by the Secretary of the Navy?

Mr. EDMONDS. The bill has been approved by the Secretary of the Navy for the sum of $3,500.

Mr. BLANTON. And the gentleman is going to offer an amendment to reduce it to $3,500?

Mr. EDMONDS. To reduce it to $3,500 in full settlement.

Mr. MANN. A committee amendment?

Mr. EDMONDS. A committee amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was again reported.

Also the following committee amendment was read:

Line 6, strike out "$4,229.50," and insert in lieu thereof "$3,500, in full settlement."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time and passed.

DELAWARE RIVER LIGHTERING CO.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2049) for the relief of the Delaware River Lightering Co.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. I object.

DR. O. H. TITTMANN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6245) for the relief of Dr. O. H. Tittmann, former superintendent of the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this is a bill which I think is the first one that has ever come within my knowledge to pay a man a civil pension who has never been connected with the Army and Navy service in any way by special act of Congress. I do not see the gentleman in charge of the bill. I think it ought to have some consideration before we enter upon a policy which will probably cost in a few years many millions of dollars, because everybody else will want the same privilege, even though he may not have served 47 years. And for the present I object, having given full chance for some one to rise and express himself.

OVERFLOW LANDS, FORT GEORGE WRIGHT MILITARY RESERVATION.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2861) authorizing the Secretary of War to grant to Lloyd E. Gandy, of Spokane, Wash., his heirs and assigns, the right to overflow certain lands on the Fort George Wright Military Reservation at Spokane, Wash., on such terms as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I object.

W. R. GRACE & CO.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1733) for the relief of W. R. Grace & Co.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, may we have it reported?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to W. R. Grace & Co., of 7 Hanover Square, New York City, the sum of $263.73, the amount which said W. R. Grace & Co. paid as customs duty on 180 bales of caraway seed, which was imported on May 15, 1918, the entry on which was liquidated on August 10, 1918, and which was reported for exportation by the Department of Agriculture on November 13, 1918, after the expiration of the 30-day period provided by law for the filing of protests after liquidation of entry.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, this is a very large concern, W. R. Grace & Co.

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes.

Mr. MANN. It did not comply with the law, but attempted to import a lot of bad seed, rotten seed—not physically rotten, but bad—

Mr. EDMONDS. You mean adulterated?

Mr. MANN. Yes; thoroughly adulterated, and were caught at it. Now, the seed was ordered to be sent out of the country. Are we to pay back the duty?

Mr. EDMONDS. Of course, they suffered from the delay of the Department of Agriculture in investigating the quality of the seed.

Mr. MANN. The department, of course, has the right to investigate the seed at any time. People who bring in seed under a certain name when it is not that kind of seed take great chances. The Government does not require that the Department of Agriculture at the risk of the Government shall make an examination of this seed before entry is closed. It may be that Grace & Co. did not know anything about bad seed being put upon them, but I suspect they knew the price was entirely too low for good seed. This was a lot of bad seed, seed that was worthless.

Mr. EDMONDS. I agree with the gentleman that we should not have bad seed brought into the country, but owing to the way in which this seed is gathered it is almost impossible for the importer to tell whether it is good or bad before it comes.

Mr. MANN. They can usually tell by the price. There have been people in foreign countries for some time past dumping worthless seed into the United States. I helped to frame a law to prevent that to some extent, though not to a sufficient extent yet. This country has become the dumping ground.

Mr. EDMONDS. This seed was not intended for planting. It was used for medicine.

Mr. MANN. Oh, caraway seed is used for lots of things, among other things, for eating. I used to eat it. It is put in cakes, and it is also used for medicine. Here they brought in a lot of adulterated seed, and they paid for adulterated seed.

Mr. EDMONDS. The Treasury Department does not interpose any objection at all to the repayment of these duties, and naturally if the Department of Agriculture took so long to find out whether the seed was good or bad the importer could not be blamed for laxness in his request to obtain a refund of the duty.

Mr. MANN. I suspect that the importer knew all the time that it was bad seed.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Did not the importing company have 30 days in which to file a protest?

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes. But the Department of Agriculture took longer than that.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. But if the law gives them time in which to file a protest, should we permit people who have adequate facilities for handling their business to come in and seek relief for having overlooked something?

Mr. EDMONDS. We have done it before. I do not know that we should do it.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Is this the custom?

Mr. EDMONDS. It is not the custom, but we have done it.

Mr. ARENTZ. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes.

Mr. ARENTZ. Can the gentleman tell me whether cumin seed is the seed with which this caraway seed is adulterated?

Mr. EDMONDS. I do not know as to that. Answering your former question, the Grace Co. does business in two ways, one as an importer and exporter and another as a shipowner.

Mr. ARENTZ. Would they not know in 30 days whether the Government was going to throw that seed back or not? They were great handlers of seed, were they not?

Mr. EDMONDS. Of course, they should; but how could they know until the Government told them?

Mr. ARENTZ. They should have been wise as to that, Cumin seed is not caraway seed.

Mr. EDMONDS. They are not druggists, of course; but they ought to have known something about it. Nevertheless, the thing has happened as they state, and the Treasury Department said it had no objection to refunding the duties.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas objects. The Clerk will report the next bill.

COL. HERBERT DEAKYNE.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1370) for the relief of Col. Herbert Deakyne, Corps of Engineers, United States Army.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the accounting officers of the Treasury are hereby authorized and directed to allow and credit the accounts of Col. Herbert Deakyne, Corps of Engineers, United States Army, the sum of $45.85 disallowed against him on the books of the Treasury.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DUPRE. Mr. Speaker, I move to reconsider the last vote and to lay that motion on the table.

Mr. MANN. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

The Clerk will report the next bill.

RELIEF OF WELCH, FAIRCHILD & CO. (INC.).

The next bill in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2620) for the relief of Welch, Fairchild & Co. (Inc.).

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. HERRICK. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to hear from somebody on the floor as to what this relief is for.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, this bill is for the relief of a concern which was shipping sugar in barges in the Philippine Islands. The United States Tug Wompatuck, in maneuvering, hit the side of the barge and damaged the sugar to the amount of money claimed.

The Navy Department board after investigating the case state that the collision was due to the failure of the reversing engine on their tug to work properly, and they acknowledge that they are responsible for the loss. Therefore, the committee report the bill.

Mr. HERRICK. With that explanation, I shall not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $4,752.63 to Welch, Fairchild & Co. (Inc.), of Manila, Philippine Islands, in satisfaction of all claims arising out of damages sustained on account of loss of cargo of sugar as a result of the sinking of a vessel known as lighter No. 10 caused by collision with the United States Navy tug Wompatuck at Pier No. 1, in the harbor of Manila, Philippine Islands, on May 16, 1918, the responsibility for said collision having been placed by a naval board of investigation on the naval vessel.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

THE WILLIAM GORDON CORPORATION.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1460) for the relief of the William Gordon Corporation.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made. The Clerk will report the next bill.

CAPT. FRED S. JOHNSTON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 927) for the relief of Capt. Fred S. Johnston.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I should like to have the bill reported.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Capt. Fred S. Johnston, supply officer One hundred and eighth Regiment Infantry, United States Army, the sum of $68 in full payment of all claims against the Government for reimbursement on account of newspaper advertisements of proposals for bids for forage supplies for the use of the Third Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, National Guard, United States Army, at Rochester, N. Y., from April 26 to May 8, 1917, said advertisements having been published on the order of said Capt. Fred S. Johnston without specific authority of law or departmental orders.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, what is the justification for this; will it not be establishing a rather unique precedent?

Mr. EDMONDS. The Secretary of War recommends the payment of this bill. It appears that this man used his personal funds to advertise for forage. The advertisements were published in two newspapers as required by the regulations of the department; but because he had not been officially authorized to have the advertisements published, the department refused to pay the bill. It seems that Capt. Johnston tried to follow the law. He had to have the forage for his horses, and he paid out the money for the advertisement. After that, when he looked to the department and could not get his money, he had no other redress except to come to Congress for it.

Mr. WALSH. How much is involved?

Mr. EDMONDS. Sixty-eight dollars.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object—and probably I shall not object—if the Government owes a man 5 cents I am quite willing to pay it to him if it costs the Government $5,000 to pay it. Where a man is not legally entitled to the money and then wants to put the Government to the expense of $200 or $300 in order to get 5 cents, I think there is a good deal of gall about it. A moment ago we passed a bill to pay an officer $45. I think the introduction, printing, and reference of that bill cost a good deal more than the total amount covered by the bill.

Mr. EDMONDS. It costs about $30, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. For printing once, twice, or three times? Before a bill becomes a law it is printed seven times.

Mr. EDMONDS. That covers the printing of one of these bills through to the passage.

Mr. MANN. Up to the engrossment and everything else?

Mr. EDMONDS. I am not so sure about the engrossment.

Mr. MANN. And the time it takes besides. It is perfectly manifest that it costs the Government a good deal more to provide for the payment than the payment itself amounts to. I think it would be a very good thing—I am expressing only a casual, individual opinion—if the committee would just say they would not report little bits of bills like this one, so that Members will quit introducing them. I shall not object to this.

Mr. EDMONDS. I should like to say in answer to the gentleman from Illinois that the committee has under consideration and is ready to report a bill which will cover a great many of these small cases, so that they will not have to be brought into the House of Representatives. If that bill should pass, we would be relieved of the necessity of looking out for these claims for 5 cents and 50 cents and a dollar.

Mr. MANN. I think that would be a very wise thing to do.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was again read.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield me five minutes?

Mr. EDMONDS. I yield to the gentleman from Texas five minutes.

Mr. MANN. We can not yield time. The gentleman can take time.

Mr. BLANTON. I do not expect to use over five minutes.

Mr. MANN. All right.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, this bill involves $68 for a printing account. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] mentioned that in some bills the printing costs more than the claim, because we have to print the bills four or five times. I just want to call the attention of the gentleman from Illinois, who watches almost everything, to something that would be embarrassing for him to mention, so I mention it, that the number of times a bill is printed depends entirely, so far as one printing is concerned, upon who is the chairman and whose bill it is and who calls it up and the temper of the Members present when it is under consideration. Take, for instance, the bill from the Naval Affairs Committee that our friend, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] called up yesterday. When he asked unanimous consent that its first reading be dispensed with the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] objected, and caused that bill to be read.

I think there were 11 or 12 pages, and it went into the RECORD, which is the rule. It ought to go into the RECORD when its first reading is demanded. The gentleman from Massachusetts had a good reason for demanding its first reading. It was because most of the Members did not know anything about it and he wanted them to be familiar with its terms. But when we had the 346-page technical tariff bill up here the chairman of the committee in charge of that bill did not ask that the first reading be dispensed with, which is the general rule and custom, and no other member of the Ways and Means Committee asked that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

And why? Because it is necessary to read a bill once in the House before it can be passed, and the leaders of the majority had determined that the bill was not going to be read under the 5-minute rule for amendment. It had to be read once, and so they decided to waste six hours of the time of the House in the useless first reading of the bill with nobody here to hear it and with many technical names that would break a man's jawbone, except that of our expert reading clerk, and we did spend six hours in reading it. And then, the next day, our distinguished minority leader got up and called attention to the fact that the bill had not been printed in the RECORD, as is the usual custom, and the Chairman ruled that it was not necessary to put the bill in the RECORD, that it was not the custom, when as a matter of fact it is the custom. The reason they did not print that bill in the RECORD, printing 346 pages of the bill under these circumstances, was that the leaders knew it was a waste of time to read it, and they knew that if they went to the expense of printing this 346-page bill in the RECORD they would be made ridiculous from one side of the United States to the other. Therefore, the strong arm of force was used to keep the bill from being printed in the RECORD, according to the rule and custom.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman from Texas manifested more interest in the details of the bill, the commas, and so forth, than anyone else.

Mr. BLANTON. I followed the example and custom set by the distinguished gentleman from Ohio, who I regret will likely perform his labors in another part of the Capitol after next election. I followed his example, and when his leaders did not ask that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with, I, as an humble Member of the minority side, arose and asked that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with to save six hours from being wasted, and to save the expense of printing the 346 pages in the RECORD, and it was the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. LONGWORTH, who got up and objected and required that 346-page bill to be read in extenso.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I was complimenting the gentleman for the intense interest he displayed in the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. In order to reward the gentleman, if he can keep the distinguished educator, Dr. Fess, of Ohio, out of the way, his Ohio people will likely compensate him by sending him to the Senate.

Mr. WALSH. Did not the gentleman from Texas delay proceedings somewhat by making points of no quorum?

Mr. BLANTON. No. I wanted to force some members to stay in the Chamber and hear the bill read. I afterwards withdrew the objections to the Clerk skipping pages and let the Clerk finish it within the six hours by allowing him to read the bill scientifically.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, in passing, I am not sure that the country will feel that it was worth while to use six hours of the time of the House to know that the gentleman from Texas had read the tariff bill, but we of the House know that he did read the tariff bill, and that undoubtedly he never would have read it and would not have known what was in the tariff bill if it had not been read from the desk.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman does not want to do me an injustice. He ought to know that I read all bills that pass here.

Mr. MANN. I am not doing the gentleman an injustice; I am stating facts, and undoubtedly he never would have read the tariff bill if he had not closely followed the reading by the Clerk. He was absorbed in the tariff bill, and just think what a tremendous loss it would have been to the country had the tariff bill passed and the gentleman from Texas not having read it. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from Illinois is mistaken this time, because I had read that 346-page bill, and studied all of it carefully.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MAPES). The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

LEROY FISHER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1862) for the relief of Leroy Fisher.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Leroy Fisher the sum of $1,500 for expenses incurred as a result of injuries sustained through being hit by an autotruck, the property of the United States Post Office Department and driven recklessly by an employee of the United States.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

ESTELLA BARNETT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3270) for the relief of Estella Barnett.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay the sum of $12,500 to Mrs. Estella Barnett, of Toledo, Ohio, in compensation for injuries sustained April 24, 1920, in the city of Cleveland, Ohio, when struck by a United States Government mail truck.

With the following committee amendment:

In line 4, page 1, strike out the figures 12,500 and insert 1,250.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, is there any contest over the amount?

Mr. EDMONDS. There is no contest.

Mr. CHALMERS. We have decided to accept the amount, as we can not get any more. It ought to be more; the woman is crippled for life.

Mr. MANN. I wanted to know whether the gentleman is going to argue in the House that she was entitled to more.

Mr. CHALMERS. No.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 4, after the word "pay," add a comma and the following words: "out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE VAN DERBURGH BROWN.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3057) for the relief of George Van Derburgh Brown.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. MANN. Let the bill be reported.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to George Van Derburgh Brown, of Brookline, Mass., whose wife was killed and he was severely injured by being struck by a mail truck in use in the Boston postal district and operated by the Post Office Department, as a result of gross negligence on the part of the driver, on the night of Sunday, January 2, 1921, the sum of $12,000 from any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

With the following committee amendment:

Line 10, strike out "$12,000" and insert "$5,000,"

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I call the attention of the chairman to the fact that until about two or three years ago the United States Government was not held liable or responsible for torts committed by its employees. That is still the law of the land. You can not go into court and recover against the Government by reason of a tortious action of Government employees. But our Committee on Claims about two or three years ago brought in a bill here and set a precedent for all of these cases that have come here since that time. It is a precedent that discriminates in favor of the few and against the many. I call the gentleman's attention to the number of cases, for instance, not in my district but in the Houston, Tex., district, where a whole regiment of riotous Negro soldiers went down the streets of Houston with their guns drawn and bayonets set and jambed the bayonets through the stomachs of young girls and killed helpless men and women and little children, shooting them in cold blood. Those cases have been pending before the gentleman's committee since that occurred during the recent war, and not a single one of them has been passed, not a single one has been brought on this floor. There is a discrimination in favor of certain people who have suffered loss and against others.

Mr. EDMONDS. As far as I know there has never been before the Committee on Claims any claim in regard to payment to people of Houston, Tex., because of the action of the military authorities there.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, the gentleman will surely remember that he was on the committee when those cases were called up, and he will remember that the claimants asked for only certain amounts, and that the committee in the Sixty-fifth or Sixty-sixth Congress increased on its own motion every one of the claims. The committee felt outraged at the evidence in those cases and the committee on its own motion, without being requested by the Congressman interested, increased every one of those claims. Yet they have not been brought up.

Mr. EDMONDS. They are not in this session that I know of. Now that the gentleman calls the matter to my attention, I recall the fact that we did have the cases up. I do not believe it is fair and just for the United States Government to evade the payment of just damages. It is quite true that a general law passed by the Congress for the payment of damages on account of tort would perhaps lead to a great many claims and probably outrageous settlements being made by juries.

Mr. BLANTON. Does not the gentleman believe in having a policy that is general, applicable alike to all citizens?

Mr. EDMONDS. I believe that the United States Government where it does personal and property damage through one of its agents should be liable to fair and just compensation to the person injured.

Mr. BLANTON. Take the San Antonio cases.

Mr. EDMONDS. The gentleman knows that I have always, since I have been on the committee, thought it is only fair and just that the things that are due from one citizen to another which raise liability in the courts, should have the same attention where the United States Government is concerned.

Mr. BLANTON. And yet since the gentleman has been on that committee, before he became its chairman, he will remember the two San Antonio cases where the two old ladies were run over by a Government truck, through action that was grossly negligent.

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes; and it was the gentleman from Pennsylvania who reported the bills favorably.

Mr. BLANTON. Yet those bills have never been passed up to this good time, although they have been pending for about 12 years.

Mr. EDMONDS. They do not pend, because Members do not reintroduce the bills. The bill for the two old ladies in San Antonio was reported favorably by myself, but it was defeated on the floor of the House.

Mr. BLANTON. And that was because of the very law that I have mentioned—that the Government should not be held responsible for the careless acts of its employees, because it might open a wide field for fraud.

Mr. EDMONDS. And fraud can be kept down by making it troublesome to get claims through.

Mr. BLANTON. But the trouble is that you make fish of one and fowl of another.

Mr. EDMONDS. I do not think the gentleman can say that of the present committee nor of the committee in the last Congress.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Can not the gentleman state that there is a great difference between the case at bar and the case at Houston? While I am in sympathy with the gentleman from Texas in his efforts to get attention for these people, yet, as far as I know, in all cases like this the Government is not held responsible except where the agent or the employee was acting within the scope of his employment. In the present case the gentleman shows that the agent was carrying the mail, and he was acting within the scope of his employment, but when the negroes killed the white people they were not acting within the scope of their employment.

Mr. EDMONDS. In the case of the two ladies injured in San Antonio the man was acting within the scope of his employment, and I reported the bill favorably.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what hearings did the committee conduct in order to ascertain the amount of $12,000 damages?

Mr. EDMONDS. We have amended that to $5,000. There was no necessity for any hearings. The department acknowledged it.

Mr. MILLER. Did the committee have the statement of the driver?

Mr. EDMONDS. We had the statement of the department, together with the fact that the man was arrested and sent to jail. There is absolutely no necessity of any other statement, because all of the facts are acknowledged. There is no question of an investigation being necessary. The witnesses acknowledged these facts under oath. We endeavored in every way to bring the facts to the attention of the committee so that we could act intelligently, and we did act intelligently, because there was no objection.

Mr. MILLER. This man was at the time driving a mail truck laden with mail?

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes.

Mr. MILLER. And ran over these people?

Mr. EDMONDS. And ran over these people.

Mr. MILLER. Well, now, what is there in the record to show these people were not guilty of contributory negligence?

Mr. EDMONDS. The department acknowledged it. This man was arrested and sent to jail for criminal driving.

Mr. MILLER. That does not account for anything. What I am getting at is, have the gentleman's committee any further facts except a little report of the Post Office Department?

Mr. EDMONDS. We have a big one covering three or four pages.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, does the gentleman now state, as far as he is concerned as chairman of this important committee, that whenever cases are presented for consideration which show that agents or officers of the United States Government, acting within the scope of their authority, are negligent or careless and somebody is injured as a result that the Government shall pay for whatever damage is caused?

Mr. EDMONDS. No; I do not think the Government should pay whatever damage is caused, but it has been our action this year and last year to pay a fair recompense to the man.

Mr. WALSH. If that is the attitude of the chairman and we are going to embark upon that we are not going to pass any bills by unanimous consent. I object to this bill.

PENSIONS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7340) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is this an omnibus pension bill?

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes.

Mr. RICKETTS. It has been on the calendar since June 29.

Mr. WALSH. Have not we passed a pension bill since then?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, this bill has a privilege of its own—

Mr. WALSH. Not to-day.

Mr. BLANTON. But on other days; therefore I do not think we ought to take it up to the exclusion of the other business on this day, and I object.

RELIEF OF STEVENS INSTITUTE OF TECHNOLOGY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 52) for the relief of the Stevens Institute of Technology, of Hoboken, N. J.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. JACOWAY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to propound an inquiry in regard to bills before the Committee on Claims. Before war was declared a contractor for screen wagon service in the city of Little Rock, Ark., in the person of Mr. H. L. McFarlin, entered into a contract with the Federal Government to carry the mail at that time, not anticipating war. War came, and his duties were trebled and quadrupled. The price of gasoline, oil, and labor, all of those things which entered into the carrying out of that contract, went sky high. Mr. McFarlin, the contractor, was compelled to discharge more duties and to meet a multiplicity of expenses, not dreamed of by him, and not anticipated by the Government. It will only be simple justice to reimburse Mr. McFarlin for those losses he was called upon to meet through no fault of his. Now, I have a bill before the gentleman's committee and I would like the gentleman to state what is the attitude of the committee in regard to bills of that character.

Mr. EDMONDS. The gentleman knows we reported a bill favorably for the time and period of the war.

Mr. JACOWAY. That was for last session.

Mr. EDMONDS. And it was on the calendar. I presume the subcommittee in charge of that will report it the same way this year. The matter is before them and it is absolutely necessary for them to make a report under the rule to the general committee.

Mr. JACOWAY. How long before the subcommittee, in the judgment of the chairman of the committee, will make that report?

Mr. EDMONDS. That would be impossible for me to say, but I hope they will make a report soon.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I ask to have the bill reported, but I am going to object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MAPES). The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay to the trustees of the Stevens Institute of Technology, of Hoboken, N. J., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $45,750, being the sum paid to the United States January 28, 1879, as a collateral inheritance tax upon the bequest which provided for the establishment and endowment of said institute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I think it will probably take a little time—how much time did we take before?

Mr. LEHLBACH. It went through the last session under suspension of the rules by a vote of the House on roll call.

Mr. MANN. Well, that would be a good way to pass it again, and I object. The lobby for this bill has been one of the finest I have ever known in my experience in the House.

MAJ. FRANCIS M. MADDOX.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6407) for the relief of Maj. Francis M. Maddox, United States Army.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. WALSH. I ask to have the bill reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to credit the accounts of Maj. Louis C. Wilson, Quartermaster Corps, United States Army, the sum of $1,989.14, to be paid Maj. Francis M. Maddox, Fourth Regiment Alabama National Guard, for pay, commutation of quarters, light, heat, and longevity pay, and for services rendered while detailed for duty as assistant to the Chief of the Militia Bureau, War Department, Washington, D. C., from June 4, 1920, to September 30, 1920, inclusive.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was read for amendment.

The committee amendment was read as follows: Page 1, line 6, strike out "$1,989.14" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,875.14."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

OWNERS OF THE DREDGE "MARYLAND."

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1942) for the relief of the owners of the dredge Maryland.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 1942) for the relief of the owners of the dredge Maryland. Be it enacted, etc., That the claim of John Emile, of Duval County, Fla., and Peoples Bank of Mobile, a corporation under the laws of the State of Alabama, owners of the dredge Maryland, against the United States for damages alleged to have been caused by a collision between said dredge and the United States steamship O-4 in the Cooper River at Charleston, S. C., may be sued for by said owners against the United States in the district court of the United States for the southern district of Florida, sitting as a court of admiralty; and said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine such suit and to enter a judgment or decree therein for the amount of lawful damages sustained by reason of said collision, if any shall be found to be due either for or against the United States, upon the principles and measures of liability and damage, with costs, as in like cases in admiralty between private parties, with the same right of appeal.

Sec. 2. That should damages be found to be due from the United States to the owners of said dredge Maryland, the amount due under the final judgment or decree therefor shall be paid out of any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Sec. 3. That such notice of the suit shall be given to the Attorney General of the United States as may be required by order of said court, and it shall be the duty of the Attorney General to cause the United States attorney in said district to appear and defend for the United States: Provided, That said suit shall be commenced within six months of the date of the passage of this act.

Also the following committee amendment was read:

Strike out all after the enacting clause on page 1, line 3, down to and including line 18 on page 2, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "That the claim of the Peoples Bank of Mobile, a corporation under the laws of the State of Alabama, owner of the dredge Maryland, against the United States for damages alleged to have been caused by a collision between said dredge and the United States steamship O-4, in the Cooper River at Charleston, S. C., on the 10th day of February, 1919, may be sued for by the said Peoples Bank of Mobile in the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of Florida, sitting as a court of admiralty and acting under the rules governing such court, and said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine such suit and to enter a judgment or decree for the amount of such damages and costs, if any, as shall be found to be due against the United States in favor of the Peoples Bank of Mobile or against the Peoples Bank of Mobile in favor of the United States upon the same principles and measures of liability as in like cases in admiralty between private parties and with the same rights of appeal: Provided, That such notice of the suit shall be given to the Attorney General of the United States as may be provided by order of the said court, and it shall be the duty of the Attorney General to cause the United States attorney in such district to appear and defend for the United States: Provided further, That said suit shall be brought and commenced within four months of the date of the passage of this act."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Speaker, I notice the committee has amended the bill as introduced by myself. For information, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee a question.

I was delayed in returning to Washington on account of sickness, and I have not had an opportunity to go over the contract, which I understand was sent to the committee by my secretary. Under this amendment of the committee if it should develop that John Emile has an equity in this dredge, would this amendment permit him to receive that equity, or would the Court of Claims only give to the Peoples Bank of Mobile the amount due them?

Mr. EDMONDS. The information given to the committee is that the Peoples Bank of Mobile still owns the ship. They had a contract of sale to John Emile, but the ownership being in the Bank of Mobile, I presume he would have to look to them for reimbursement of his interests.

Mr. SEARS. And under this amendment John Emile would not be estopped from getting his right?

Mr. EDMONDS. That is our understanding.

Mr. SEARS. And the Court of Claims could only adjudicate the matter as to the amount claimed by the People's Bank?

Mr. EDMONDS. That is right. The registry of the ship is in the Mobile bank, because John Emile had not completed his purchase of it. I have no doubt the equity can be arranged between the two, because he was paying for the ship.

Mr. SEARS. Then under the circumstances I shall not offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

CHICAGO, MILWAUKEE & ST. PAUL RAILWAY CO. ET AL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6250) for the relief of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway Co.; the Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis & Omaha Railway Co.; and the St. Louis, Iron Mountain & Southern Railway Co.

Mr. HERRICK. Mr. Speaker, I am going to object to that bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

OWNERS OF BRITISH STEAMSHIP "CLEARPOOL."

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6628) for the relief of the owners of the British steamship Clearpool.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. HERRICK. I object.

EDWARD J. SCHAEFER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1723) authorizing the payment of compensation to Edward J. Schaefer for the death of Ruth Stone Schaefer through an unlawful shot fired by a soldier in the service of the United States at Camp Alexander, Va.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to make some inquiry about and some observations on this bill. This bill, as I understand, was introduced in the House for $50,000?

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes, sir.

Mr. MILLER. Does not the gentleman think it is an extraordinary proceeding to ask for $50,000 for an accidental shot by a soldier?

Mr. EDMONDS. The committee thought so, and we cut it down to $5,000.

Mr. MILLER. On what theory of law or morals or anything else is the United States responsible for the accidental act of a soldier of the United States Army?

Mr. EDMONDS. The only thing I can say is this: That Mr. Schaefer was driving with his wife upon a road through a military camp. The road was open and used by the public. The soldier contends he had orders from some officer, a corporal or sergeant, to stop anybody going through. Mr. Schaefer went through, having passed through a number of times. The man contends he called to Mr. Schaefer and Mr. Schaefer contends he did not hear him. He fired at the tire and hit the woman and killed her.

Mr. MILLER. A very distressing accident, but that does not answer my question. On what theory of law or morals is the United States responsible for the killing of a person by the accidental act of a soldier?

Mr. EDMONDS. Well, it is simply one of those torts—

Mr. MILLER. It is not a tort, because the bill says it was an accident.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman permit? The chairman should also state that at the entrance of this military camp, where Mr. Schaefer entered, there was a sign up showing that it was a Government reservation. The fact is that Mr. Schaefer knew when he entered there that it was a military camp of this Government, and that it was subject to military orders and military policing, and so forth.

Mr. MILLER. And, further than that, the record shows that the soldier was court-martialed and acquitted. Now, under that condition, distressing as this incident may be, I shall object to any claims of this character.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Washington objects. The Clerk will report the next bill.

VIRGIL O. McWHORTER.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1948) for the relief of Virgil O. McWhorter.

The title of the bill was read.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the bill be reported.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill. The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the city of West Point, in the State of Georgia, be, and hereby is, relieved of any liability to and from paying any amount to the Government of the United States, or any department thereof, on account of the transportation, construction, and maintenance of a pontoon bridge across the Chattahoochee River at West Point, Ga., constructed and maintained under Public Resolution No. 25, Sixty-sixth Congress, and from paying the Government for any damage to or loss of any part of the material used in said bridge.

With committee amendments, as follows:

Page 1, line 6, strike out the word "transportation." In line 7, strike out the comma after the word "construction." On page 2, after the word "bridge," on line 1, insert: "Provided, That the transportation of personnel, material of first and second bridge, and inspection by officers, all amounting to $2,705.77, shall be paid by said city of West Point, and also transportation charges of bridge material, now on hand, from West Point, Ga., to the point where the Secretary of War may direct said material to be shipped, but not for a greater distance or expense than that from the point which said material was shipped to said West Point, Ga."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the first committee amendment.

Page 1, line 6, strike out the word "transportation."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Page 1, line 7, after the word "construction" strike out the comma.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I move to reconsider the last vote and to lay that motion on the table.

Mr. MANN. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

EPHRAIM LEDERER.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5249) for the relief of Ephraim Lederer, collector of internal revenue for the first district of Pennsylvania.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to credit the account of Ephraim Lederer, collector of internal revenue for the first district of Pennsylvania, by reason of shortage of 100 sheets of class C cigar stamps, each set consisting of 20 stamps, each of said stamps being worth 45 cents, a total of $900. Also for the loss of a book of wholesale liquor dealers' special tax stamps, consisting of 10 stamps, each of the value of $100, and totaling $1,000.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to learn something about this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question was put, and no objection was made by the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. MILLER. I would like to get some information. I move to strike out the last word.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Washington moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. MILLER. Can the gentleman from Pennsylvania give me some information?

Mr. EDMONDS. During the expansion required by war activities at the office of the collector of internal revenue at Philadelphia in order to perform their duties they were required to rent a number of different places and to move certain offices and materials to those places. During the process of removal these stamps were lost. The collector is now endeavoring to recover. The custom is for Congress to clear up these accounts when it is shown there is no negligence.

Mr. MILLER. Was the officer around when this moving was going on, or was he somewhere else?

Mr. EDMONDS. The gentleman must understand that the collector had a great deal of work to supervise, and he was not personally present at the time of this loss.

Mr. MILLER. Did he have an official there to look after the property of the Government?

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes. The stamps were lost in the removal of certain effects connected with the office from the Federal building at Ninth and Chestnut Streets to the building at Tenth and Market Streets.

Mr. MILLER. Were they stolen, or was it just the result of a negligent act?

Mr. EDMONDS. They are under the impression that they were dumped somehow into a waste-paper basket.

Mr. MILLER. That is a sorrowful reflection.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDMONDS. Certainly.

Mr. BLANTON. The very same thing as that occurred in the Kerrville bank case, which involved a very small amount comparatively, which the House passed because of its friendship for my good friend from west Texas (Mr. HUDSPETH), who introduced the bill.

The bill went to the President, and even though it involved a very insignificant amount the President of the United States sent it back here to Congress without his signature, vetoed, upon the ground that it established a bad precedent for the United States Government to make good such a loss.

Mr. EDMONDS. That may be true.

Mr. BLANTON. And that bill has slumbered with the committee to which it was referred ever since that veto message. No committee has ever brought it back for attention again.

Mr. MANN. That was a loss in transportation by mail, unregistered.

Mr. BLANTON. It was stolen, but it was a better case than the present case, where the collector of internal revenue was in charge of certain stamps, and when he removed his office from one place to another he did not see to it that the stamps were moved in safety; a case where he had $100 stamps, and yet they got away from him, and no excuse was ever offered for it.

Mr. EDMONDS. I understand these stamps have never turned up, and I also understand that in order to be of any use to anyone they would have to be stamped in some way to show that they had been issued. They had not been so stamped. It was simply a loss of the material.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I did not object to the consideration of this bill, because I thought it was a question on which the House ought to pass, and that the House either ought to uphold the action of the President or ought to turn him down, and they ought to let the country know what the policy of Congress is on this question. This is the first chance for the House to pass on the question, and I think we ought to let the country know by a vote on this bill whether the House is going to sustain the Executive action in holding that it sets a bad precedent for the Congress to pay these losses. So, as I say, I did not object, because I wanted to see the House vote on it.

Mr. EDMONDS. The gentleman must remember that the collector of internal revenue at Philadelphia has handled not thousands but millions of dollars. It is necessary for him to handle these different stamps through different agencies. The additional work occasioned by the war contracted his quarters to such an extent that the people were crowded in there so they could hardly move. They were then housed in a number of different offices. Their activities were removed to a number of different places. They were evidently doing the best they knew how, and I doubt very much—I am speaking now for the Democratic collector of internal revenue up there—whether there has ever been any time in the history of this country when the collectors of internal revenue were so put to it with a shortage of help and so many new things coming in, that it was impossible to keep track of everything that was going on.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman mentions the fact that this man was a Democratic officeholder. I want to call his attention to the fact that this Democratic officeholder did not get any reimbursement for the loss of these stamps under any Democratic administration, and if he gets payment for it, if he gets an allowance to-day it is going to be through the action of a Republican Congress and the approval of a Republican Executive, who will be responsible to the country.

Mr. EDMONDS. I think the Republican administration is perfectly able and willing to assume responsibility in this matter.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of asking whether there is any way of checking up so as to determine whether these stamps were stolen and used.

Mr. EDMONDS. The collector of internal revenue told me that there was a way of checking up, and that none of these stamps had turned up. Of course, I do not vouch for that, because I am not conversant with the system used in the Internal Revenue Department, but he told me these stamps had to have some kind of stamp on them when they went out, and that they had to be countersigned in some way which rendered it impossible for them to be improperly used.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. If these stamps at the time they disappeared were not in shape to be used, then the only loss is the loss of the paper on which they were printed?

Mr. EDMONDS. That is my understanding.

Mr. MANN. Here is the report of the Secretary of the Treasury with reference to these particular stamps, of which there are two kinds, that they—did not bear the stamp of the first district of Pennsylvania nor did they bear the facsimile signature of the collector. Without the signature of the collector these special-tax stamps would be of no value to anyone.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman has good judgment and wide experience in such matters, and so he knows that the facsimile signature and the particular stamp to which he refers were kept in the office and used mostly by subs in that office in putting these stamps into circulation, and that a sub in that office who would steal these stamps—it is to be presumed they were stolen or they would not have been missing—could have used this special stamp and this facsimile signature at the same time he stole the stamps, because if he had not affixed those things so that the stamps would be worth something to him, he would not have wanted to take them in the first place.

Mr. MANN. If somebody stole them, I imagine very likely what the gentleman says took place, but I suggest that they probably were not stolen, but just disappeared, as papers sometimes do.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The question being taken, the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. BLANTON. I ask for a division.

The House divided, and there were—ayes 43, noes 1.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote because it shows that no quorum is present, and I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count.

Mr. MONDELL. Does the gentleman from Texas insist on his point of order?

Mr. BLANTON. I think this is a very important matter. The President has sent back here without his signature a bill that involves the same principle. He had vetoed that bill.

Mr. MONDELL. That was a very different bill.

Mr. BLANTON. It involves the same policy of the Government, and this bill ought not to pass unless we have the balance of our membership here.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman withhold his point long enough to allow the submission of a report from the Committee on Enrolled Bills?

Mr. BLANTON. I withhold the point of order temporarily.

Amendment numbered 55: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 55, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"That for the purposes of this section every such officer, enlisted man, or other member employed in the active service under the War Department or Navy Department who was discharged or who resigned prior to the date of approval of this amendatory act, and every such officer, enlisted man, or other member employed in the active service under the War Department or Navy Department on or before November 11, 1918, who hereafter is discharged or resigns, shall be held and taken to have been in sound condition when examined, accepted, and enrolled for service, except as to defects, disorders, or infirmities, made of record in any manner by proper authorities of the United States at the time of, or prior to, inception of active service, to the extent to which any such defect, disorder, or infirmity was so made of record: Provided further, That an ex-service man who is shown to have an active pulmonary tuberculosis or neuropsychiatric disease (of more than 10 per cent degree of disability in accordance with the provisions of subdivision (2) of section 302 of the war risk insurance act, as amended) developing within two years after separation from the active military or naval service of the United States shall be considered to have acquired his disability in such service, or to have suffered an aggravation of a pre-existing pulmonary tuberculosis or neuropsychiatric disease in such service, but nothing in this proviso shall be construed to prevent a claimant from receiving the benefits of compensation and medical care and treatment for a disability due to these diseases of more than 10 per cent degree (in accordance with the provisions of subdivision (2) of section 302 of the war risk insurance act, as amended) at a date more than two years after separation from such service, if the facts of the case substantiate his claim. This section shall be deemed to be in effect as of April 6, 1917."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 67: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 67, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 406. Whenever benefits under United States Government life insurance (converted insurance) become or have become payable because of total permanent disability of the insured or because of the death of the insured as a result of disease or injury traceable to the extra hazard of the military or naval service as such hazard may be determined by the director, the liability shall be borne by the United States, and the director is hereby authorized and directed to transfer from the military and naval insurance appropriation to the United States Government life insurance fund a sum which, together with the reserve of the policy at the time of maturity by total permanent disability or death, will equal the then value of such benefits. When a person receiving total permanent disability benefits under a United States Government life policy (converted policy) recovers from such disability and is then entitled to continue a reduced amount of insurance, the director is hereby authorized and directed to transfer to the military and naval insurance appropriation all of the loss reserve to the credit of such policy claim except a sum sufficient to set up the then required reserve on the reduced amount of insurance that may be continued, which sum shall be retained in the United States Government life insurance fund for the purpose of such reserve."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 83: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 83, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following on page 18, after line 10, of the bill:

"SEC. 22. A new section is hereby added to Article III of the war risk insurance act to be known as section 315, and to read as follows:

"SEC. 315. That no person admitted into the military or naval forces of the United States after six months from the passage of this amendatory act shall be entitled to the compensation or any other benefits or privileges provided under the provisions of Article III of the war risk insurance act, as amended."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the title of the bill and agree to the same.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah asks unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the conference report. Is there objection?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I certainly shall not object unless the conference report is going to provoke discussion. If it can be adopted without discussion, I shall be very glad to withhold any objection.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Wisconsin to permit me or the Senator from Utah [Mr. Smoot] to state briefly the differences between this bill and the present law. I have prepared, at the request of several Senators, a statement in tabloid form of the principal differences and changes that will be made by the enactment of this bill into law. So many Senators will receive inquiries from incapacitated soldiers as to what change is made in the present law that several Senators felt it would be helpful to them to have the measure explained. It will take only about 10 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I had the same thing in mind, but perhaps not in as concise a form as the Senator from Massachusetts has it. If the Senator from Wisconsin has no objection, I will ask the Senator from Massachusetts to make the statement, because it is very brief and will take a very few moments.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield for that purpose, if I am recognized.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There being no objection, the question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, there are 12 important changes in the present law caring for and hospitalizing incapacitated ex-service men which will be made by the pending bill, H. R. 6611. As I stated, I have prepared those changes in tabloid form, so that if any inquiries are made of Senators they will be able to state the changes concisely.

The bill refers so much to the existing law—the war risk insurance act—and amends so many of its sections that the exact changes are not observable from a reading of the bill without referring to existing statutes, which would necessitate a great amount of time. Senators are certain to receive many inquiries as to the changes made by the Sweet bill (H. R. 6611), and I believe it will be of some assistance to have the changes effected by this bill briefly stated.

The 12 principal features of this bill (H. R. 6611) which we are about to enact into law are as follows:

REORGANIZATION.

1. Under the present law the administration of Government insurance and all compensation claims is performed by the Bureau of War Risk Insurance; the hospitalization, medical care, and treatment by the United States Public Health Service; and the vocational training of incapacitated soldiers by the Federal Board for Vocational Education.

The Sweet bill (H. R. 6611) consolidates and centralizes all of these bureaus by creating an independent organization into which they merge, to be known as the veterans' bureau. The provision of the bill as agreed to in conference places this bureau under the jurisdiction of the President.

HOSPITALIZATION AND MEDICAL TREATMENT.

2. The present law limits the medical care and treatment of incapacitated veterans to those suffering with a service disease or injury of 10 per cent or more. H. R. 6611 extends medical care and treatment to all service men suffering with disease or injury of service origin or aggravation of less than 10 per cent.

Many dental, eye, ear, nose, and throat cases, where the disability is less than 10 per cent, may be cared for under the law we are about to enact.

There is a limitation, however, to the provisions of this law, namely, that the application for treatment must be made within one year from the passage of the act. Of course, the time of treatment may extend over the period of one year from the date it is granted.

COMPENSATION.

3. The rate and amount of compensation provided by existing law is in no way affected by H. R. 6611. The law remains the same in providing that compensation shall not be paid to any incapacitated veteran unless the disability is at least 10 per cent.

Under section 16 a small class of military and naval recruits will become eligible for compensation; this class is made up of those who were accepted for service and died or were injured en route to their station or post before their enlistment was completed.

INSURANCE.

4. The rights of ex-service men to war risk insurance are increased by House bill 6611 in three important respects.

A. Section 27 provides that men suffering with disability of service origin may reinstate their lapsed insurance by the payment of all back premiums, providing they are not permanently and totally disabled.

Under the present law and the rules and regulations of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance no insurance policy can be reinstated unless it is proved that the insured is in good physical condition at the time of reinstatement. This has resulted in thousands of men being denied insurance after their insurance had lapsed by reason of their failure to pay premiums when due and the development of tubercular and other diseases. Section 27 is, therefore, one of the most generous features of the whole bill. This amounts to an admission by our Government to ex-service men that we are willing to assume the risk in cases where insurance policies have lapsed of cases which a private insurance company would reject.

Insurance policies hitherto deemed to have lapsed for non-payment of premiums and upon which payment of benefits to the designated beneficiaries has hitherto been refused are validated by the bill in cases where a soldier died from wounds or a disease contracted in line of service, who was entitled at the time of permitting his insurance to lapse to compensation from the Government for his injury or disease in an amount sufficient to pay the premiums and who had not actually received such compensation or claimed it.

B. Section 30 renders all Government life insurance policies incontestable six months after date of issuance or date of reinstatement and applies to policies issued and reinstated in the past as well as to policies in the future. This provision will permit the payment of many policies hitherto rejected by the bureau and will correct the situation brought about by a ruling of the Attorney General that the incontestable clause in the converted insurance policy was practically meaningless on the theory that no administrative official could waive the defenses of the Government on a contract.

C. Section 28 provides that premiums may be waived and insurance may not be deemed to lapse in the case of persons confined in hospitals or those rated temporarily and totally disabled. This will prevent the lapse of any policy when a veteran is in the hospital and short of funds.

NO CHANGE IN VOCATIONAL TRAINING LAWS.

5. There is no clause whatsoever in House bill 6611 affecting the vocational training of disabled service men.

TIME FOR CLAIMING DISABILITY EXTENDED.

6. Under the present law if a person had a disease or injury which does not cause an actual disability within one year after discharge, it is necessary for the ex-service man to have a surgeon's certificate of disability, certifying to the fact that he has a disease or injury which may at a future date cause a real disability. Healed wounds are the most largely represented class of cases. The present law provides that application for this certificate must be made within one year after discharge. Inasmuch as over a year has already elapsed in most cases and inasmuch as a great many ex-service men have failed to apply for a certificate of disability, section 21 of House bill 6611 extends the time for filing a claim for surgeon's certificate of disability to one year after the passage of this amendatory act or one year after discharge, whichever is the later date.

AUTHORITY TO REVIEW AWARDS.

7. Section 19 amends the present law and vests the veterans' bureau with authority on its own motion to review any award of compensation and diminish or increase the degree of compensation previously granted. It also permits the rating and granting of compensation from the date the disability began.

SERVICE DISEASE PRESUMED IN CERTAIN CASES.

8. The amendment proposed by me when the bill was under discussion in the Senate and added to the Senate bill and agreed upon in conference will further extend the benefits of the present law by relieving applicants for compensation suffering with tubercular and neuropsychiatric diseases developing within two years from the necessity of proving that said diseases were contracted in line of service. An official of the War Risk Insurance Bureau estimates that this amendment will bring about an immediate settlement of at least 15,000 pending claims awaiting proof that the applicant's tubercular or mental disease was contracted in service.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator from Massachusetts yield to an inquiry?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I shall be glad to do so.

Mr. ROBINSON. The amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] and agreed to by the Senate was modified in conference. Will the Senator from Massachusetts make clear to the Senate the effect of that modification?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. The amendment which I proposed would have waived the necessity of an incapacitated veteran, who is suffering with a tubercular or neuropsychiatric disease, proving that the disease was contracted in the line of service for a period extending to one year beyond the enactment of this proposed bill. The medical advisers of the War Risk Insurance Bureau, when heard by the conference committee, took very stout issue with the contention that consumption could be traced to military service when the development was longer than a year and a half after discharge from the service. So strenuous and so intense was their opposition to the amendment that at one time it looked as though the amendment would fail in conference. Upon further reflection by these officials of the War Risk Bureau and consultation with physicians other than those employed in the War Risk Bureau it was agreed that those suffering with neuropsychiatric or tubercular diseases within two years after service should be entitled to the presumption that the disease was contracted in the line of service.

Mr. McCORMICK. That is substantially the amendment which was proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts, is it not?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON. If in the case of tubercular patients the process becomes active within two years after expiration of the service, and if in the case of neuropsychiatric patients the troubles became manifest within the same length of time, the burden of proof will rest upon the Government to establish that the disease did not arise during the service? That, I understand, is the compromise which is made in the conference report?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Considering the very great difference of opinion existing between medical authorities, I will say to the Senator from Arkansas that the conference report represents really quite a fair compromise. I think the Senator from Utah [Mr. Smoot] will agree with me that we learned that a good deal of the difficulty in the awarding of compensation has been due to medical opinion relating to the length of time when diseases traceable to service should develop.

The medical authorities have almost the power of lawyers. They have attempted to reduce to mathematical precision the time when a disease, such as tuberculosis, may be contracted after service. A great many of the hardships about which Senators have received complaints have been due, in my opinion, to the attempt of the medical authorities to define mathematically the time when a given disease should develop.

Mr. ROBINSON. Within what length of time, after the expiration of service, do they say the process in the case of tubercular patients may become active?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. The Senator from Arkansas will be interested to learn what their position is. I will ask the Senator from Utah to follow me. Heretofore, in order to trace any tubercular disease to service origin the man afflicted with tuberculosis has had to prove, first, that he had a "pulmonary episode," as they call it, during his service; that he had the "flu"; that he had pneumonia; or that he had a severe bronchial trouble; and, secondly, that within the year following his discharge from service he had had a recurrence or had had some pulmonary trouble that required medical attendance. Those two factors were necessary in order to prove that tuberculosis which had developed after service could be traceable to service origin. Of course this proof had to be furnished by the applicant.

Mr. ROBINSON. That ruling was based upon the theory that the patient would know in every case when the process of tuberculosis became active?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. It was based upon the theory that the activity had to occur shortly after the time of service and following some pulmonary disorder during service.

Mr. ROBINSON. But it is frequently true that tuberculosis is an active process, and yet the person afflicted with it does not have knowledge of the fact that he has tuberculosis. As a matter of fact, most tubercular patients think that they have something else or think they are not afflicted with tuberculosis. So that the hardship of the rule which has prevailed heretofore is apparent. I think the compromise which has been written into the Senate bill is a very good one, and I hope it will prove effective.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I may say to the Senator that I think really the most humane feature of this amendment is the assistance it will render to those afflicted with nervous and mental diseases in obtaining their compensation. When it is considered that the most important proof, the essential proof, to establish a claim for compensation must come from the man himself, and when it is realized that he is mentally afflicted and therefore can not, for instance, file affidavits from officers and service men with whom he served—since memory is usually defective and he can not remember whom his officers or comrades were—it becomes apparent how important is the change made by the bill. So really the best service, I think, rendered by my amendment, as agreed to in conference, is the aid it extends to that particular class of men who are suffering from mental and nervous diseases. Of course, the provision concerning tubercular cases is a great advance beyond the old construction.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. TOWNSEND. There has been so much confusion that I could not quite follow the Senator. Do I understand that under the agreement of the conferees if an ex-service man suffers from tuberculosis within two years after his discharge it is to be presumed that the disease was of service origin?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Exactly.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I am very glad that provision has been made.

Mr. ROBINSON. And the burden of proof is on the Government to prove to the contrary, whereas the burden of proof now is upon the patient to prove that he acquired the disease in the service.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President—

Mr. TOWNSEND. Just a moment.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I yield further to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Under the conference report, there is no burden of proof upon the soldier to prove that the disease originated from service if he is afflicted with it within two years after his discharge?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. That is correct.

Mr. TOWNSEND. It is to be presumed that it was of service origin and that he is entitled to the benefits of the proposed law?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. In other words, if an ex-service man presents himself to a Government physician and is examined and found to have tuberculosis the degree of disability is fixed by the physician and the soldier receives his compensation without proof from him that his disease is traceable to his military service.

Mr. REED. But the two years have already expired.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. No; not in all cases.

Mr. REED. More than two years have elapsed since the war. Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Many of the soldiers are being discharged now. The troops over in Germany have not as yet been discharged.

Mr. REED. A man who came back shortly after the armistice and was then discharged will find that he is excluded from the beneficent rule which is to be established.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. If he has not yet gone to a Government physician he is excluded unless he connects his disease of to-day with his service by affirmative proof on his part.

Mr. REED. Exactly.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. But if he has been to a physician of the Government and been found to have any trace of tuberculosis during the two-year period he will have the benefit of the proposed law.

Mr. REED. But he must have gone through the two-year period?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Yes. Of course one who develops tuberculosis after two years will still be obliged to prove by affidavits its connection with his service; but heretofore he would have had to prove by affidavits that during his service period he had pulmonary episodes, and that within one year he had had a recurrence of them even if the disease became active within two years.

Mr. McKELLAR. And, Mr. President, exactly the same rule applies to neuropsychiatric diseases?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Exactly.

Mr. President, I will resume enumerating the further benefits of this bill.

PUNISHMENT FOR FRAUD.

9. Heretofore the law has not adequately provided for the punishment of those who make false statements with intent to defraud the Government in seeking the benefits of hospitalzation, compensation, and insurance. One of the Senate amendments to House bill 6611 provides for the punishment of fraud.

PUNISHMENT FOR BREACH OF DISCIPLINE.

GOVERNMENT WAIVES COLLECTION OF MISPAYMENTS.

11. Section 17 exonerates the bureau from the necessity of collecting any more mispayments of allotments and allowances. In the rush of business a great many erroneous payments were made, such, for example, as continuing payments after a boy was killed in action when the bureau was not promptly advised of his death, and a great many duplicate payments were made. Most of the persons receiving the money thought they were entitled to it and spent it. The present bill exonerates the bureau from forcing the collection of this money and quiet title. Approximately $11,000,000 is involved.

BUREAU TO ASSIST IN PREPARATION OF CLAIMS.

12. Under section 10 the director is empowered to employ persons to aid in the preparation, presentation, and examination of all claims. In the past the bureau has been obliged to follow the legal view that the job of making a claim against the Government is up to the claimant himself. Now the bureau can go out and assist him, and I am bound to say that, in my opinion, there are hundreds, if not thousands, of deserving cases which the bureau has disallowed for failure to prosecute when the true facts were that the ex-service man was merely ignorant, was fully entitled to some help, and suffered because he did not know how to proceed.

I have now, Mr. President, summarized the 12 essential and important changes that are made by this bill in the present law.

Mr. REED. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I do.

Mr. REED. I want to be sure that I understand the last proposition, because I offered an amendment in the committee to the effect that if an inmate of a hospital was ordered to undergo an operation he could not be dismissed from the hospital until he had had the right of appeal to a board of physicians. Is that preserved in the bill?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. No, sir. The House conferees objected to it on the ground that it was a matter to be controlled by rules and regulations made by the bureau. I want to say that I was personally very much in sympathy with the amendment of the Senator from Missouri, and I think that the committee investigating agencies dealing with the welfare of soldiers will be able to make some recommendations covering the amendment made by the Senator.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I am going to object to the consideration of this conference report if that is the case, and I am going to do what I can to get the Senate to insist upon that provision.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will say to the Senator from Missouri that unanimous consent has already been given for the consideration of the conference report, and it is before the Senate.

Mr. REED. I did not understand that unanimous consent was asked.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It was.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. And it was asked upon the statement that it would require but a few minutes to state the points involved in the conference report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will say to the Senator from Missouri that the question is upon agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. REED. I understand that the conference report was brought forward upon the distinct understanding that if it was satisfactory upon a mere explanation and would go through without debate, it would be considered at this time. I thought that qualification went with the understanding.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I think it did, Mr. President.

Mr. REED. I would have objected myself if I had not had that understanding, but I presumed that a statement by the Senator might be so satisfactory that everyone would be willing then to take up the bill for a vote on it and not interfere with the remarks of the Senator from Wisconsin. He yielded the floor,

I think, for the purpose and under the circumstances I have stated.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I had not yet been recognized this morning by the Presiding Officer; but I was on the floor when the Senate recessed, and under the practices of the Senate I am entitled, I suppose, to recognition to continue.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I hope the Senator from Missouri will not object. I know that he feels very strongly in support and favor of the amendment proposed by him; but if he realized the difficulties that we encountered in conference he would appreciate that we are very fortunate to save so many of the good features of the bill as we did. I had to yield on some amendments in the bill to which I was very much devoted. For instance, my own amendment was limited somewhat in its effect. I hope the Senator will not press his objection.

I also feel that the conference report would have gone through, had I not taken the floor, perhaps without any opposition, without anybody knowing what was in the bill; but so many of the Senators said they had received letters from their constituents asking them to explain this bill that I felt it necessary for either the Senator from Utah or myself to explain very briefly and concisely the changes this law makes in compensating, insuring, and in hospitalizing our war veterans.

Mr. REED. No, Mr. President; it would not have gone through without an explanation, because I want to know what is in this bill. I apprehend that the committee feel that they have done the best they could, but I am not willing to have the bill voted on without laying before the Senate my views touching this particular phase of the bill. I shall express them very briefly, but I do not want to trench on the time of the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, if I may be permitted, I should have been glad to resume my discussion on the assembling of the Senate; but I am not going to stand in the way of the further consideration or disposition of this conference report if Senators desire to discuss and dispose of it at this time.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I think the attitude of the Senator from Wisconsin most gracious and generous.

Mr. REED. Then, if the Senator from Massachusetts has concluded his remarks, I can say what I desire to say in a very few words.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts has the floor. Does he yield, and to whom?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I want to ask the Senator a question. It will take only a moment.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. JONES of Washington. As I understand, one of the great objects of this bill is to simplify the work of the War Risk Insurance Bureau and expedite the adjustment of these claims. I want to read just a brief extract from a letter which I received just a day or two ago setting out a situation that the writer believes is the main cause of the delay. He is a gentleman who was in the service, has been in the office here, and has been in the field, whom I know personally, and is a very intelligent man and a very responsible one. I want to ask the Senator in charge of the bill whether or not he thinks this situation is taken care of in the bill. He says:

Most of the past delays in handling compensation cases have been caused through the district medical officer. Each of these offices is in charge of a high-salaried doctor, who may be an excellent doctor, but who knows nothing about office management, and has no aptitude for it. I have come in contact with dozens of cases where the office in Cincinnati has lost medical reports, where they have had examining doctors send in as many as seven sets of reports in one case before they were able to send it on to Washington, to the bureau. If they are to have branch offices they must not be in charge of doctors as directors or executive officers.

I want to ask the Senator whether there is anything in this bill which takes care of a situation like that, or whether or not the matter covered by that letter will be left to the director of the bureau, or whatever it may be. It would strike me that it is an administrative proposition that could be worked out by the head of the bureau, and with that in mind I thought I might as well call this matter to his attention by getting it in the RECORD in this way as in any other; but the Senator can probably tell me just what the situation is.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I think the letter discloses a difficulty that has embarrassed the speedy disposition of claims. The matter, however, is entirely one of administration. I think the most apt criticism that I have heard made against the administration of the war risk act was made by a witness before the investigating committee the other day, when he said that there has been altogether too much pathology in the administration of this law. Physicians have attempted in the past not only to pass professionally upon the cases they have examined but to act in a legal and administrative manner. I believe that the director of the veterans' bureau intends to correct the abuses that have grown up under the old system. At least, he seems to recognize the fact that there have been many difficulties due to the situation which the Senator from Washington has described.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President—

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want to say to the Senator that the bill provides for 14 regional offices and 140 suboffices, and under the law they are given power to pass upon the claims of the soldiers in the field. They are not being compelled now to go from one doctor to another, and from the State up to Washington, and through the Treasury Department to the director; but the head of the regional office has power to pass upon the claim in the State where the soldier is located.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Is the head of the regional office to be a physician?

Mr. SMOOT. Not necessarily.

Mr. WILLIS, Mr. REED, and Mr. ROBINSON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I want to yield shortly to the Senator from Missouri, who wants to make an address. I will yield first, for a question, to the Senator from Ohio, and then to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. WILLIS. If the Senator will permit me, I desire to answer the observation made by the Senator from Washington touching the Cincinnati office by a reference to the plans that are now being made and being carried into effect. The man now in charge of the Cincinnati office, as I happen to know personally, is an experienced office man. He is not a physician at all but a man of very large experience in office management; and I think the difficulty which the Senator speaks of will not longer exist.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President—

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas and then to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. ROBINSON. Under the bill as it passed the Senate, my information and my recollection is that the execution of the hospitalization act passed on the 3d of March was transferred to the Director of the War Risk Insurance Bureau. I want to ask the Senator from Massachusetts if the conference agreement does not leave that where it now is, and if it was not found necessary to do that in order to facilitate the new construction and the extensions of existing hospitals?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. The Senator from Arkansas has stated correctly the situation. It was found that the present work would be very much delayed if a transfer were made at this time, after four months have been spent in perfecting plans and in developing the work through the bureau having charge of construction in the office of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. ROBINSON. It was found that instead of facilitating this feature it would occasion delay to transfer it to the Director of War Risk Insurance, and would impose upon him, in all probability, the obligation of doing again the work that has already been done by the Public Health Service and the committee appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury to make plans for carrying out the act of March 3 providing for additional hospitalization facilities.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. The Senator has stated the situation exactly.

I now yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I think the bill, even as reported by the conferees, is a great improvement over the present law. I know how futile it is to attempt to change a bill after conferees have reported it, particularly when it is conceded that the Senate conferees have earnestly endeavored to preserve the Senate amendments. Therefore, upon reflection, I am not going to ask that this bill be returned to conference; but I feel compelled to protest earnestly against the striking out of the Senate amendment which provided a board of appeals in cases where the hospital authorities have ordered a patient to undergo a particular operation.

In the hospitals where soldiers are receiving treatment, or at least in some of them, the rule is that if the physician in charge of a patient in the hospital concludes that the patient's leg ought to be cut off, his eye removed, or any other operation, slight or serious, performed, and the patient does not comply with that recommendation, he shall be expelled from the hospital. I regard that rule as barbarous, infamous, and damnable, and

I employ the latter word only because it is the only English word I know of that will express my thoughts.

With all due regard for the medical and surgical professions, we know that doctors sometimes make mistakes in the diagnoses and treatment of diseases. Accordingly, in private life it is the custom, before we submit any of our loved ones to the surgeon's knife, to call in consultation other physicians, and it frequently happens that after consultation the original opinion of the case is reversed or modified. It frequently happens that even after all the consultations mistakes are made.

It therefore seems to me utterly unjustifiable that a ward of the Government, a soldier afflicted because of his service in the war, should be ordered to undergo an operation dictated by some one man, or, if you please, by the entire medical corps of the hospital, with the alternative, if he refuses to subject himself to the surgeon's knife, of being expelled from the hospital. It is inhuman, it is barbarous, it is infamous, and it can not be justified.

I know a case where, against the protest of the father and the protest of the patient, a soldier was ordered to undergo an operation of the most serious character, and one which would have left him permanently disabled, and where, by an appeal which I happened in that case to make, for I knew the father, the case was finally reviewed, the young man was sent to a different place for treatment, and recovered, without suffering the terrible consequences of that operation. Complaints were made to me by the inmates of one of the hospitals I visited that they had no option, that when the surgeon in charge ordered them to the operating room they must either go there or go upon the street.

I can not understand, therefore, why an amendment which simply proposed to give the soldier the right of appeal and examination before a board of physicians named by the College of Physicians and Surgeons was stricken from this bill. If I had any hope, under the present conditions, that the provision could be reinserted, I would stand here and contend for whatever time was necessary. I presume it is impossible to accomplish the result at this time, but I say now that the practice shall not continue, that in some way it must be abolished.

It is, of course, within the jurisdiction of the managers of these hospitals to change the rules.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I understand that the hospital authorities claim that such things never happen, and state that if a case such as the Senator has mentioned really happened and complaint was made, the officer who threatened to discharge the patient because he would not undergo an operation could be penalized and dismissed.

Mr. REED. If it never happens, then there was no reason why the amendment should not have remained in the bill, for it never would be operative. I believe it has happened, because I know of the particular case to which I referred, although in that instance I did not know that the man was told that he would be dismissed, but he was being taken to the operating room against his will and against his protest. I have been informed by officers of the American Legion, who are not excited individuals, who are not in any degree cranks upon the question, who appear to look at all these matters in a sober and judicious way, that the practice does exist, and I have no doubt it exists.

Mr. President, all I can do is to make this protest. If the practice does not exist, it would be well that an order should be published by the authorities which will make it impossible ever to exist, and to remove the deadly fear these young men feel under existing circumstances.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I do not intend to take more than a moment of the time of the Senate. I prepared a statement in line with that made by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], and there were only a few minor points I expected to mention. But I shall not take the time of the Senate even for that purpose.

I simply desire to say that the conferees did everything in their power to provide adequately for the soldiers, and I think that if Senators will study the report carefully and go into the details every Senator will admit that it was well done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

PROPOSED LOAN TO THE REPUBLIC OF LIBERIA (S. DOC. NO. 58.)

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following communication from the President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed:

Washington, July 21, 1921.

HON. CALVIN COOLIDGE,

The entire situation and our obligations are set forth in the letter of the Secretary of State, and I beg to submit them for the consideration of the Congress.

It is impossible to escape the conviction that we have an obligation which the executive branch of the Government can not discharge without the properly expressed approval of the Congress.

Very respectfully, yours,

WARREN G. HARDING.

Mr. TOWNSEND presented a resolution adopted at a recent meeting of the executive board of the Employers' Association, of Detroit, Mich., favoring the repeal of the so-called Adamson law, relative to railroad labor, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a resolution adopted at a meeting held July 26, 1921, of the National Council of Catholic Men, of St. Joseph's Parish, of Kalamazoo, Mich., protesting against methods employed by Senator THOMAS E. WATSON in his campaign against the Catholic Church, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a memorandum in the nature of a petition from sundry organizations of Americans of Ukrainian ancestry and Ukrainians of Hamtramck, Mich., relative to alleged Polish atrocities and persecutions in East Galicia, pray-

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. TOWNSEND introduced a bill (S. 2337) to amend the transportation act, 1920, and for other purposes, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

AMENDMENTS TO TARIFF BILL.

Mr. JOHNSON and Mr. LADD each submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by them to House bill 7456, the tariff bill, which were referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BURSUM submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 7456, the tariff bill, which was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed.

TARIFF DUTY ON COTTON.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I submit an amendment intended to be proposed by me to House bill 7456, the tariff bill, and ask that the same be read and referred to the Committee on Finance.

The amendment was read, referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed, as follows:

On page 103, between lines 16 and 17, under schedule 9, insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"Cotton having a staple of 1½ inches or more in length, 20 cents per pound."

And on page 184, paragraph 1557, line 17, after the word "cotton," insert the words "not specially provided for."

HEALTH AND FOOD CONDITIONS IN THE SOUTH.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I present a letter from Dr. Olin West, secretary of the Tennessee State Board of Health, on the pellagra situation in my State and ask unanimous consent that it may be inserted in the Record. This letter is conclusive as to the facts in reference to this situation in my State. No man is more familiar with it than Dr. West and no man is more accurate in stating it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter is as follows:

STATE OF TENNESSEE, STATE BOARD OF HEALTH,
Nashville, July 30, 1921.

HON. KENNETH MCKELLAR,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. MCKELLAR: When I received your telegram of Wednesday asking for information relative to the prevalence of pellagra in Tennessee I had already made some especial investigations, and replied to your telegram on the basis of results ascertained, as well as on the basis of monthly reports from health officers throughout the State and death returns as recorded in our division of vital statistics. When your wire came I had already mailed out a special questionnaire to all local and county health officers seeking new and specific information concerning pellagra incidence in the State. Numerous replies have now been received and the information contained in these replies is entirely in keeping with the facts stated in my telegram to you. Shelby County is the only county in the State reporting any unusual amount of pellagra, and I am strongly of the opinion that my report from that county takes into consideration only the increase in July over previous months in the current year rather than comparative figures for this July and the same month in previous years. In other words, I think the Shelby County report refers only to the increase of July over June, May, and April, 1921, which increase is to be expected.

I have no doubt at all but that 1921 will show an increased incidence of pellagra over 1920, which was the "low" year for the State since we have known the disease in Tennessee. I also believe that 1921 will show increased incidence rates for several communicable diseases. There can be no argument as to the influence of "hard times" in producing high morbidity and mortality rates, and undoubtedly our State, with all others, is passing through a period of financial and industrial stress. The health officer who has not anticipated a greater pellagra incidence in this year than last is, to say the least, a short-sighted sort of person. But there is no famine, no "semi-famine," and no overwhelming wave of pellagra in Tennessee. More than that, there never has been and, in my opinion, there is never going to be any famine in Tennessee. If those who are so terribly uneasy about us could have ridden with me from Nashville to Petersburg yesterday afternoon and looked over the beautiful green pastures full of fat calves and steers and pigs, the splendid fields of black-green corn, the meadows covered with haycocks, the piles of cut seed clover, and the thousands of yellow-legged chickens that were in evidence all along the way, and then could have seen the splendid crowd of good, old-fashioned Tennessee Americans, whose faces were glowing with health and contentment, that had gathered in a great splendid, modern, new school building to try to learn more as to what they can do toward conserving the public health in their good community and in their good State, I think all fear of famine or even "semifamine" in Tennessee would have been forever banished from their minds. Come on down and get a real old-time square meal three times every day for as many days as you want to stay and bring some of the fearful with you, so that they may see how Tennessee goes about heading off famine.

Incidentally, if Congress will do something to stabilize the markets for farm products and to reasonably reduce the excessive take-outs of the "middleman," old Tennessee will put her full share of beef and pork and poultry and milk and a lot of other good things of the necessities of life within the reach of the people of our less fortunate sister States north of Mason and Dixon's line.

I will be in Washington on August 4 to attend the conference of Southern State health officers with the Surgeon General, and hope to see you while there.

With my sincere good wishes, I am,
Very truly, yours,

OLIN WEST, Secretary.

JOINT COMMITTEE ON REORGANIZATION.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] being absent from the Chamber at the moment, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate resolution 109, to provide for payment of the expenses of Joint Committee on the Reorganization of the Administrative Branch of the Government out of the contingent fund. This is for the purpose of paying the employees of the Joint Committee on Reorganization.

Mr. HARRISON. May I say to the Senator that there will be a little discussion on that proposition.

Mr. SMOOT. Then I shall not ask for the consideration of the resolution at present. I simply wish to say to the Senator that the resolution has been on the calendar for some time. I really thought there was a joint resolution which had passed the House and Senate providing for these employees, but I was mistaken. This resolution should be passed, because the employees can not receive any compensation from the day they entered the service until this resolution is passed.

Mr. HARRISON. I did not make the statement with a view of showing any opposition to the resolution. I may be for it; I think I am for it; but I wish to look into it and I shall wish to make some remarks touching it. I shall be very glad if the Senator will bring it up later, even this afternoon.

Mr. SMOOT. I withdraw the request, on the suggestion of the Senator from Mississippi.

EXPORTATION OF FARM PRODUCTS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1915) to provide for the purchase of farm products in the United States, to sell the same in foreign countries, and for other purposes.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to the committee substitute for the pending unfinished business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be reported.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. Amendment proposed to the committee substitute for Senate bill 1915, the unfinished business:

On page 6, after line 21, insert the following new section:

SEC. 25. (a) The corporation shall have power and is authorized and directed, upon request therefor by the Federal Farm Loan Board, created by the Federal farm loan act, approved July 17, 1916, as amended, to make advances to Federal land banks, at a rate of interest not exceeding the rate of interest charged by Federal land banks for loans under the provisions of such Federal farm loan act, as amended, and to accept as security therefor farm-loan bonds issued by such Federal land banks maturing within five years of the date of issue, or to purchase such bonds from the capital, earnings, reserve fund, or other assets of such corporation to the amount of $100,000,000 during the calendar year ending December 31, 1921, and $100,000,000 during the calendar year ending December 31, 1922.

(b) Every Federal land bank shall have power, subject to the provisions, limitations, and requirements of the Federal farm loan act, approved July 17, 1916, as amended, and of this section, to receive and pay interest upon such advances, to issue farm-loan bonds as security therefor, to issue and sell farm-loan bonds, to buy the same for its own account at any time, and to retire any or all of such bonds at or before maturity.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, may I ask the point of the insertion of the proposed amendment to the amendment in the nature of a substitute? I did not understand it as stated by the Secretary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the point where it is proposed to insert the amendment to the proposed amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 6, after line 21, insert a new section.

BRITISH INFLUENCE IN SHIPPING BOARD.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE resumed the speech begun by him on Friday last on British influence in the Shipping Board. After having spoken for about three hours,

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ODDIE in the chair). Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. I wish to ask the Senator from Wisconsin to yield long enough for me to submit a proposed unanimous-consent agreement to vote on the pending bill to-morrow.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I am a bit weary, and I shall be glad to yield the floor for the day. I shall not be able to conclude what I have to say if the Senate should adjourn or take a recess at its usual time to-night. If agreeable, I shall be very glad to yield the floor for the day.

EXPORTATION OF FARM PRODUCTS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1915) to provide for the purchase of farm products in the United States, to sell the same in foreign countries, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY] submits a unanimous-consent request, which the Secretary will read.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

It is agreed by unanimous consent that at not later than 4 p. m. on the calendar day of Tuesday, August 2, 1921, the Senate will proceed to vote, without further debate, upon any amendment that may be pending, any amendment that may be offered, and upon the bill (S. 1915) to provide for the purchase of farm products in the United States, to sell the same in foreign countries, and for other purposes, through the regular parliamentary stages to its final disposition; and that after the hour of 3 o'clock p. m. on said calendar day, no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than five minutes upon the bill, or more than once or longer than five minutes upon any amendment offered thereto.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask the Senator from Oregon if a call for a quorum is not required before the agreement can be entered into?

Mr. McNARY. I will say to the Senator from Tennessee that I understand it does.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, before a quorum is called may I suggest that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] has not finished his speech, which he will probably do to-morrow. The proposed unanimous-consent agreement calls for a closing of all debate at 3 o'clock to-morrow afternoon. In view of the fact that the Senator from Wisconsin has not finished his speech would it not be advisable to put off the time a little?

Mr. SMITH. May I suggest that instead of meeting at 12 o'clock to-morrow, if we should get the unanimous consent agreement, we meet at 11 o'clock?

Mr. McKELLAR. But if the time is to be taken up to-morrow by the Senator from Wisconsin, some of us who may desire to have something to say on the pending bill would not have the opportunity. I hope some arrangement may be made by which either the Senator from Wisconsin may continue his speech day after to-morrow or we may have sufficient time to-morrow. I think we ought to vote on the bill as soon as possible.

Mr. McNARY. I quite agree with the suggestion of the Senator from Tennessee, but on inquiry of the Senator from Wisconsin, I am informed that he thinks he can conclude within an hour or an hour and a half to-morrow.

Mr. SMITH. May I suggest that we might be able to fix the hour for a final vote on the bill at such a time to-morrow that the Senator from Wisconsin would be able to finish after the vote was taken? Let me suggest that if we meet at 11 o'clock we might be able to vote at half past two. I have not been advised of any lengthy speech that anyone desires to make on the pending bill. It is a measure of such vital importance that I am quite sure, so far as I am informed, it will not take longer than the time I have indicated.

Mr. MOSES. If Wednesday is fixed as the day for taking the vote by the unanimous-consent agreement, everybody can be accommodated, and then the Senator from Wisconsin may have as much time as he desires to-morrow to finish his interesting remarks on the very great subject he has been discussing. Then all those on this side of the Chamber who wish to discuss the unfinished business will have plenty of time.

Mr. SMITH. Does the Senator from New Hampshire understand the proposition I have made?

Mr. MOSES. The Senator suggests that the Senate meet an hour earlier to-morrow.

Mr. SMITH. If we were to meet at 11 o'clock we could conclude our debate say at 2 o'clock. That would leave three hours, and I am quite sure that is sufficient time. Then when the voting has been concluded the Senator from Wisconsin would have the balance of the afternoon to finish his remarks, or we could use the time for any other business we might desire to take up.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I think I shall object. If we could have all day to-morrow on the bill in aid of farmers I would have no objection, but it is impossible to tell how much debate there will be on other questions. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] will have an hour or two, and it does not give sufficient time. I will state the reason for my objection. No one can tell what amendments or substitutes are going to be offered to the bill, and for that reason I think if we should have a new proposition offered as a substitute there would not be sufficient time for a proper consideration of it.

Mr. SMITH. May I inquire of the Senator if he knows of any substitute that will be offered?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. No; I do not, but I have seen under similar conditions substitutes offered when there was no time available for explaining the substitute. I have seen an entirely different bill offered as an amendment in the nature of a substitute to a pending bill that Senators thought was going through in the form it had been presented. I do not like to get caught in a trap; that is all.

Mr. SIMMONS. I suggest to the Senator from Oregon that he change the time to August 3, Wednesday.

Mr. McNARY. I had it in mind to suggest Wednesday at 2 o'clock.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I wish to suggest to Senators that it is very necessary to get the bill passed in this body at the earliest hour possible. We are anxious to have the House consider it immediately. It is a very important measure; it means a great deal just now to the farmers of the South and the West. If it is possible to reach an agreement to vote on it to-morrow, I would be glad to have that done.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. That is impossible, so far as I am concerned. I shall have to object to any hour to-morrow.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I am inclined to object from this time on to any unanimous-consent agreement that terminates the debate at a fixed and definite time. I have sought an opportunity to speak on important matters that have been controlled by agreements of that sort, the last two or three agreements in particular, and I could get no recognition from the Chair simply because I would not go up in advance and bargain for a place upon a list to be controlled by an agreement in violation of the rule.

I think that the unanimous-consent agreement under which the Senate disposed of the packers' bill is the form of unanimous-consent agreement that the Senate ought to adopt instead of this plan of cutting off debate and then allowing the order of the speakers to be manipulated by some one from the floor. That plan was just this, that at a certain time all extended speeches should stop and thereafter speeches should be confined to a period not exceeding five minutes. I think that should be, perhaps, 10 minutes. That would end the debate in a reasonable time.

Mr. HEFLIN. The plan proposed by the Senator from Oregon is five minutes.

Mr. McNARY. That is the plan of the unanimous-consent agreement which I have suggested.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Is it not true that after 4 o'clock there would be no debate at all?

Mr. McNARY. After 3 o'clock there is to be no debate.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That is different from the agreement to which I have referred.

Mr. McNARY. The difference, I think, is that the one I have proposed is limited to one hour while the one to which the Senator from Wisconsin refers is unlimited.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I should like to suggest to the Senate that form of agreement, except that debate, I think, is a little bit restricted, but we can always pass measures within a decent time by agreement to limit our speeches to 10 minutes after the general debate has proceeded for a certain length, so that the subject has been pretty thoroughly discussed. Then we will never be confronted with the advantage of one side absorbing the last two or three hours in debate upon that side, and furthermore we will not have some amendment proposed which has to be voted upon without being explained or understood.

Mr. McNARY. I suggest that the Secretary read the form referred to by the Senator from Wisconsin. Personally I do not think I have any objection to it, as I recall it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the unanimous-consent agreement referred to by the Senator from Wisconsin.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The form of agreement made in that case was as follows:

It is agreed by unanimous consent that on the calendar days of Wednesday, June 15, and Thursday, June 16, 1921, the Senate will meet at 11 o'clock a. m.; that immediately upon assembling on the last-named calendar day the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the bill S. 6320, an act to regulate interstate and foreign commerce in live stock; and that after the hour of 1 o'clock p. m. on the said last-named calendar day, Thursday, June 16, no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than five minutes upon the bill or any amendment offered thereto.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The latter part of it is the important part. The earlier part just applied to that particular situation.

Mr. McNARY. I suggest that the time be fixed for Wednesday, the 3d of August, after 2 o'clock—

Mr. CURTIS. And that after 2 o'clock the debate shall be limited to 10 minutes?

Mr. McNARY. That the debate shall be limited to five minutes.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I will ask the Senator to make it 10 minutes. I have not had any opportunity to take part in the discussion of the bill, and I think I might care to do so.

Mr. McNARY. Very well; after 2 o'clock let the debate be limited to 10 minutes on the bill and amendments.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I should like to have the proposed unanimous-consent agreement in its pending form read.

Mr. SIMMONS. I will ask the Senator from Oregon if the proposed unanimous-consent agreement provides that the Senate shall meet at 11 o'clock on Wednesday?

Mr. McNARY. I think that perhaps 12 o'clock would be the better hour.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, there are a number of very important measures now before committees which are meeting every day, and to meet at 11 o'clock will not hasten the passage of the bill.

Mr. SIMMONS. May we not at least have a gentlemen's agreement that we shall recess instead of taking an adjournment?

Mr. McNARY. Yes.

Mr. SMITH. May I inquire of the Senator having this measure in charge if he intends to-morrow, immediately upon the conclusion of the speech of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], to have this matter taken up, so that whatever time remains to-morrow may be consumed in the discussion and perfection of the measure?

Mr. McNARY. Yes; and then to recess over until Wednesday.

Mr. SMITH. And also that the measure shall be under discussion on Wednesday until finally disposed of?

Mr. McNARY. Yes.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, as to the last unanimous-consent agreement into which the Senate entered we got into trouble. There was an understanding on the part of those who agreed to it, as I no doubt suppose it is the understanding of Senators who may be about to agree to the pending request, that the subject matter of the agreement should be held before the Senate to the exclusion of other business until it was finally acted upon; but after the unanimous-consent agreement was entered into, on that understanding, the Senate deliberately proceeded to the consideration of another bill, and the bill which we had unanimously agreed to vote upon, though technically before the Senate, was displaced by the other bill which was taken up. So we were called upon to vote on a measure upon which we had agreed to vote when all of the discussion was on the other bill, which was really before the Senate until the very minute that the vote was taken upon the bill as to which the unanimous-consent agreement had been made. Unless it may be made a part of the proposed unanimous-consent agreement in this instance that the bill in question shall be held before the Senate until it is finally disposed of, I shall object.

Mr. HEFLIN. Let us arrange to keep the bill before the Senate.

Mr. SMITH. I think that it is the intent of those who are interested in this proposed legislation that nothing else shall intervene until it shall have been finally disposed of.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. All I mean now to call attention to is that the agreement as at present framed does not provide that the farmers' relief bill shall be held before the Senate until it shall have been finally disposed of.

Mr. KENYON. But suppose no Senator wishes to speak on the bill?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. If no Senator wants to speak, I presume the vote could come upon the bill at any time, as the proposed agreement says not later than 2 o'clock.

Mr. CURTIS. I suggest to the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY] that he agree that the bill may be kept before the Senate. The Senator can secure that end by demanding the regular order.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I suggest that that be made a part of the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. McNARY. I am not so sure that may be done, but I have no objection to the suggestion of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] being made a part of the agreement.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. It will be impossible for the Senator from Oregon to keep the bill before the Senate, if the Senate does not want to have it kept before the body, unless that is a part of the unanimous-consent agreement. I assume the Secretary is preparing an amendment to the unanimous-consent agreement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes.

Mr. HEFLIN. If it is necessary in order to secure a unanimous-consent agreement that the suggestion of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] be embodied therein, I suggest to the Senator from Oregon that he accept the suggestion.

Mr. McNARY. I have accepted it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the request for unanimous consent as now proposed to be modified.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. It is agreed, by unanimous consent, that at 4 o'clock p. m. the calendar day of August 3, 1921—

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Does the agreement read "at 4 o'clock"?

Mr. McNARY. I suggested 2 o'clock.

Mr. CURTIS. The Senator from Oregon suggested 2 o'clock.

Mr. McNARY. I suggested that it be "not later than 2 o'clock on Wednesday."

Mr. JONES of Washington. I wish to suggest that the Secretary take the agreement which was entered into with reference to the "packers bill," changing the name of the bill, and changing the dates so as to provide that at not later than 2 o'clock on Wednesday we shall proceed under the 10-minute rule.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the Secretary read the proposed unanimous-consent agreement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. It is agreed by unanimous consent that on the calendar day of Wednesday, August 3, 1921, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 1915) to provide for the purchase of farm products in the United States, to sell the same in foreign countries, and for other purposes; and that after the hour of 2 o'clock p. m. on said calendar day no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than 10 minutes upon the bill or any amendment offered thereto; and that until the final vote is taken upon the bill it shall be kept before the Senate to the exclusion of all other business.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Does that mean that the bill shall be kept before the Senate from the time the proposed agreement is entered into or from the time that we proceed to the consideration of the bill, which is 2 o'clock on Wednesday?

Mr. McKELLAR. It ought to be from now on.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. That is what it ought to be.

Mr. SMITH. I suggest that the object we have in view is to proceed to the consideration of the bill to-morrow at the first opportunity. It might transpire that we would be ready to vote on the bill at some time to-morrow. If the proposed agreement could provide that at not later than 2 o'clock on Wednesday or at some other hour the limitation on debate shall be imposed, but not preclude taking the bill up to-morrow, that would be satisfactory.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I ask that the proposed unanimous-consent agreement be again stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the proposed agreement as now framed.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

It is agreed by unanimous consent that the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 1915) to provide for the purchase of farm products in the United States, to sell the same in foreign countries, and for other purposes, and that at not later than 2 o'clock—

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President—

Mr. CURTIS. That is all that I desire read. I understand the words "proceed to the consideration" to mean to proceed to the consideration of the bill on Wednesday. That is not what is desired. The proposition that is desired is to keep the bill before the Senate from now until it shall be disposed of.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Kansas has expressed the idea that I had in mind. If we enter into a unanimous-consent agreement to proceed "to the consideration of the bill," and so forth, it implies, it seems to me, that the bill is not now the unfinished business of the Senate. I understand it is expected to recess to-night and that we will go on with the unfinished business to-morrow. So it seems to me that the expression referred to is faulty and is not what the Senate means.

Mr. CURTIS. I suggest that the object in view would be attained if the agreement were made to read that on or before the time stated a vote shall be taken, but that after 2 o'clock on Wednesday the debate shall be limited to five minutes.

Mr. BROUSSARD. The Senators may want some time before the time fixed.

Mr. CURTIS. Then it is their duty to be here.

Mr. STERLING. It seems to me that a better form would be to say, "Continue the consideration of Senate bill 1915 until disposed of, and that after 2 o'clock on Wednesday the debate shall be limited," and so forth.

Mr. SMITH. At not later than 2 o'clock.

Mr. STERLING. That after that hour speeches shall be limited.

Mr. MCCORMICK. Mr. President, It might be well to have the form of the proposed agreement again stated.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I think that the idea sought to be conveyed would be arrived at by some such language as this: That the consideration of the pending bill be continued to the exclusion of all other business to its final passage, and that after the hour of 2 o'clock on Wednesday, August 3, no Senator shall speak more than 10 minutes on the bill or any amendment thereto, the usual language being employed as to that limitation.

Mr. HEFLIN. I think that would cover it.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, there are several ways of wording the proposed agreement. I think its meaning is understood, and I should like to have the Secretary read the proposed agreement as it has now been framed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

It is agreed, by unanimous consent, that the consideration of the pending bill (S. 1915) to provide for the purchase of farm products in the United States, to sell the same in foreign countries, and for other purposes, shall be continued to the exclusion of all other business, and that after the hour of 2 o'clock p. m. on the calendar day of Wednesday, August 3, 1921, no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than 10 minutes on the bill or any amendment offered thereto.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Connecticut what the present state of the rule is with reference to whether a unanimous-consent agreement may be changed by another unanimous-consent agreement?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I was under the impression, Mr. President, that at the last session of the Senate the rule had been changed so that a unanimous-consent agreement could be changed by another unanimous-consent agreement, but I am not sure enough of it to answer positively.

Mr. LENROOT. Then, I suggest inserting the words "except by unanimous consent."

Mr. HEFLIN. Under the proposed unanimous-consent agreement, if debate should be exhausted, could we vote before 2 o'clock on Wednesday?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I said not later than 2 o'clock; it could be voted on earlier, in my opinion.

Mr. McNARY. I think the suggestion of the Senator from Wisconsin should be incorporated in the unanimous-consent agreement. Then, if the proposed agreement is tentatively satisfactory, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, before the roll is called, what profit is there in incorporating in the agreement the amendment suggested by the Senator from Wisconsin? If we once agree by unanimous consent to vote, it is certain that some Senator will make an objection in case it is attempted to change that agreement.

Mr. LENROOT. All that I had in mind was that we might have some business to take up which could be disposed of in a moment, like a conference report, and so forth.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, may I inquire if the words "not later than 2 o'clock" appear in the agreement?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. They do now.

Mr. SMITH. So, that in case debate was exhausted, and we desired to reach a vote earlier than 2 o'clock, we might do so?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I ask that the Chair submit the unanimous-consent agreement to the Senate.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Ordinarily a roll call would be necessary in asking for unanimous consent, but this unanimous-consent agreement does not go to a final vote upon the bill. Consequently, I take it that it does not require a quorum. Is that the ruling of the Chair?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the ruling of the Chair. Is there objection to the proposed unanimous-consent agreement?

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, let it be stated.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Let us hear the thing read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. At the request of the Senator from Wisconsin, the Secretary will state the proposed unanimous-consent agreement.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

It is agreed by unanimous consent that the consideration of the pending bill, S. 1915, a bill to provide for the purchase of farm products in the United States, to sell the same in foreign countries, and for other purposes, shall be continued to the exclusion of all other business, and that at not later than 2 o'clock p. m. on the calendar day of Wednesday, August 3, 1921, no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than 10 minutes upon the bill or any amendment offered thereto.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, in that form the Senate could not receive a message from the President of the United States nor a message from the House of Representatives.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I suggest, instead of the phrase submitted by the Senator from Wisconsin, that we use the words that it shall remain the unfinished business until that time. That would leave it in the same situation that we have always had it before, and by unanimous consent we could lay aside the unfinished business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That can be done anyhow, and it always has been done.

Mr. NELSON. I suggest that amendment. Then we would not be handicapped as the Senator from Wisconsin has intimated.

Mr. McNARY. I accept that change and ask unanimous consent that the agreement be adopted.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I suggest that the language the Secretary read about the time of the beginning of the 10-minute speeches should be that after 2 o'clock on Wednesday no speech shall be more than 10 minutes. The Secretary read it "that at not later than 2 o'clock on Wednesday" speeches should be limited to 10 minutes. That does not sound just right. It ought to be "that after 2 o'clock on Wednesday" no Senator shall speak more than 10 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut pointed that out.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. Strike out the words "at not later than" and insert the word "after."

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President, may I inquire whether, under that unanimous-consent agreement, any other bill may be discussed except by unanimous consent?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. It can be discussed, but not taken up.

Mr. BROUSSARD. I mean taken up.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. No; no other bill can be taken up.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I ask that the unanimous-consent agreement as it has been reported may be submitted to the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the proposed unanimous-consent agreement? The Chair hears none, and it is entered into.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me to make a report? I ask unanimous consent to make the following report from the Committee on the Judiciary—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That would violate the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not understand that we can do any of this business from now on.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. HARRISON. Am I recognized?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, this morning—

Mr. CURTIS. Does the Senator want to make a speech?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I thought we were going into executive session.

Mr. HARRISON. I understand that I have the floor.

Mr. CURTIS. I had the floor, but had yielded—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas had the floor, and yielded to the Senator.

Mr. CURTIS. If the Senator desires to make a speech, I am willing to yield the floor, and will renew the motion later on.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, this morning the Senator from Utah [Mr. Smoot] called up a resolution that he desired passed to-day. I asked him to hold it for a while, because I desired to make a few remarks on it—not any extended remarks at all. He said it was very urgent that this resolution should be passed soon, in order to pay the employees of the Joint Committee on Reorganization. I thought perhaps this might be a very good time for the Senator to press his resolution, if he desires to do so. I am opposed to it. I merely desire to discuss briefly, for the enlightenment of the Senate, a matter connected with it. Can I proceed?

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that I should like to do it, but I can not do it under the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, is it true—I did not so understand it—that under the ruling of the Chair I can not get unanimous consent to introduce a matter for printing in the Record?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask for the regular order.

Mr. CURTIS. I insist upon my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. HARRISON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. HARRISON. I withhold my suggestion for a moment.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I think this unanimous-consent agreement was entered into under a misapprehension. I certainly thought the words "exclusion of all other business" were changed to read "unfinished business." I am now informed that that is not the case. If it is not, we can not have an executive session; we can do nothing.

Mr. SMOOT. That refers to legislative business. It has always been held in the past that a unanimous-consent agreement does not interfere with an executive session.

Mr. CURTIS. If the Senator from Mississippi desires to make a speech I will withhold my motion for the present.

PROPOSED DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WELFARE.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I only desire to say that in yesterday's Washington Post there appeared an article headed, in big type: "Acts to unite War and Navy and form new department—Walter F. Brown announces Reorganization Committee has agreed to recommend creation of Cabinet place for public welfare—National defense to combine war services.—By Constance Drexel."

The person who wrote this article purports to have interviewed Mr. Walter F. Brown. The article says:

In many respects one of the most radical changes ever proposed by a national Government for its executive departments will soon be announced. Information obtained yesterday from Walter F. Brown, chairman of the congressional committee on reorganization, disclosed the fact that public welfare influence will be increased. It will be proposed to combine the War and Navy Departments into one, and add a department of public welfare. While there have been rumors to this effect, yesterday was the first time Mr.

Brown authorized the statement that this recommendation is to be made in the report his committee is preparing. This is of particular interest to women.

It goes along, Mr. President, to say that this is the act of the congressional committee.

The President's Cabinet, in the new order, would be made up of the same number of departments as at present, one being taken away and one added. Such a proposal to emphasize public-welfare measures should in the nature of things win the hearty approval of women. The committee hopes to have the report ready next month.

CABINET ACTIVELY COOPERATING.

As outlined by Mr. Brown, the job of weeding out the duplications and centralizing each function of the Government into one executive department, instead of having them spread through several, has been tremendous. But the committee, made up of three Senators and three Representatives, besides Mr. Brown, who represents the President, has not worked alone. The active cooperation of the Cabinet has been secured.

The report will represent the combined judgment of the Cabinet, bureau chiefs, and the committee. Mr. Brown also said he had consulted with experts of national research associations. It is proposed to have public hearings before the report is submitted to Congress.

Congress will be expected to enact legislation making possible the changes in the executive branches of the Government which will be recommended.

The most radical and far-reaching step proposed is the consolidation of the War and Navy Departments into one department in the cabinet of national defense, and the creation of a department of public welfare. Instead of a Secretary of War and Secretary of Navy, there would be a secretary of national defense, with an undersecretary for the Army and one for the Navy.

The public welfare department would have four divisions as now envisaged—education, public health, social service, and veterans' care—with an undersecretary for each. Education would be moved from the Department of the Interior, public health from the Treasury, social service would be new, and veterans' care would come over mostly from the Treasury, where it functions under war risk, vocational training, etc.

TENDS TOWARD ECONOMY.

Though social service, if included, is a new division, it would include no new function, as it would be largely made up of the Children's Bureau, transferred from the Department of Labor. The only added function envisaged is administration by the Children's Bureau of the Sheppard-Towner bill for the protection of maternity and infancy. Outside of the small appropriation for this purpose (less than $1,500,000), the proposed reorganization of the Government will call for no greater outlay of funds but will tend in the way of economy because of the centralization of various activities.

There has been talk of changing the Department of the Interior into one of public works. But Mr. Brown said the present plan is to have two divisions in the Department of the Interior, taking care of its two major operations, one of public domain and one for public works.

As already stated, the Bureau of Education would be transferred as one of the divisions of the department of public welfare, where, with an undersecretary of its own, education would be assured of a far greater influence in the National Government than it has ever enjoyed.

Mr. President, I desire to say, in connection with the resolution that was called up to-day by the Senator from Utah, and to which I have no objection—it proposes to pay the salaries of these employees out of the contingent fund of the Senate—that I think it would have been much better if these employees had been paid out of the Treasury, instead of paying them out of the Senate contingent fund and out of the House contingent fund; but, be that as it may, these employees should be paid. They are worthy of their hire.

Mr. Brown evidently has done some very splendid work in connection with this reorganization committee and as chairman of it. He is a very splendid, energetic, and able man. The Senate will recall that some months ago, after the Congress had passed a resolution to the effect that three Members of the Senate and three Members of the House were to comprise the joint committee on reorganization, the President was of the opinion that he should have a representative on this committee, and we amended that law accordingly. When we passed the amendment to the original resolution, it was understood, I thought, and no doubt the Senate was led to believe, that Mr. Brown was not to be chairman of this reorganization committee but was merely to be appointed as the personal representative of the President and to cooperate with the Senators and the House Members on the committee in doing this work. But at the first meeting of the committee—the meeting when the organization was perfected—Mr. Brown was elected chairman of the committee. That is, however, history now. We had a very splendid meeting, and out of the fullness of the heart of the Senator from Utah and the senior Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] they supported Mr. Brown for chairman. My friend from the House [Mr. MOORE of Virginia] and I supported the Senator from Utah for the chairmanship.

I thought that he should be chairman of the committee because he had worked diligently and long in this work and understood it, as I thought; and then, too, I believed that the members of this committee should be responsible to Congress. A person appointed on the committee that was not a Member of the House nor a Member of the Senate was not responsible to the Senate or to the House, and it made no difference what he might do, they could not call him to account; so I did not believe that it was a wise policy to make Mr. Brown chairman of the committee. He is chairman of the committee; but these statements that have gone to the country that this committee, after weeks of investigation, have agreed upon a report and a recommendation to Congress that the Army and Navy shall be combined into one, and that four or five other bureaus shall be put together in a public-welfare department, and that many other changes are to be wrought is all wrong. It is misleading. It is not a fact. The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] will bear me out in that statement. There is no justification for that article. If Mr. Brown made the statement that this committee has come to any conclusion like that, he is under a wrong impression. I can hardly believe he made any such statement, certainly there is some mistake somewhere if he did; I do not know why he made it, because the committee, as the Senator from Utah who now sits before me knows, for two months has had no meeting.

Not a witness has appeared before the committee. The work before it has not been considered by the committee. We have made no recommendation, nor have we given any consideration as a body to what will be done; so it is merely to strangle a wrong impression that might go to the country, as embodied in the article which I have read and in other articles, that I now speak in this connection, Mr. President. It is not, Mr. President, to criticize anything or anybody. I have a very high opinion of Mr. Brown, and a deep conviction that his work in the end will prove beneficial to the country. But there is no use for such reports as this to be circulated at this time. The committee as a committee has yet done none of the things claimed for it in that report. Its recommendations are yet to be formed and made. Indeed, I doubt if a single member is at this time ready to vote on any of the recommendations named in the article.

Mr. KING. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. HARRISON. Certainly.

Mr. KING. I hope that the Senator can also state that this committee has not agreed to the creation of a new department. I can assure him, speaking for myself, and I think some other Senators, that there will be a great deal of opposition to the creation of another department at the present time.

Mr. HARRISON. This committee has agreed to nothing. It has not considered these big questions yet, and no one is justified in making a statement that these recommendations are coming to Congress.

As one member of the committee, I do not know whether I am for these recommendations or not. As one member of the committee, I am for every economy, for every coordination of the bureaus of the Government that will effect a saving for the taxpayers of the country. These questions as yet, however, have not been considered, and naturally no conclusion has thus far been formed.

Mr. President, one other statement: Some weeks ago, on June 14, there appeared in the press throughout the country, under big headlines, the following:

OPPOSITION TO UNITED STATES REORGANIZATION TO BRING DISMISSALS—PRESIDENT AND CABINET DECIDE TO WARN EMPLOYEES THEY MUST NOT INTERFERE—PROPAGANDA CIRCULATED AGAINST BUREAU CHANGES—WORKERS TO BE TOLD THEY WILL HAVE OPPORTUNITY TO LEAVE, BUT MUST GO IF THEY PERSIST.

Government employees who actively oppose the administration's Government reorganization plan will be dismissed, the President and his Cabinet decided to-day. The decision was said to have resulted from activities of some employees in spreading propaganda against the reorganization policy.

MADE KNOWN AT WHITE HOUSE.

This was made known at the White House to-day following the meeting of the Cabinet, and directions were then given to department heads to carry out this instruction of the administration.

Mr. President, I desire to say this: If there are any persons in the Government service, be they heads of departments or not, who have information touching the coordination of bureaus, the saving of expenses by keeping intact these bureaus as they exist now, and who desire to give our committee that information, they should be permitted to do so. As one member of the committee, I am opposed to gagging any chief or the head of any bureau in this matter. I want them to feel perfectly free to come to at least one member of this committee and give me the facts, and because of their long experience and their training their information shall receive at my hands full consideration; and I believe that is the feeling every member of the committee has in this matter.

What we want to do is to make a thorough job of it and not make statements for the newspapers that we have done things until we have accomplished something. No one has worked harder than the Senator from Utah [Mr. Smoot], and I have never heard of him giving interviews for the papers saying he has done something when the thing has not been done. So we can accomplish much more if we will stay out of the papers in regard to this reorganization business until the work is accomplished, when we can report to Congress our work and then thoroughly discuss our recommendations. I shall cooperate to the limit and in every way in effecting economy in the Government's work, but I can not sit silent when recommendations are imputed to me and other members of the committee when the facts are different.

EXPORTATION OF FARM PRODUCTS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1915) to provide for the purchase of farm products in the United States, to sell the same in foreign countries, and for other purposes.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, may we have the Secretary read the unanimous-consent agreement as it is now?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the agreement.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

It is agreed by unanimous consent that the consideration of the pending bill (S. 1915) to provide for the purchase of farm products in the United States, to sell the same in foreign countries, and for other purposes, shall be continued to the exclusion of all other business, and that after 2 o'clock p. m. on the calendar day of Wednesday, August 3, 1921, no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than 10 minutes upon the bill or any amendment offered thereto.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Since the unanimous-consent agreement was entered into I have looked up the new rule, on the top of page 17 of the Manual, which provides that a unanimous-consent agreement may be changed by another unanimous consent upon a day's notice. Therefore, to provide for any emergency, as suggested by the Senator from Wisconsin, I now give notice that to-morrow I shall ask unanimous consent that the present agreement be modified by inserting after the words "to the exclusion of all other business" the words "except by unanimous consent."

Mr. LENROOT. May I suggest that the whole thing can be disposed of immediately by asking that this unanimous-consent agreement be set aside, so that we can make a new one?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. But a day's notice has to be given.

Mr. LENROOT. Not to set it aside.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The rule says it can be set aside by another unanimous-consent agreement upon one day's notice.

Mr. LENROOT. But the previous rulings were that it could be changed, set aside, or wiped out, by unanimous consent.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I have no objection in the world to entering into a unanimous-consent agreement to set this one aside and make a new one if the Senate thinks it can do it.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator has given a day's notice?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I have done that, but I am not asking that the agreement shall be set aside and a new one entered into.

PROPOSED DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WELFARE.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I wish to refer just a moment to the remarks made by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Harrison]. I am quite sure that Mr. Walter F. Brown, the chairman of the Joint Committee on Reorganization, never made the statement that is attributed to him in that paper. I saw him day before yesterday, before he left for Toledo, Ohio, and called his attention to that matter. The writer of the article has included that part referring to the Joint Committee on Reorganization without any authorization on the part of Mr. Brown.

It is true, as the Senator from Mississippi has said, that the committee has not held a meeting for nearly two months. I want to say, however, that that is the committee's fault, and not Mr. Brown's, because at the last meeting Mr. Brown, the chairman, was authorized by the committee to prepare a complete diagram of the changes that he and the administration had in mind, and as soon as that diagram was completed a meeting was to be called by Mr. Brown of the committee, and then the committee was to take up the question as to whether they would agree to the proposition in whole or in part, or disagree to it all.

For the information of the Senate I wish to say that Mr. Brown told me day before yesterday, at the conference to which I have already referred, that it would be perhaps a couple of weeks longer before that tentative plan would be ready to submit to the committee. The very first day it is ready, Mr. Brown said, he would call the committee together, and when the committee is called together then the committee will pass upon the plan as submitted. The committee may not agree to a single proposition that is brought to it by Mr. Brown. But I want to assure the Senator from Mississippi that no proposition will be presented to the Senate and the House of Representatives until a majority of that committee passes upon it and agrees to it and a bill covering the conclusions of the committee agreed upon and presented perhaps at the same time in both Houses.

I have been perhaps a little impatient myself. I thought perhaps it would have been better to have the committee called together and report progress, but in looking at the minutes, I will say to the Senator from Mississippi, I find that was not what we voted to have done. We voted to have the chairman provide a suggested plan, and when that work was done to call the committee together and let the committee consider it.

Mr. HARRISON. As I understood it, Mr. President, we were to have a survey made and the chairman was to try to present a plan to us, but this report in the paper quotes Mr. Brown as saying that the committee was for the plan he had in mind.

Mr. SMOOT. That is a mistake on the part of the paper.

Mr. HARRISON. I would have said nothing about it if it had not gone as far as that.

Mr. SMOOT. I suppose, when I read that article, I felt just as the Senator from Mississippi did when he read it. I knew that there was a mistake in the article, and I did not believe that Mr. Brown would make a statement for publication to that effect, and I am quite sure that he did not. But I am quite sure that, as chairman of that committee, he did say that his idea was a consolidation of the War and Navy Departments. That is probably what he said, and the newspaper reporter has taken it that he spoke for the committee. He did not, and, of course, he does not claim to speak for it; and I am quite sure that it will not be presented to the Senate, as I have already stated, until a majority of the committee agree upon the plan itself.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I was very sorry to hear the explanation of the Senator from Utah [Mr. Smoot]. I had hoped that at some time in the future, if not now, the entire self-defense of the United States would be united in one department, and that there would be a department of self-defense covering both naval and military affairs. For a Government which has no department of peace, no public officer whose business it is to cultivate peace, it is bad enough to have two departments whose business it is to cultivate war. I had hoped that at some time in the future these two military and naval departments might be coalesced, and that the United States, in order to define itself before the civilization of the world, might call it the department of self-defense.

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator from Mississippi yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Certainly.

Mr. SMOOT. I hope the Senator did not draw the conclusion from what I stated that that might not happen. I did say that the committee had not passed upon it, and it would not be reported to the Congress until the committee did pass upon it. I do not say that the committee will not agree to it, but I do say that Mr. Brown, the chairman of the committee, is in favor of that proposition.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understood the Senator from Utah, I think, quite completely; and in what I am saying now I am surely not attempting to misrepresent him. I express regret, however, that he felt compelled to explain that the so-called interview with Mr. Brown was not correct. I had hoped that it was.

I understand that they intend to call this new department the department of public welfare. I do not much like that phraseology, because the Republican Party and its political predecessor, the Federalist Party, have gone on passing all sorts of legislation from year to year under the theory that some authority was granted to the Federal Government on account of public welfare, when, of course, if there had been any such grant to the Federal Government, all the balance of the Federal Constitution would have been nude words.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. "General welfare."

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator from Connecticut corrects me and tells me that his party and its predecessor, the Federalist Party, used the term "general welfare," which is still more obnoxious than "public welfare," because general welfare might be the general welfare of JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS, or of KENTON, or of somebody else.

However, I never want to see a department named the department of public welfare or of general welfare. When it comes to saying what welfare is, it is religious, psychological, metaphysical, sociological, agricultural, industrial, exegetical, and almost everything else. There is no end to it of any kind. No human being can define its limitations. But I would like to see a department of public defense, or of national defense, a better phrase, in which the aerial service, the military service, and the naval service would all be united for one great and general and coordinate purpose.

I hope that if, as the Senator from Utah has stated, this is the view of the chairman of the commission, that view may spread to all the commission, that it may spread after that to the House of Representatives and the Senate, thence to the American people, and thence to the entire world, and that in every country in the world instead of having a lot of people gathered together for offensive military purposes, each Government may have one general department of national defense, and that all the balance of the world may understand that that department exists only for defense.

This morning one of the most intelligent ladies I ever met came into my office with a postal-card plan of Americanization, as she called it. After she had gotten through with her pledge to the Declaration of Independence, in which all men were declared to be equal, self-evidently a falsehood, of course, and had gotten through with the Constitution of the United States and the declaration of fidelity to that, it went on then to pledge all the school children of the United States to fidelity to an oath to resist foreign enemies. "Defend us from foreign enemies," was the phraseology of her card. I asked if she would object to adding to it one little phrase. I said, "Would you mind adding this, 'And defend us under the grace of God from making needless enemies of other people'?"

It struck me, in view of some things that have happened lately in America, that we needed that conclusion so as not to lead us into fratricidal strife with Great Britain to satisfy a few hatreds in America and not to lead us into a useless war with Japan to satisfy a few people out on a limb cultivating that sort of antagonism.

If I could have my way, Mr. President, I would have in addition to this new proposed department another one. I would have a secretary for peace, whose business it would be aiding the secretary of foreign affairs, whom we call the Secretary of State, to cultivate pleasant relations with all peoples.

I delivered a lecture last summer in Memphis upon the subject of international nagging. Newspapers, demagogues, politicians, so-called statesmen, in one country and another spend most of their time nagging the newspapers, politicians, demagogues, and statesmen of other countries into mutual antagonism. When I remember that Dante was an Italian, when I remember that Molière was a Frenchman, when I remember that Edmund Burke was an Irishman, and Tom Moore was another, that the elder Pitt was an Englishman, that Simon de Montfort was an Englishman, that George Washington was an Englishman by birth and training and character, but an American by self-choice, when I remember the names of the great Polish authors, singers, and composers, it seems to me that there is no excuse for this mutual nagging that goes on all the time in public meetings by men who have selected themselves as exponents of national voice and national will, and in the newspapers, especially the yellow journals of a peculiar type easily recognized, spreading from New York to San Francisco, and the same sort of type elsewhere, seeming purposely to be cultivating all the unpleasant things.

The pleasant things between nations, like the pleasant things between sects in the church, are a hundredfold where there is one unpleasant thing.

The various sects of the church and all the various churches, including not only the sects in the Christian Church but Mohammedanism and Hinduism and the balance of them, agree upon a few essential starting points, consecration to God and love of men, and the balance of it is very largely inconsequential. It is the same thing between nations.

The Senate and the body at the other end of the Capitol, and here lately apparently the White House, have allowed themselves in the past and are now perhaps permitting themselves to be controlled by this endless, senseless international nagging. Why, we got to the point at one time where we were going to take part in a plot between Yugoslavia and Italy. Half of the newspapers of the United States were filled full of denunciations of Italy and the other half of them filled full of denunciations of Yugoslavia. Finally, Yugoslavia and Italy just quietly met and they settled their differences without any regard to us. They settled them because they never had any essential differences, and settled them substantially in accord with the views of the American diplomat, Mr. Wilson, who sat in the council at Versailles.

To go back to where I started, I hope, Mr. President, that the Senator from Utah is mistaken and that the view which he expressed is not only the view of the chairman of the commission, but will ultimately be the view of the entire commission.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, August 1, 1921.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon and was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore, Mr. TOWNER.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O God, our Heavenly Father, we would strike eternal covenant with Thee. So frail we are that oftentimes we are like the bubble upon the crest of the wave. Reconcile our wills with Thy will and unite our hearts with Thy heart. Then shall there be a beautiful harmony between our Father and His children, and through the righteous wisdom of a righteous God all things shall work together for good. Through Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday, July 29, was read and approved.

ESTABLISHMENT IN THE TREASURY DEPARTMENT OF A VETERANS' BUREAU.

Mr. SWEET. Mr. Speaker, I ask permission to file a conference report on H. R. 6611, for printing in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the title. The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 6611. To establish in the Treasury Department a veterans' bureau and to improve the facilities and service of such bureau, and further to amend and modify the war risk insurance act.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I suppose the report is filed as a matter of right. Can the gentleman tell us when this will be called up for consideration?

Mr. SWEET. If the Senate adopts the conference report to-day it will be called up to-morrow.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The Senate has the papers? Is it a complete report?

Mr. SWEET. A complete and unanimous report.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether the gentleman is correct or the calendar is in error, but the calendar states the papers are with the House.

Mr. SWEET. My contention has been that the House is entitled to the papers. There has arisen a dispute as to which is entitled to the papers. The facts are that Senator SMOOT made a motion immediately after the passage of the bill that the Senate insist on the Senate amendments and ask for a conference. It came to the House and I asked to disagree to the Senate amendments and agree to the conference asked for. The papers were sent back to the Senate, and the Senate took the papers to the conference. They insist that they are entitled to the papers.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. If that is the situation, the papers should come to the House. If the Senate asked for a conference in the first instance, the House is entitled to the papers.

Mr. SWEET. The Senate asked for a conference.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Then the papers should come to the House and be acted upon first by the House.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I do not suppose it is possible to teach the Senate parliamentary law by any action we take in the House. They used to know in the Senate that the papers were transferred when a conference agreement was reached. The Senate having in its possession the papers when the conference report was signed, the papers should have been turned over by the Senate conferees to the House conferees. The House that agrees to the conference acts on it first. Several times lately the Senate conferees, ignorant of parliamentary procedure, have insisted where they had the papers that they should retain them after the conference agreement had been reached.

Mr. SWEET. I will say that immediately after the conference and after we had unanimously agreed, I insisted that the House was entitled to the papers, and they claimed that the Senate was entitled to them.

Mr. MANN. As I say, they do not know yet; they have not discovered it. They have discharged or let go a large number of their employees who did know about such things and now they do not seem to know the correct parliamentary procedure.

Mr. GARNER. Does not the gentleman know that under the present procedure the House always accedes to the Senate's demand?

Mr. MANN. I know that when the Underwood tariff bill was up and this question was raised the House that was not entitled to the papers had possession of the papers and brought the tariff conference report into the House. The Speaker held—I will not say incorrectly—that while they had violated parliamentary procedure the question was who actually had the papers, and as we had them we proceeded to dispose of the conference report. It was a bad precedent.

Mr. GARNER. That only illustrates the power of the House in the present régime. The Senate is the most powerful now, while the House was the more powerful at that time.

Mr. MANN. At that time we were acting the hog and now the Senate is acting the hog.

Mr. GARNER. That is what I object to.

Mr. MANN. Oh, the gentleman does not care as long as he is acting the hog. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The conference report will be printed under the rule.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 430. An act to protect the name and insignia of the World War organizations.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 430. An act to protect the name and insignia of the World War organizations; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

JOINT COMMISSION OF AGRICULTURAL INQUIRY.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following resolution, which I ask to have read:

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House concurrent resolution 26.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the time for the completion of the investigation by the Joint Commission of Agricultural Inquiry, created by Senate concurrent resolution No. 4, of the present session, and the filing of the report to Congress therein directed to be made, be, and the same is hereby, extended to a date not later than the first Monday in January, 1922.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the concurrent resolution?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, when does the time expire?

Mr. ANDERSON. On the 7th of September. We expect to make a partial report at that time.

Mr. MANN. Is there any instance where one of these commissions has been appointed and has reported within the time fixed?

Mr. ANDERSON. I do not know of one.

Mr. MANN. Then the gentleman is following the precedents. [Laughter.]

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman advise us whether he expects to report in January?

Mr. ANDERSON. I think we will report before January. We expect to make a partial report before the 7th of September, and a final report at least by the convening of the Congress in regular session in December.

Mr. WINGO. Does the gentleman's commission intend to go out of the city to make an investigation?

Mr. ANDERSON. We have no such intention at this time.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman expects to conclude the hearings in the city of Washington?

Mr. ANDERSON. That is the present intention of the commission.

Mr. WINGO. Nothing has arisen that leads the gentleman to think there is any necessity for going elsewhere?

Mr. ANDERSON. We have had several requests that that be done, among them an invitation to go to the city of Chicago, but so far the commission has not accepted any invitation of that sort and, so far as I know, does not expect to.

Mr. WINGO. I suggest to the gentleman that if he wants to know anything about the workings of the credit system of the Federal reserve bank, he can not get all the desired information sitting here in Washington.

Mr. ANDERSON. We will get the people here who do know about it.

Mr. WINGO. I doubt very seriously if the gentleman can get country bankers and farmers to come to Washington unless they are brought here by some sort of organization that will arrange to have them come.

Mr. ANDERSON. That can be done.

Mr. WINGO. I doubt very seriously if the gentleman will be able to get some men here voluntarily who really could give him some very necessary information. I do not think he can get them to come to Washington, as a fear of certain consequences makes some hesitate to offer open criticism of the workings and administration of the Federal reserve system. I want the gentleman to make his investigation thorough and complete.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

CALENDAR FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will call the Calendar for Unanimous Consent.

EXCHANGE OF CERTAIN LANDS IN HAWAII.

The first business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 4598) to provide for the exchange of Government lands for privately owned lands in the Territory of Hawaii.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may go over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California that the bill go over without prejudice? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. KAHN. Without losing its place.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is the understanding of the Chair—that it shall not lose its place.

REERECTION OF STATUE OF ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was H. J. Res. 127, to reerect the statue of Abraham Lincoln upon its original site.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, let us have the matter reported.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House joint resolution (H. J. Res. 127) to reerect the statue of Abraham Lincoln upon its original site.

Resolved, etc. That the Superintendent of Public Buildings and Grounds of the War Department be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to reerect the statue of Abraham Lincoln upon its original site in front of the courthouse, city of Washington, D. C., upon an appropriate foundation or pedestal in harmony with the statue.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, as I understand it, this is to put back in Judiciary Square this horrible statue of Abraham Lincoln that used to be there.

Mr. KING. In reply to the gentleman, varying somewhat, I would say that it is to return the first monument ever erected to Abraham Lincoln, which men of high authority in the artistic world say is one of the most artistic monuments ever erected, and that it is the best likeness of Lincoln that has ever been carved in stone.

Mr. MANN. If anyone who claims to be a high authority in the artistic world says that, then a plain, humble American citizen would say that he does not know anything about art or statuary. It always seemed to me a libel on the country and on Lincoln. Of course the statue was erected there by the people of the city of Washington, who seemed to be unduly excited about having it returned to its place. I thanked God when it was taken down and removed.

Mr. KING. I am sorry that was the sentiment of the gentleman.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, still reserving the right to object, I would like to hear some explanation of it.

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, I shall be very glad to do the best I can. If the Speaker of this House would take the time and the rules of the House would justify him in leaving the chair for about 30 minutes, and would accompany me down B Street Southwest to the corner of Delaware Avenue, I would stop with him somewhere in front of what some gentlemen might consider to be a country churchyard, and being a gentleman of poetic inclination, he might commence to quote immediately from Gray's "Elegy in a Country Churchyard." But that is not the case. This place seems to have been what was once a monument works, and in the yard, now grown up with grass, there are to be seen many monuments standing there, showing that at sometime or other there must have been living there a man of artistic temperament. At one end you will see a replica of the statute of Winged Victory, and numerous other artistic designs.

Going up the walk and through the grass and timothy growing up there we come to a door, and opening the door we are met by an old man about 80 years of age, still living in the shadow of the Capitol, a man across whose brow is written intelligence, a man whose arm indicates that at one time he wielded the chisel as an artist. This man is Mr. Lot Flannery, still living in the old shack of a house there, perhaps in penury and want—I do not know—in the shadow of the Dome.

If you will go back with me 53 years or a little more, we will find ourselves standing in Judiciary Square in front of the City Hall, at the junction of John Marshall Place, B Street, Louisiana Avenue, and Indiana Avenue. A great crowd is beginning to gather in that vicinity, large platforms have been erected, and there stands a pedestal with a statue on top of it, covered with a linen cloth. About the hour of 1.30 o'clock in the afternoon we can hear the guns booming down at F Street, where Engine Company No. 2 is shooting off an old fieldpiece.

Pretty soon the parade commences to start there at F and Ninth Streets, and finally it lands at the place of dedication. Here we have a parade which was of some distinction, headed by the Grand Lodge of Masons, marshaled by A. M. Howard and headed by the Marine Band and followed by the Sons of Temperance, headed by the band of the Twelfth United States Infantry; Good Templars, sublodges, headed by Heald's Band of 17 pieces, and Knights of Pythias Grand Lodge, which has marched from the Navy Yard. It is now 2 o'clock, Mr. Speaker, and the grounds are crowded with people. The stage is filled with distinguished men and women—diplomats, artists, authors, and generals of the Civil War. The band plays a selection from the new opera, "The Bohemian Girl":

The heart bowed down with weight of woe—

We remember the lines—

But memory is the only friend
That grief can call its own.

The invocation is being pronounced. The dedication exercises being under the Masons, the master is pronouncing the final word. The grand master gives three raps with his gavel on the foundation and we hear him say:

I now pronounce this foundation properly prepared, well laid, true, and trusty; and this statue, erected by the citizens of Washington to the memory of Abraham Lincoln, duly and fully dedicated to the American people.

Hon. B. B. French, the orator of the day, who was at one time mayor of the city, and also public buildings commissioner under Abraham Lincoln, is beginning his oration. He is saying:

Who can ever forget that night of horror when the awful intelligence was borne by the telegraphic wires all through the land that Abraham Lincoln had been struck down by the hands of an assassin.

"Oh, night of woe,
"How are you joined with hell in triple knot."

It does not require any monument or any words to perpetuate the memory of that great and good and pure man. Monumental marble may crumble into dust; bronze may melt away; granite may perish from the earth; but the memory of Abraham Lincoln shall live in human bosoms and be perpetuated on the living pages of history as long as any nation or people shall exist on earth. [Applause.]

But it is a satisfaction and a pleasure, tinged with melancholy, to look upon that venerated form and to view those features which, whatever else they may indicate, if true to the life, will glow with goodness, kindness, and love, and whereon never rested for a moment a single characteristic other than such as gave outward proof of a good and loving heart, a conscience void of offense, and charity toward all mankind. Oh, heaven, that such a man should have died in such a time and in such a manner!

I hardly know, my fellow citizens, where to begin on an occasion like this. Although the field is ample it has been thoroughly gleaned by the pen of the historian and the harvest has been garnered in the bosoms of a loving people. Still I am aware of your affection for his memory, and that you never tire in listening to a rehearsal of his virtues. [Cries of "Never!"]

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. KING. I will yield.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman really believe himself when Congress has constructed the most beautiful memorial in the world to Lincoln that at the same time we ought to provide for the erection of a statue designed and completed by a gravestone artist?

Mr. KING. I will answer that question by saying if the gentleman would permit me to cover his point in a moment I would be very glad to reply to him—

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, if there is to be objection, I think in justice to gentlemen who are interested in other bills that we should know it. It is hardly worth while to take up time in this matter if there is to be objection.

Mr. KING. Very well. I wanted to answer the question of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. Yes or no will answer the question.

Mr. KING. But the gentleman indulges in an assumption to which I do not agree.

Mr. MANN. Which one, in reference to the memorial—

Mr. MONDELL. Or the gravestone artist.

Mr. KING. Mr. Flannery was known as a celebrated artist long before there was record of the Fine Arts Commission in the city of Washington.

Mr. MANN. Well, I do not know. I have always understood he was an artist for a graveyard.

Mr. KING. He is in his penury, perhaps, but he was one of the celebrated artists of this country, and I want to read in that connection—

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I am very anxious, of course, that the other bills upon the calendar may be reached. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KING. I am trying to finish the question asked by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the regular order.

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. KING. Will the gentleman withhold that objection long enough to permit me to finish my statement?

Mr. DYER. I did not object, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. I do object.

Mr. KING. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MOORES] did not object when it was asked by the Speaker if there was objection. Will the gentleman yield long enough for me to put in this statement?

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. No.

Mr. KING. Then I will make the point of no quorum. That is the only remedy there is, and that is not much of a one.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of no quorum. The Chair will count.

The Speaker pro tempore proceeded to count.

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will withdraw his objection to enable me to proceed long enough to show that this is a work of art, say for three minutes, I will withdraw the point of no quorum.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, well; we ought to have a quorum.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent—

Mr. MANN. You can not until the point of no quorum is developed.

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the objection until the gentleman from Illinois answers the question.

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the point of no quorum.

Mr. BLANTON. I renew it, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. King] withdraws the point of no quorum, and the gentleman from Texas renews it. The Chair will continue to count.

The Chair again proceeded to count.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, in order to help the Chair, I will withdraw the point.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is, Is there objection?

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. I do object to taking it up this morning, but I will reserve the objection temporarily, until the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KING] can conclude his statement.

Mr. BLANTON. I reserve the right to object in order to ask the gentleman a question. I want to ask the one gentleman from Illinois whether or not this is a frame up between him and the other gentleman from Illinois to let the other gentleman get something off of his system?

Mr. MANN. This is no frame up. This is bona fide.

Mr. KING. I know the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is anxious to hear me explain this.

It might be stated that this statue, when it was taken away—

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. WINGO. This is a joint resolution, is it not?

Mr. KING. It is.

Mr. WINGO. Is not this subject covered by existing statute, and has not the President within the last three days issued an order which leaves this whole matter in the hands of the Fine Arts Commission?

Mr. KING. Not to my knowledge. I will say, on the other hand, the President has written a letter to the committee, which appears in full in the hearings, asking for the restoration of this statue.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. KING. I will.

Mr. WINGO. I want information as to the law. Is there not a law now—I am not asking in a spirit of controversy—to the effect that the President has it in his power to put erection of all buildings, statues, and so forth, in the hands of the Fine Arts Commission, and this was done by an order he issued three days ago? And if you pass your joint resolution it is of no effect unless the Fine Arts Commission asks for it, is it?

Mr. MANN. This tells the Fine Arts Commission to "go to."

Mr. KING. That is what it does. And they ought to be told to "go to." They had no business to lay violent hands on this statue. [Applause.] In answer to that I want to read to you what the President wrote to the committee.

Mr. WINGO. Right on that point, I want to ask either one of the gentlemen from Illinois if a joint resolution can change an existing law on that?

Mr. MANN. Certainly. By joint resolution we can make law.

Mr. WINGO. That is correct, I was thinking of a concurrent resolution. This is a joint resolution, to be signed by the President.

Mr. KING. The President says:

I very recently received a call of a very notable delegation representing the Loyal Legion urging the reconsideration at the hands of Congress of the decision to remove the statue erected in memory of President Lincoln in front of the City Hall in 1868.

I assume that you are in possession of the history of the erection of this memorial to Lincoln as well as the action taken by Congress directing its removal. I am inclosing, however, with this letter copies of the papers left with me by the representatives of the Loyal Legion. It is such a fascinating story and there seems to be so much of appealing sentiment about the restoration of this statue to its original position that I think Congress might well expedite the reconsideration of the action previously taken, so that this memorial may be restored to the place it so long occupied.

I cordially believe the sentiment is one that we ought to sanction, and I am glad to express the hope that Congress will take favorable action in providing for the restoration. If there are any serious obstacles in the way, I shall be grateful if you will inform me, so that I may be helpful in any way possible in aiding to solve the situation.

And answering the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] I will say that while it was stated the statue was put in the basement of the court house it was really put in open storage down by the river bank, back of the old Bureau of Engraving and Printing, and there laid upon its back in a sort of a box, with the face exposed, and nothing but a piece of old burlap thrown over it. Mr. Freeman Thorp, the only man who painted a picture of Lincoln from life, and which picture hangs in the corridor of the Senate, and also painted a picture of Schuyler Colfax, now in the lobby of the House, determined to find where the statue had been secreted. He went from place to place and finally found it in this exposed condition down by the river bank, back of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. And there this man went and crept about and found the face and removed the cloth and wiped off the dirt and the raindrops.

He said that the face almost spoke to him. He says:

I do not know who chiseled the head and face, but it was accurately done by some one who studied Lincoln from life as I did, and was not done from photographs. It is a better likeness of Lincoln than anything in plaster, stone, marble, or bronze that I have ever seen, and I have seen about all that have ever been made. Some have been made that are unquestionably great works of art, but the best of them are not accurate likenesses of him. This one is to those who, like myself, know Lincoln pleasing to look at, because it is accurately modeled, and in its simple truth is in keeping with the unassuming man we loved.

The trouble of it is that gentlemen have assumed that the statue is inartistic, which is not so, but the Fine Arts Commission by continually saying and repeating the words, "It is not artistic, it is not artistic," have finally hammered that into the minds of some of the Members, when, as a matter of fact, it is an artistic and accurate representation of the martyred President's face. Now, you can hammer things into people by repetition. How long ago was it, in 1916, when they hammered into the minds of the people throughout the country the idea, "He kept us out of war; he kept us out of war," until it was finally believed and accepted by the people as truth?

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. KING. In answer to my colleague from Illinois [Mr. MANN] I wish he would go down and look at that grand object, and perhaps he would then change his position.

Mr. MANN. I have looked at it so often that I have gotten black in the face.

Mr. KING. It was up 35 feet in the air. You must have had a spyglass to look at it with.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is heard. The bill is stricken from the calendar. The Clerk will report the next bill on the calendar.

ASSESSMENT WORK ON MINING CLAIMS.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 4813) changing the period for doing annual assessment work on unpatented mineral claims from the calendar year to the fiscal year beginning July 1 each year.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill?

Mr. ARENTZ. Mr. Speaker, I wish to offer an amendment to the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman in charge of the bill make a statement in regard to it?

Mr. HAYDEN. I shall be glad to.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I will reserve the right to object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill. The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2 of "An act to amend sections 2324 and 2325 of the Revised Statutes of the United States concerning mineral lands," approved January 22, 1880, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 2. That section 2324 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be amended by adding the following words: 'Provided, That the period within which the work required to be done annually on all unpatented mineral claims located since May 10, 1872, including such claims in the Territory of Alaska, shall commence on the 1st day of July succeeding the date of location of such claim: Provided further, That on all such valid existing claims the annual period ending December 31, 1920, shall continue to and include July 1, 1921, and the annual period to end December 31, 1921, shall continue to and include June 30, 1922.'"

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Nevada [Mr. ARENTZ] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ARENTZ: On page 2, line 1, after the word "commence," insert the words "at 12 o'clock meridian"; on page 2, line 3, after the word "further," strike out the proviso in lines 3, 4, 5, and 6 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "That on all such valid existing claims the annual period ending December 31, 1921, shall continue to 12 o'clock meridian, July 1, 1922."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Nevada is recognized.

Mr. ARENTZ. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say briefly that heretofore the annual assessment must have been done on or before December 31 at midnight. The mining claims as a general proposition are located in the high mountains, far from habitation, off the railroad, and, many times, off roads. This is a hardship in the location of claims on which the work has not been done, and this change of the time of doing assessment work until July 1 at 12 o'clock noon changes the time to a date when anyone can see their stakes not covered with snow, and the people who own the claims can do their work at any time from July 1 until the following July, having the same period in which to do the work as we have at the present time.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ARENTZ. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. There was so much confusion that I could not understand the gentleman's amendment. Does it do anything else except to fix the hour at 12 o'clock meridian instead of midnight?

Mr. ARENTZ. No. That is all that the amendment does.

Mr. WINGO. In other words, under the reading of the law at present and under the reading of the pending bill the time would expire at midnight. The gentleman would make it expire at 12 o'clock noon?

Mr. ARENTZ. Yes. The amendment would make it expire at 12 o'clock noon.

Mr. WINGO. Is that the only change?

Mr. ARENTZ. Yes. The reason for striking out the last three lines is for the purpose of making a definite statement in referring to something already passed. Instead of bringing in the words "ending December 31, 1920, and to continue until July 1, 1921," it specifically states that the time for doing the work in 1921 shall continue until July 1, 1922, and thereafter assessment work shall be done during the fiscal year instead of during the calendar year.

Mr. WINGO. Now, let us see. As to the proviso there that claims ending in the period December 31, 1921, shall continue until July 1, 1922, it is not necessary to put that in, because that is the existing law under the special act that we passed. Now, does the gentleman cut that out?

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ARENTZ. Yes.

Mr. HAYDEN. The reference to the six months' extension of time for doing the 1920 assessment work is surplusage now, because the 1st of July, 1921, has passed. There can be no useful purpose served by referring to it.

Mr. WINGO. I see the point now. We were discussing it in the committee, and we decided that that time was necessary. So the only change that the gentleman makes in the bill is to change it from the hour of midnight until 12 o'clock meridian?

Mr. HAYDEN. That is all the change that is made in the effect of the bill by the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nevada.

Mr. MANN. Not at all.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman from Illinois says not. He says the gentleman's amendment makes some other change?

Mr. MANN. Certainly it does.

Mr. ARENTZ. I do not so understand it.

Mr. MANN. Does not this extend the work under the gentleman's amendment from 1921 to 1922?

Mr. ARENTZ. The assessment work for 1920 must have been completed by July 1, 1921. For 1921 and hereafter assessment work must be completed at 12 o'clock noon July 1.

Mr. MANN. I would like to have the amendment reported again, if I may.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment will again be reported.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. MANN. That is as I understood it.

Mr. HAYDEN. It does not change the terms of the bill as originally reported from the committee.

Mr. MANN. It does not change the meaning of the bill.

Mr. HAYDEN. Not a bit.

Mr. MANN. It does not change the meaning of the bill, which is to give six months' additional time.

Mr. HAYDEN. That is the only way it could be done.

Mr. RHODES. The gentleman does not mean that it is to give six months' additional time?

Mr. MANN. The gentleman contradicts it, but it is a fact. He can explain his contradiction if he wishes to, but it does give six months' extra time, and that is the purpose of the bill.

Mr. RHODES. I should like to be heard.

Mr. ARENTZ. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. RHODES. The gentleman from Arizona is very gracious, and I thank him. Mr. Speaker, section 2324 of the Revised Statutes of the United States requires that certain annual assessment work on mining claims be done within the calendar year. The object of this bill is to change the time for doing annual assessment work from the calendar year to the fiscal year. That is the purpose of the proposed legislation. It will be remembered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], and every other Member of this House, that on the 31st day of last December the President signed a bill under which the time for doing annual assessment work under the provisions of section 2324 for the year 1920 was extended to July 1, 1921. Therefore the statement of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is correct in so far as it relates to the act last passed by Congress, extending the time in which to do the work, but this bill proposes now to amend section 2324 of the Revised Statutes of the United States requiring all claimants in the future to do annual assessment work within the fiscal year instead of the calendar year.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield for a question there?

Mr. RHODES. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. It is true that the bill does extend the period six months in one year, but that is done for this reason, that the committee had to make a choice between cutting off six months on the current year or extending it six months.

Mr. RHODES. Is it not a fact that all claimants were given six months' additional time in which to do this work?

Mr. WINGO. They were on the work to be done for 1920. We passed a special act giving them until July 1 of this year, the beginning of the fiscal year. Now, for a long time it has been urged that we change the period from the calendar year to the fiscal year.

This bill does that, but in undertaking to do that we are confronted with the proposition that on the work for the calendar year 1921 they have until December 31 under the statute; but if you amend the law and say that the assessment year shall be the fiscal year, then you will cut off the people who under the present statute have until December 31 to do their assessment work for 1921, and unless you extend the time until next July they will automatically be cut off under this statute changing the time from the calendar year to the fiscal year.

Mr. MANN. They would not be automatically cut off. The original law provided for one year.

Mr. WINGO. It would make it uncertain.

Mr. MANN. It would not make it uncertain at all. It would be absolutely certain that they would have the whole of this year.

Mr. WINGO. This bill was reported before the beginning of this fiscal year. Now, the presumption is that this bill will become a law before the end of this calendar year.

Mr. MANN. That is a rather violent presumption, but still it may be correct. I do not know.

Mr. WINGO. It may be in the face of conditions that exist now. I may be in error about this, and I want the judgment of the gentleman from Illinois. Suppose this bill is passed. Then if we did not put in the proviso giving them until next July a question would arise whether or not the time to do assessment work for 1921 had expired, because the fiscal year begins on July 1. In order to avoid that we simply provided that the assessment work that they might do up to December 31, 1921, might be done up to the end of the present fiscal year, and then, beginning with next July, from that time on the assessment work will be done on the basis of the fiscal year and not on the basis of the calendar year. There was no intention to give a further six months. That is not the motive of the bill.

Mr. MANN. Is not that the whole motive of the bill?

Mr. WINGO. No; the committee would refuse to do that.

Mr. MANN. I know, but that is what you are doing just the same. Here is a law that has been in force for more than 40 years, making the calendar year the period for doing assessment work. I have never heard any complaint about it, although I have heard complaints about everything else, by men from mining States. It has been in existence a long time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. WINGO. I ask recognition.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] desire recognition?

Mr. HAYDEN. I should like to have the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. Wingo] complete his statement.

Mr. WINGO. I think the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is in error about the motive back of this bill. I know that was not the intention of the committee.

Mr. ARENTZ. It was not my intention.

Mr. WINGO. I know in our committee and in the Senate the idea was to change from the calendar year to the fiscal year. Ever since I have been a member of the Committee on Mines and Mining there have been requests that we make that change. Now, the reason for it is this. Human nature is more or less procrastinating. Many figure, "Well, I have until the first of the calendar year," and they put it off until late in the fall and then they may have an early snow that will make it impossible to get to the claim before December 1, and many are in trouble that way. But if you put it at the end of the fiscal year, although the time may be short when they get in on June 1, they have the time in which they may do it although they have put it off to the end of the year. The idea back of the bill is not to get an extension of time, but it was to change the year from the calendar to the fiscal year in order to have the best time to do the work come at the end of the year.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. ARENTZ] was kind enough to submit his amendment to me in advance of offering it and I am glad to accept it. The wisdom of beginning the year in which assessment work must be done at noon instead of midnight will not be disputed by anyone who is at all familiar with the location of mining claims. There have been frequent disputes caused by two or more men going upon the same piece of ground in the middle of the night, often without seeing each other. Rights to mineral claims will henceforth be initiated when the sun is at meridian height, which is the beauty and glory of the day, instead of at that time of night—

When churchyards yawn and hell itself breathes out contagion to this world.

As to the bill proper, the arguments in favor of its enactment have been fully set forth in the report by the chairman of the Committee on Mines and Mining [Mr. RHODES] and by other gentlemen who have spoken here to-day. The desirability of changing the time for doing annual assessment work on mineral claims from the calendar year, beginning January 1, to the fiscal year, beginning July 1, has long been recognized and meets with the approval of practically all those engaged in prospecting and mining. As typical of many other statements in support of this change, let me quote from the Mining and Scientific Press, of San Francisco:

As we have suggested before, one excellent amendment to the present statute would change permanently the final date for performing the annual assessment work from January 1 to July 1. Congressional action taken some months ago extended for six months, or until July 1, 1921, the final date for the completion of the work for 1920; accordingly, it would be convenient to make the suggested change at this time.

In this connection it should not be forgotten that section 2 of the act to save daylight was not repealed, and consequently the United States standard time for the zone in which a mining claim is located will govern, and not the local or sun time. In Arizona, for example, where the standard time is about 30 minutes ahead of the sun, prospectors and claim owners will avoid difficulty by remembering this fact at high noon on July 1.

The law relating to such cases is as follows:

In all statutes, orders, rules, and regulations relating to the time of performance of any act by any officer or department of the United States, whether in the legislative, executive, or judicial branches of the Government, or relating to the time within which any rights shall accrue or determine, or within which any act shall or shall not be performed by any person subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, it shall be understood and intended that the time shall be the United States standard time of the zone within which the act is to be performed. (40 Stat., 541.)

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, one reasonable explanation of why this should be done is that to get to many of these mining properties it is necessary to build a temporary road, which will perhaps be washed out during the next winter, but if the time for the development work, if the year can be made the fiscal year, then they can go in, we will say, in May of this next year and can do the work for that fiscal year.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is getting the fiscal year and the calendar year mixed up.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Oh, no; they can go in in May and do the work for that year, and then they can remain over 60 days and do the work for the succeeding year. So that instead of building a road every year they can build the road once in two years, and do a part of the work before July 1 and a part of the work for the next year after July 1.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman's statement sounds reasonable.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. I think that is the best argument why this change should be made.

Mr. ARENTZ. Mr. Speaker, in many sections of the country it is impossible to get to these mining properties between September 1 and May 1. These men looking for unlocated mining claims travel during the months of July, August, September, and October. If they come across a claim that there has not been any work done on it, they see absolutely all traces of the work wiped out.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. All time for debate has expired, and the question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nevada.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. RHODES, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

CONSOLIDATION OF FOREST LANDS WITHIN THE CLEARWATER, ST. JOE, AND SELWAY NATIONAL FORESTS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 77) for the consolidation of forest lands within the Clearwater, St. Joe, and Selway National Forests.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, authorized to accept on behalf of the United States title to any lands within or near the Clearwater, St. Joe, or Selway National Forests, if in the opinion of the Secretary of Agriculture the public interests will be benefited thereby and the lands are chiefly valuable for national forest purposes, and in exchange therefor may give not to exceed an equal value of such national forest land or timber, or other Government land, nonirrigable and not suitable for the raising of agricultural crops except grass, in Idaho, as may be determined by the Secretary of Agriculture or the Secretary of the Interior and acceptable to the owner as fair compensation: Provided, That all selections made and patents issued under the provisions of this act shall be subject to and contain a reservation to the United States of all the coal and other minerals in the lands so entered and patented, together with the right to prospect for, mine, and remove the same, as is provided for under section 9 of the act of June 29, 1916 (39 Stat., p. 862), for lands patented thereunder to entrymen.

Timber given in such exchanges shall be cut and removed under the direction and supervision and in accordance with the requirements of the Secretary of Agriculture. Lands conveyed to the United States under this act shall become parts of the national forest within or near to which they are situated.

With the following committee amendments:

Amend page 1, line 4, by inserting the words "in his discretion" after the word "authorized."

Amend page 1, line 10, after the word "other," by inserting the word "unreserved."

Amend page 2, line 7, by striking out the word "June" and inserting the word "December."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 5, after the word "within," strike out the words "or near."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. FRENCH, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

RETIRED COMMISSIONED AND WARRANT OFFICERS, UNITED STATES NAVY.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 6993) for the relief of retired commissioned and warrant officers of the United States Navy and Marine Corps.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. MANN. That bill is included within the bill now pending before the House under special order. Is there any reason for keeping it on the calendar?

Mr. BEGG. I was not aware that it is in that bill.

Mr. MANN. This very item passed the committee the other day.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made, and the bill is stricken from the calendar.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have a reservation for a moment if I may?

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the objection.

Mr. MANN. I hope we can fix it in some way so that when we finally act on it it may be stricken from the calendar.

Mr. BLANTON. It is in the other bill?

Mr. MANN. It is in the other bill that is pending now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and this very item has been passed in committee.

Mr. BLACK. Unless the gentleman desires to make a statement in respect to the bill, I object to its consideration.

Mr. BEGG. I have no desire to take up the time of the House.

Mr. MANN. I would rather leave it on the calendar and then strike it off the next time entirely.

Mr. BEGG. Why not strike it off now?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made, and the Clerk will report the next bill.

ELECTRIC LIGHT, ETC., HAMAKUA, HAWAII.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 6208) to authorize and provide for the manufacture, maintenance, distribution, and supply of electric light and power within the district of Hamakua, on the island of Hawaii, Territory of Hawaii.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. CURRY. Mr. Speaker, this bill is included in Senate bill 2062, which is on the House Calendar, and I therefore ask that this bill be passed over.

Mr. MANN. It is also on the Unanimous Consent Calendar.

Mr. CURRY. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. There is another bill—H. R. 6674—on this calendar, which is also included within that bill, is there not?

Mr. CURRY. There are five bills on the calendar, but they have not yet been reached.

Mr. WINGO. Would it not be better to have them all passed over?

Mr. MANN. I think it better be passed over as it comes up, so that the Clerk may keep track of it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

SHOSHONE NATIONAL FOREST.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 2205) to add certain lands on the North Fork of the Shoshone River to the Shoshone National Forest.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the chairman of the committee advise us of the necessity for this?

Mr. SINNOTT. It was really supposed when this forest was created that the land in question was within the boundaries of the forest, but since that time they have projected the boundaries and have found that the land in question is not within the forest, and they wish to include this within the forest. It is really one of the entrances to the Yellowstone National Park.

Mr. WINGO. This is public land, I presume.

Mr. SINNOTT. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. And what character of land is it?

Mr. SINNOTT. It is of the same character as the adjoining forest—rocky and has timber upon it. It is almost identically the same land as the adjoining land.

Mr. WINGO. Is any objection offered to it?

Mr. SINNOTT. No; there has been no objection to it. The Interior Department and the Agriculture Department both approve the measure.

Mr. WINGO. There is no objection from any source?

Mr. SINNOTT. No.

Mr. WINGO. And this is to correct an error in the original formation of the park?

Mr. SINNOTT. We have had no objection to it.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what is the probable acreage of this addition?

Mr. SINNOTT. About 2,800 acres.

Mr. BLANTON. And there is no intent to buy any private land?

Mr. SINNOTT. No; this is all public land, being incorporated into the present forest.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following-described lands are hereby added to the Shoshone National Forest, Wyo., and made subject to all laws applicable to national forests: West half of section 17, all of sections 18 and 19, west half of section 20, west half of section 29, all of section 30, township 52 north, range 105 west, all of the sixth principal meridian, Wyoming.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, a moment ago the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] asked me about whether we were taking any private land. We are not taking in any private land, but 80 acres of this land have been privately disposed of by the Government, but of course the Government has not taken that over.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken, and the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. SINNOTT, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

RETIRED COMMISSIONED AND WARRANT OFFICERS, UNITED STATES NAVY.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. 6993) for the relief of retired commissioned and warrant officers of the United States Navy and Marine Corps, lately under consideration, be stricken from the calendar inasmuch as it is incorporated in H. R. 7864.

Mr. BLANTON. It has already been stricken from the calendar.

Mr. MANN. It has been stricken from the Unanimous Consent Calendar, but the gentleman from Ohio was asking to have it stricken from the Union Calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio, that the bill be stricken from the Union Calendar?

There was no objection.

EASEMENTS OVER CERTAIN LANDS IN NORTH AND SOUTH DAKOTA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 252) to amend an act approved February 22, 1889, entitled "An act to provide for the division of Dakota into two States and to enable the people of North Dakota, South Dakota, Montana, and Washington to form constitutions and State Governments, and to be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States, and to make donations of public lands to such States."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the new law is contained in the two provisos, as I understand it?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes. It covers the four States, and the new matter is in the proviso.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Well, may I ask the gentleman—the first proviso reads:

Provided, however, That the State may upon such terms as it may prescribe, that such easements or rights in such lands as may be acquired in, to, or over the land of private property through proceedings in eminent domain.

What is the intent of that?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I will have to read from the report of the committee, I will say to the gentleman. This bill is in reference to the leasing of certain lands for limited periods—

Mr. BURTNESS. If the gentleman will allow me, I think I can make a brief explanation.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I will be glad to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BURTNESS. The provision is this: Under a strict interpretation of the enabling act as passed, it is very doubtful whether those States can even grant a highway over these school lands without going through proceedings for a public sale. The only purpose of the bill is to make it possible for the State to convey lands for public purposes such as highways.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Does that refer to lands granted to the States originally?

Mr. BURTNESS. That refers to lands granted to the States originally, sections 16 and 36 being for school purposes or school lands, and in the enabling act there was incorporated certain conditions with reference to the conveyance thereof by the State.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. That is to say, it was not granted in fee.

Mr. BURTNESS. They were granted in fee, but there was a condition in the enabling act that they must be by public sale at not less than $10 per acre, and so forth, and prior to the time that they are disposed of they may be leased, but they can not be leased for a longer period than five years.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Now let me see if I get it clear. You provide here that these easements may be granted through proceedings in eminent domain.

Mr. BURTNESS. No; the same sort of an easement may be granted by the State that may be obtained under the laws of the States in proceedings in eminent domain. For instance, a private party can not come in and get an easement to this land. It is only for something public; that is, public uses, like road officials in the counties and townships where they desire a road across these school lands. They may in the case of private property go into court and get the land through proceedings in eminent domain, or in case of a railroad desiring to build over school lands.

Mr. MANN. In other words, in this case it is like where the State would condemn private property for a road?

Mr. BURTNESS. That is it exactly. But under the terms of this first proviso the State may then grant the land outright to a quasi public corporation or municipality which desires the land for that purpose.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It may grant such easements as may be acquired by proceedings in eminent domain over private property.

Mr. BURTNESS. That is it precisely; that is the intent.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURTNESS. I will, with the permission of the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. WINGO. I notice the language which the gentleman says gives the State the right to make a grant as under proceedings in cases where private individuals or a railroad corporation would have the right under eminent domain proceedings to procure the desired rights—that the object of this proviso is to authorize the State to make that grant without eminent domain proceedings.

Mr. BURTNESS. Upon such terms as the State may prescribe.

Mr. WINGO. I notice the proviso says the State may upon such terms as it may prescribe grant, how; through proceedings in eminent domain. In other words—

Mr. BURTNESS. Although this is not my bill, it is a Senate bill. I think the words "through proceedings in eminent domain" do not qualify the word "grant."

Mr. WINGO. It says "grant such easements or rights in such lands as may be acquired in"—

Mr. BURTNESS. "As may be acquired in, to, or over" such lands in proceeding in eminent domain.

Mr. WINGO. Through proceedings in eminent domain. In other words, you are making the test this: If it were a proceeding in eminent domain over the land of private individuals then if it is the land in question the State may in that particular case grant an easement over—

Mr. BURTNESS. Exactly, under such rules as the legislature may prescribe.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I want to ask the gentleman—I suppose from the second proviso there must have been some reservation under the original act of mineral lands?

Mr. BURTNESS. None whatever.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. What does the second proviso do?

Mr. BURTNESS. In the original act the fee is conveyed, but there are certain conditions and qualifications made in reference to the sale of the land for the purpose of protecting the school funds. They can not be sold for less than $10 an acre. They must also be sold at public sale, at appraised values, and so forth. But until they are sold they may be leased. The present act prescribes they can not be leased for more than five years. The gentlemen understand that that period is entirely satisfactory for agricultural and grazing lands, but in the case of lands that have been found to be mineral in their character it is deemed advisable to be allowed to lease them for more than five years in order to develop them properly and ascertain the real value thereof, and things of that sort, and to get revenue in the meantime. It particularly applies to conditions in Montana and Washington and in the western part of the States of South Dakota and North Dakota.

Mr. MANN. This follows the provisions of the leasing act?

Mr. BURTNESS. It is analogous to that as to the time limit of 20 years in this bill.

Mr. PARRISH. To what fund will the proceeds from oil and gas and minerals go? I notice in your original act it provides they shall go to a specific fund.

Mr. BURTNESS. It goes to the school fund.

Mr. PARRISH. Is this covered by the original act?

Mr. BURTNESS. Certainly. This is adding a provision to one section of the enabling act.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 252) to amend an act approved February 22, 1889, entitled "An act to provide for the division of Dakota into two States and to enable the people of North Dakota, South Dakota, Montana, and Washington to form constitutions and State governments, and to be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States, and to make donations of public lands to such States."

Be it enacted, etc., That section 11 of the act entitled "An act to provide for the division of Dakota into two States and to enable the people of North Dakota, South Dakota, Montana, and Washington to form constitutions and State governments, and to be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States, and to make donations of public lands to such States," approved February 22, 1889, be, and the same hereby is, amended by adding the following: Provided, however, That the State may, upon such terms as it may prescribe, grant such easements or rights in such lands as may be acquired in, to, or over the lands of private properties through proceedings in eminent domain: And provided further, That any of such granted lands found, after title thereto has vested in the State, to be mineral in character, may be leased for a period not longer than 20 years upon such terms and conditions as the legislature may prescribe.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BURTNESS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ELECTRIC CURRENT, WATER POWER, ETC., IN HAWAII.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 6674) to authorize and provide for the manufacture, maintenance, distribution, and supply of electric current for light and power within Kapaa and Waipouli, in the district of Kawaihau, on the island and county of Kauai, Territory of Hawaii.

Mr. CURRY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill, No. 59 on the calendar, and Nos. 60, 61, and 62, being House bills, as follows, H. R. 6674, H. R. 6209, H. R. 6672, and H. R. 6211, be passed for the present, for the reason that they are included in the bill S. 2062, that bill being on the House calendar and on the Unanimous Consent Calendar of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent that the bills to which he has referred be passed without prejudice. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

AMERICAN LEGION MEMORIAL BUILDING, ABILENE, TEX.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 6514) granting Parramore Post, No. 57, American Legion, permission to construct a memorial building on the Federal site at Abilene, Tex.

The title was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to have an explanation of this bill.

Mr. BLANTON. I will state to the gentleman from Illinois that in Abilene, Tex., the Federal Government owns a whole block of ground, upon the south side of which is the Federal post office and courthouse. On the opposite side of this block the Parramore Post of the American Legion has sought to build a memorial building to commemorate its dead. Some of the men from that city and county were killed during the war, and the post has raised the money to construct a memorial building to their memory. The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds brought in a unanimous report in favor of the bill granting them this easement. I introduced this bill in the House and Senator SHEPPARD introduced a companion bill to it in the Senate.

Mr. MANN. What kind of a building is to be constructed?

Mr. BLANTON. It is to be a fireproof building. It will not increase the fire hazard at all, and it is to be constructed in accordance with plans to be approved by the Treasury Department of the United States.

Mr. MANN. I do not know about that. Does the Government propose to take care of it?

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, no. What I mean is the plans and specifications will be approved by the Treasury Department.

Mr. MANN. What is the purpose of the building?

Mr. BLANTON. It is a memorial building in honor of the ex-service men.

Mr. MANN. What is the purpose of the building? For what is it to be used?

Mr. BLANTON. For American Legion meetings and proper public uses and for no other purpose.

Mr. MANN. There appears to be no restriction as to what the building is to be used for.

Mr. BLANTON. I believe it provides that in case they cease to use it for a memorial building it shall revert immediately back to the United States—the building itself.

Mr. MANN. No; it does not. It provides the easement shall continue as long as the building shall be devoted to the original purpose.

Mr. BLANTON. That is the clause to which I referred, and in effect it provides for the reversion mentioned.

Mr. MANN. What is the original purpose?

Mr. BLANTON. A memorial building. It is for the meetings, of course, of the Parramore Post of the American Legion.

Mr. MANN. There is nothing here about meetings. It says to erect a memorial building to the soldiers and sailors of Taylor County. As long as the building is there it will be a memorial to those soldiers and sailors, whatever it is used for. Apparently it could be leased and rented and a store put in it.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, no. I will state to the gentleman from Illinois that there will be absolutely no private use of it at all. It is only for this public memorial purpose.

Mr. MANN. That is the present intent, but there is no restriction in there. Is there plenty of room there for this?

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, yes.

Mr. MANN. Did the Government buy this site?

Mr. BLANTON. No; I think it was acquired in the early days when out in western Texas there lands were cheap, and a town would give a block whenever they could get a public building erected. I am almost sure it was donated to the Government—that is my impression.

Mr. MANN. It is strange that information is not furnished, either by the gentleman or by the Treasury Department, so that we might know whether we purchased land several times larger than we had any use for.

Mr. BLANTON. I think that was just simply donated, because most of those sites out there were donated at that time. It is a whole block of ground.

Mr. WINGO. If the gentleman will permit, this site was acquired by the Federal Government back in those days when if you bought a lot out there, the grantor would slip in an extra block on the grantee.

Mr. MANN. That, of course, is facetious. Does anybody know about this?

Mr. BLANTON. If I am not mistaken, the question is covered in the hearings, which you can see if you have a copy of them. I am almost sure that this block of land was a donation to the Government; but be that as it may, the Government now owns fee simple title to the property. It is a whole block of ground, and I will state to the gentleman from Illinois that there is a big grass plot there, unused except for public purposes in the way of a park. They have a band stand there on one part of the plot, and the people meet there for public purposes.

Mr. MANN. The Government takes care of that land now, I take it?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; but the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States shall prescribe the manner in which the American Legion shall take care of this building, and it will be under his direct control, so far as the stipulations he shall make are concerned.

Mr. MANN. The only thing I can see in the bill is that the design and construction of the building shall be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, and I imagine in course of time—I hope it will be a long way in the future—the Government will have to take care of this building.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, no. I will state to the gentleman that the money was raised by direct donations.

Mr. MANN. I am very glad indeed that this city, or town, or village, whatever it is, raised the money for this patriotic purpose. While I think the bill is not as carefully drawn as bills of this kind ought to be in the future, I am not going to object.

Mr. BLANTON. It is for a purely patriotic purpose.

Mr. LOWREY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Texas allow me to ask him a question, please?

Mr. BLANTON. Certainly.

Mr. LOWREY. He speaks of this being in the town of Abilene. I want to know if that town is incorporated, and if it is on a railroad?

Mr. BLANTON. Well, I didn't expect the gentleman who lived in Texas once to be so facetious. He knows that Abilene, Tex., is an enterprising, live, growing city of about 12,000 people, all of whom are wide-awake, and would honor any city in the United States with their citizenship. He lived away up in the panhandle there, where they raise big crops and fine cattle. But if he ever leaves Mississippi again, and comes back to Texas he will be sure to move to Abilene. [Laughter.]

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman never lived in the cow country of the West or he would have known all about Abilene.

Mr. LOWREY. It seems to me, having lived in Texas, I have heard of Abilene, somewhere. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, the gentleman has spoken all over Texas, and he is well acquainted in Abilene. He is just speaking facetiously.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered to grant an easement to the executive committee of Parramore Post No. 57, American Legion, and its successors in office, for the use, without expense to the United States, of the strip of land off the Federal building site fronting 150 feet on the south side of North Fourth Street and extending southwardly, of that width, along the east side of Pine Street 150 feet, in block 20, Abilene, Tex., for the purpose of erecting thereon a memorial building to the soldiers and sailors of Taylor County who served in the Great War, said easement to continue as long as such building shall be devoted to the original purpose; Provided, however, That said easement shall cease and determine, and the custody and control of said parcel of land shall revert to the United States if said memorial building is not erected thereon within five years from the date of this act.

With a committee amendment, as follows:

On page 2, line 9, after the word "act," insert "And provided further. That the design and construction of the said memorial building shall be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken, and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division on the passage of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois asks for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 35, nays 0.

So the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. BLANTON, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, how many votes were there?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Thirty-five ayes. The Clerk will report the next bill.

ADDITIONAL JUDGE FOR THE DISTRICT OF MINNESOTA.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 6648) authorizing the appointment of an additional judge for the district of Minnesota.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I think it has never been the custom to pass these bills creating additional judgeships by unanimous consent or by taking them from the Unanimous Consent Calendar, and I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee objects.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman reserve his objection for a moment?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I will reserve it.

Mr. MANN. There are bills on the calendar reported from the Committee on the Judiciary, I believe, providing for the appointment of at least five new district judges, there being at least four bills.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. MANN. There are five bills on the calendar asking for new judges, three Senate bills and two House bills, coming from a very distinguished committee of the House, the Committee on the Judiciary. I hope some member of the Committee on the Judiciary is here to hear what I say and give some attention to bills of this kind. Bills of this kind ought to be uniform. They ought to be in the same language, and the Committee on the Judiciary when it reports a bill of this kind, or reports two bills, ought to use the same language for the two bills. Instead of that they scatter all over the earth. Gentlemen who introduced some of these bills probably found bills or laws passed before the judiciary title was revised and drew copies of those bills. Now we have a law fixing the compensation and allowances of judges, a general law on the subject. It might be changed. The Committee on the Judiciary does not know what the law is on the subject, because if they did they would not prescribe one salary for a district judge in one of these bills and a different salary, perhaps, for a district judge in another district. The law and the Constitution provide that after the salary is fixed for a judge it can not be reduced by Congress. I hope the Committee on the Judiciary or the Subcommittee on the Committee on the Judiciary dealing with this subject will just take the time and the trouble to look up the law and fix a prescribed course in bringing in bills of this kind, because I imagine we will have a good many of them, now that the Federal judiciary have become police judges, having not much else to do but to try drunks. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made. The bill will be stricken from the calendar.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be allowed to remain on the calendar.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made. The Clerk will report the next bill.

CORPS OF CADETS AT THE MILITARY ACADEMY.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 1358) to provide for maintaining the Corps of Cadets at the United States Military Academy at its maximum authorized strength, and for other purposes.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. WINGO. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Arkansas objects. The bill is stricken from the calendar. The Clerk will report the next bill.

PUYALLUP RIVER, WASH.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 1578) to provide a preliminary survey of the Puyallup River, Wash., with a view to the control of its floods. The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WINGO. Reserving the right to object, how much will this preliminary survey cost?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I am not able to say. The bill is in the form adopted by the Flood Control Committee, and similar to that reported a few days ago for the Yazoo River.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I shall not object to the reasonable discussion of this bill and the bill following it, but eventually I shall have to object to both of them.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I hope the gentleman will not do that. A bill of similar character for the Yazoo River was passed by this House a few days ago.

Mr. MONDELL. I think I was not here at the time. I think that before we pass more bills of this character we should have some further discussion of the general subject, and I shall have to object. I shall not object to a brief statement.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. If that is the gentleman's attitude, there is little need to discuss it. This bill and the bill following it are reported on their merits. This bill has been properly before the Flood Control Committee. Only last year a board of river and harbor engineers were out there—

Mr. MONDELL. It is a rather important matter, as the gentleman realizes, to begin making provisions for surveys of rivers with a view to control of their floods. It is a new policy which may involve great outlay. We ought to know a little more than we do as to the theory on which these surveys are being made, what the probable cost is to be, and on just what classes of streams the surveys are to be ordered. It is rather too important a matter to consider under unanimous consent.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I hope it is not going to be adopted as a policy that we are to hold flood control simply to the Mississippi River, the Sacramento River, and the Yazoo River.

Mr. MONDELL. Not necessarily.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I have been before the Flood Control Committee and have made my showing and the bill is reported favorably.

Mr. MANN. I suggest to the gentleman from Washington that the Committee on Flood Control will have its opportunity on Calendar Wednesday, and that at that time there is no way of preventing the gentleman from having an opportunity to explain his bill properly. It is a new proposition, as the gentleman will realize.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. That is true, but the gentleman from Wyoming says there is going to be objection to these bills.

Mr. MONDELL. I do not want the gentleman from Washington to misunderstand my statement. I did not take the position that these bills should not be passed. I took the position that this raises a new question and a very large question, which may eventually involve large expenditures, and that we should not inaugurate this policy—which may go very far afield before we get through with it—without further discussion than can be had under unanimous consent.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I will say to the gentleman that if the House continues its policy of doing away with Calendar Wednesday and unanimous-consent days and other set days for the consideration of bills there will be very small chance for any of these bills or other minor bills to pass in this Congress.

Mr. CURRY. If the gentleman will reserve his objection for a moment, I wish to say that these bills were presented to the Flood Control Committee, and after thorough investigation and hearing that committee decided that this bill should be reported favorably to the House. The Puyallup River is a large river. It overflows its banks, and there are many thousands of acres that are subject to overflow. The overflow also threatens the city of Tacoma. If this bill provided for a final survey with an itemized statement of cost of the survey of the Puyallup River it ought not to be considered on the Unanimous Consent Calendar, but it does not do that. This bill simply provides for a preliminary survey. That preliminary survey is made by the United States Engineer officer in charge, under the Chief of Engineers, and he has all the data in his possession now necessary to make a preliminary report to Congress. No appropriation is necessary and no further action can be taken for the reclamation of this river or for a survey of it until after a detailed report has been made to Congress stating how much the improvement will cost, how much the State of Washington should pay, how much the counties should pay, how much the landowners should pay, and whether the United States Government should pay anything or not. From the statements made to the committee it does not appear that the United States Government will be called upon to pay anything, but the improvement will have to be made under the Army engineers, and after it is authorized by Congress it may be that the local interests will have to bear all the expense. This is simply for a preliminary survey, which will cost the United States Government nothing. They have the men there to do the work and they have the information to which to make a report.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CURRY. I will.

Mr. MANN. If the United States engineers have all the information now on hand and have really made a preliminary survey, what good will it do to order a preliminary survey, if they are not going to acquire any further information?

Mr. CURRY. They have not made a preliminary survey. They have the information on which to make a preliminary survey.

Mr. MANN. I understood the gentleman to say they had the information already on hand.

Mr. CURRY. They have.

Mr. MANN. Then they must have made something.

Mr. CURRY. They have.

Mr. MANN. What good will it do, then, to order them to make a preliminary survey when they are not going to do anything except to report what information they now have?

Mr. CURRY. Because Congress can not act until after a preliminary survey has been filed, under the act of Congress.

Mr. MANN. Oh, yes; Congress can act as it pleases. Congress is not restricted by that at all. Congress does not require a preliminary survey and then a final survey. Of course, the river and harbor law provides for certain things, but that does not control this case at all.

Mr. CURRY. The river and harbor act has nothing to do with this.

Mr. MANN. But the gentleman is proceeding on the theory that it does.

Mr. CURRY. Oh, no; the river and harbor law has nothing whatever to do with this. The Mississippi-Sacramento flood control act in section 3 provides the method and the machinery for the preliminary survey and for the detailed survey and for the improvement. The preliminary survey is necessary.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Is not the preliminary survey necessary for the purpose of furnishing Congress and the committee with an estimate of the probable cost?

Mr. MANN. It is not necessary to order a preliminary survey at all.

Mr. CURRY. It is under that act.

Mr. MANN. That act is not binding on Congress. This is a House bill and not a House resolution, not a concurrent resolution. This makes law, and it is one of those proceedings where you walk in at the door and walk right out again, and doesn't accomplish anything.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. If this is an inquiry into the possible flood control, will you not have to have a preliminary survey?

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Washington desires to have information presented to Congress to show whether this stream ought to be controlled, so far as floods are concerned, and what it will cost, what the method will be, and who is to furnish the money for it—the Government, the State, or the locality. If he wants that information, he ought to have a resolution to that effect. This does not amount to anything. You have got to have the same thing done over again.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I have followed the proceedings used in reference to the Yazoo River survey.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MONDELL. I object.

COWLITZ RIVER, WASH.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 1577) to provide a preliminary survey of Cowlitz River, Wash., with a view to the control of its floods.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas). Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MONDELL. I object.

DISPOSITION OF ABANDONED LIGHTHOUSE AND LIFE-SAVING STATIONS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 2911) to provide for the disposition of abandoned lighthouse and life-saving stations.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, has the gentleman from Florida in mind the location of the locations proposed to be abandoned?

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Speaker, I have not in mind the special locations. I will say as I said in the few minutes allotted me that on February 7, 1921, there were perhaps a few locations in my district, and I doubt not there are many locations in districts in different States throughout the United States, and perhaps other States have more than are in my district. This is only to permit the Secretary of Commerce and the Secretary of the Treasury to sell lands acquired for lighthouse, life-saving, or coast-guard purposes that are no longer needed, or will no longer be needed by the Government.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] and my good friend from Illinois [Mr. MANN] raised objections solely because the Department of Commerce had not been called on for a report. This bill was reported out in the Sixty-fifth Congress and also in the Sixty-sixth Congress, and again reported by the Committee on the Public Lands in this Congress. We have a favorable report from the past Secretary of the Treasury and the Secretary of Commerce and the Secretary of the Interior, and also the present bill has a favorable report signed by Mr. Hoover, and also a favorable report from Mr. Mellon, Secretary of the Treasury, and also a favorable report signed by Mr. Finney, the Acting Secretary of the Interior. These gentlemen made certain suggestions as to amendments and these suggestions have been complied with. For information of gentlemen I will state that I have made no objection to any amendment or suggestion by the departments, and I believe the chairman of the committee will hear me out that every amendment suggested by them has been incorporated in the bill.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, ostensibly on the ground of economy or lack of sufficient appropriations a great many of these stations have been closed, temporarily, it is said. They may, however, be said to be abandoned. They may come within the purview of this act, and the Secretary of Commerce and the Secretary of the Treasury might be authorized to destroy them. The hope of those who are interested in some of these stations is that money sufficient to operate them may later be provided, but if this bill should become a law now, advantage might be taken to declare them "abandoned" and the property might be disposed of. So that no action can be taken as to these stations, temporarily closed, I shall object to the consideration of this bill.

Mr. SINNOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. SINNOTT. Any of these stations may be sold at the present time by the Secretary of Commerce except stations that were located on land reserved from the public domain. That is about all that this bill will do will be to permit the sale of any reservation out of the public domain. It gives the Secretary of the Interior the right to sell reservations on the public domain and upon lands acquired from individuals.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Oregon may be right about that, but up to this time the department has not been taking advantage of any such now on the books and has not disposed of these lighthouses and life-saving stations. I doubt very much if there is any law now which would authorize the tearing down of the buildings and the sale of the land, and at the present time I do not want any law put upon the statute books that would authorize it, because I am hoping that some of these stations may be reopened. For the present I object to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman reserve his objection?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit, I would like to ask one question, if I may. What particular case is it that gentlemen are trying to reach by this bill? What life-saving station is it that they are trying to sell by this bill? It must be some particular case.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Speaker, I will answer the gentleman. This question was called to my attention by some constituents of mine. I know of no particular case. I know that at Coronado Beach, just out of New Smyrna, for years and years the lighthouse or coast guard station has been abandoned and has never been used by the Government. I have tried to get them to establish one at New Smyrna but could not. There are many along the coast of Florida.

Mr. MANN. The Government has authority to sell any of those, I take it, now, if it wants to. If there is no necessity for the law, what is the use of passing it? If there is no instance after these many years where there is a life-saving station or a lighthouse station that ought to be disposed of, what is the use of taking the time to pass legislation?

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I would state to the gentleman that there is a provision for the disposition of lighthouses but not for coast guard stations.

Mr. MANN. There is a provision for the disposition of life-saving coast guard stations.

Mr. COLLINS. No. The law referred to Thirty-seventh Statutes, 1017-1019, and that applies only to lighthouses.

Mr. MANN. Oh, the gentleman means there is no provision now for the sale?

Mr. COLLINS. There is not.

Mr. MANN. That is another thing. The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce has jurisdiction and reported a bill for the sale of lighthouses. That committee did that from time to time. That is the committee to which the bill ought to have gone.

Mr. SEARS. Of course, Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Michigan is going to object, I do not care to take up the time of the House as there are other bills on the calendar.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit, it seems to me that this bill should have gone to the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee. I am wondering what discretion the Secretary of Commerce has in the matter.

Mr. SEARS. The Secretary of Commerce has jurisdiction of lighthouses and lighthouse stations, as I understand it, and the Treasury Department of the coast guard stations.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. The lighthouses are under the Treasury Department.

Mr. MANN. By the act of March 4, 1913, it is specifically provided that sale may be made of land, and so forth, in the Lighthouse Service, and this bill seeks to do the same thing.

Mr. COLLINS. No; it goes further. It also provides for the sale of coast guard reservations.

Mr. MANN. The coast guard reservations are life-saving stations.

Mr. SEARS. That comes under the Department of Commerce.

Mr. MANN. The Lighthouse Service is under the Department of Commerce and the law provides for the sale of either one now.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for an explanatory statement in regard to that act.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. SINNOTT. The Secretary of the Interior refers to that in his letter of May 18, in which he says:

The question as to whether the Secretary of Commerce had the power under said act to dispose of abandoned lighthouse sites reserved by Executive order out of the public domain was submitted to the Attorney General on April 19, 1920, by the Secretary of Commerce and the Secretary of the Interior, by letter dated February 7, 1921, to the Attorney General, joined in the request.

The Attorney General, on March 29, 1921, in his letter to the Secretary of Commerce (copy herewith), rendered an opinion in which it was held that the Department of Commerce had authority under said act of March 4, 1913, to sell in the manner prescribed in the act lands reserved for lighthouse purposes whenever no longer needed for such purposes. It was further held by the Attorney General that lands reserved out of the public domain for specific purposes could only thereafter be disposed of by Congress.

Mr. MANN. I understand. If the land has been reserved for lighthouse purposes, but not used for it, it is not to be sold under that act.

Mr. SINNOTT. By a letter from the Secretary of Commerce, dated July 13, he requests that certain other amendments be added to the bill. On page 2, lines 15 and 16, to strike out the words "reserved for lighthouse purposes," and page 2, line 16, to strike out the word "therefor" and insert in lieu thereof the words "for lighthouse purposes." Are those amendments acceptable to the gentleman from Florida?

Mr. SEARS. They are acceptable to me. If I may be permitted, I want to say that I am in hearty accord with the sentiments expressed by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN]. I am not in favor of selling any coast guard station or life-saving station that has been temporarily closed or may be needed in the near future or in the future. If the gentleman will note, in line 7, page 1, of the bill, he will see the words specifically stated, "no longer needed for such purposes."

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, the trouble is, it may be the opinion of the Secretary of Commerce now that they never will again be needed, but he may be induced to change his opinion. He gives as a reason for closing a number of these stations the lack of money. It seems that a recent appropriation was reduced about $200,000. The department has less money than formerly, and not as much money as it needs to maintain all of these stations. It has already discontinued or greatly reduced 47 of them. Five of them are in Michigan, along the shore of Lake Michigan, and some of them are in my district.

Mr. LAYTON. There are two in my district.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. It seems to me a mistake was made in closing them, and possibly a mistake was made on the part of Congress in not providing money enough. It would be a mistake to abandon them and dispose of the land and destroy the buildings, and I object to any law that will permit it at this time. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I object to the present consideration of this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan objects, and the bill will be stricken from the calendar.

The Clerk will report the next bill.

ADDITION OF CERTAIN LANDS TO MOUNT MCKINLEY NATIONAL PARK, ALASKA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 6262) to add certain lands to Mount McKinley National Park, Alaska.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CURRY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to have the bill explained.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. Speaker, the object of this is to widen the boundary of Mount McKinley National Park to a distance of about 10 miles east. The entire length of the park will be about 100 miles by 40 in width at its widest point. This addition fixes the eastern boundary on the 149th meridian. The primary purpose is to establish a sanctuary for herds of mountain sheep that live in that section. It is a country of rugged, lofty mountains. There is no possible opportunity for agriculture or anything of that sort—not a foot of tillable land in the whole district that is taken in by this boundary. It is really the only game sanctuary in that territory, and takes in a variety of wild life that will possibly be exterminated if not protected.

Mr. CURRY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I will yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. CURRY. There seems to be quite a number of reservations in Alaska. Ninety-two per cent of Alaska is now owned by the Government. Mount McKinley National Park is as big as some States and still you are adding to it and this part you are adding to it is very rich mineral land. This asks that this addition of mineral land be added to Mount McKinley National Park. Where did the request come from?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The request comes from the Department of the Interior through the National Parks Service. There is no inhibition on searching and mining for minerals in the park, and it does not interfere—

Mr. CURRY. It does interfere with the mining for minerals in the parks.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do not agree with the gentleman.

Mr. CURRY. Then I agree with myself on that. If there were any good reason for it I would not object, and I do not intend to object now if the gentleman will give me a reason. Mount McKinley Park is 400 miles from anywhere. There was nobody there last year and there will be nobody there next year, and so far as the national park is concerned, it is an addition to the national parks that gives the Department of the Interior an opportunity to come up here and get a whole lot more money. I think the national park is big enough as it is now, and so far as the game tract there is concerned, let them create that under a different bureau. This is not for a game sanctuary at all.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. Speaker, that is the purpose of it, for a game sanctuary.

Mr. CURRY. You have 400 square miles. There is a game section, all you want.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. This has more special reference to the protection of mountain sheep.

Mr. CURRY. They go clear to the top of Mount McKinley and clear up to where Dr. Cook was supposed to go but did not, and clear down almost to the water front, and now it is not for the purpose of protecting them, I beg the gentleman's pardon, though somebody may have told him that. I do not like to have a bill of this kind passed through under any false pretenses from the department; that is all.

Mr. MONDELL. Does the gentleman from Alaska know whether the bill establishing the Mount McKinley National Park prohibited prospecting and mining?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do not think it did. I have always understood men went in there and prospected freely; that there was no restriction.

Mr. MONDELL. But the gentleman does not know?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I am not positive, but I have always assumed it. In reply to the gentleman from California, Mr. Speaker, I will say that I have been in that section provided for being encompassed in the park. Now, I can conceive of no possible way that the land there could be utilized for any other purpose than just what they claim they want it for in the department, for the preservation of game.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I will.

Mr. BLANTON. What is the acreage proposed to be taken in?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. About 445 square miles.

Mr. BLANTON. Additional to what is already in the park?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes. This gives the park a tract of 2,600 square miles.

Mr. BLANTON. Does the gentleman believe there is any necessity for this additional acreage?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes.

Mr. MANN. It will be done sometime, why not now?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That seems quite an acreage, but when you consider—

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from Illinois, while he comes from a good advertising State, I am a little surprised that he used the Gold Medal Flour advertisement, "eventually, why not now?"

Mr. MANN. Eventually, why not now?

Mr. BLANTON. Eventually. Does the gentleman believe the United States Government is going to increase its park acreage to 2,600 square miles in every vicinity?

Mr. MANN. Oh, no; but where it is worth nothing for anything else I think it ought to be made into a park before any private interests get in. There has been bill after bill on this calendar to exchange land or something of that sort in a park. I think where you have a piece of land that is sooner or later going to be made into a park it is best to say so.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to say to the distinguished gentleman from Illinois that the people down in Texas used to think that way about public land there. They felt that the land in the big Panhandle was absolutely worthless, and our legislature gave 3,000,000 acres to build a capital, which land was valued at $3,000,000. It is worth now from $5 to $25 an acre. You never can tell what land is going to be worth.

Mr. MANN. We will still have control of this. If the public had control of the land down there now, instead of its being owned by private parties, it would be protected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I notice the law establishing Mount McKinley National Park prohibits for settlement, occupancy, or disposal, under the laws of the United States, of lands within the limits of the park, but nothing contained in the law shall affect valid existing claims, locations, or entries. There is also a provision under which those having rights within these at the time they are included in the park may continue to enjoy those rights, and to kill such game as may be necessary for food. I do not object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? (After a pause.) The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6262) to add certain lands to Mount McKinley National Park, Alaska.

Be it enacted, etc., That the south, east, and north boundaries of the Mount McKinley National Park are hereby changed as follows: Beginning at the summit of Mount Russell, which is the present southwest corner of the park; thence in a northeasterly direction 100 miles more or less to a point on the 149th meridian which is 25 miles south of a point due east of the upper northwest corner of the park; thence north along the 149th meridian 25 miles; thence west 40 miles, more or less, to the present upper northwest corner of Mount McKinley National Park. And all these lands lying between the above-described boundary and the present south, east, and north boundaries are hereby reserved and withdrawn from settlement, occupancy, or disposal, and under the laws of the United States said lands are hereby made a part of and included in the Mount McKinley National Park; and all the provisions of the act to establish Mount McKinley National Park, Alaska, and for other purposes, approved February 26, 1917, are hereby made applicable to and extended over lands hereby added to the park.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SINNOTT a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

TWO ADDITIONAL JUDGES FOR SOUTHERN DISTRICT, NEW YORK.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 1288) to provide for the appointment of two additional judges of the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York.

The title was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, for the same reasons that I stated a while ago in the Minnesota case, I object to the consideration of this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee objects, and the bill will be stricken from the calendar. The Clerk will report the next bill.

ABANDONED PORTIONS OF RAILROAD RIGHTS OF WAY.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 244) to provide for the disposition of abandoned portions of rights of way granted to railroad companies.

The title was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. PARRISH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I hope it will not be necessary for me to object, would the gentleman in charge of the bill be willing to put in as an amendment to the bill a reservation of the oil, gas, and mineral rights in favor of the Government? As I understand, this is a general bill, and as suggested by the gentleman from Wyoming, it covers many small tracts of land in many sections of the country, and this is practically a gift to the people who own the survey through which the right of way passes, and it seems to me it would be a wise precaution for the Government, in this as in all similar legislation, to reserve the oil, gas, and mineral rights, because they may all become very valuable in time.

Mr. BURTNESS. I will say to the gentleman from Texas that my recollection is that that matter was considered by the committee; but in view of the fact that these tracts do not exceed over 100 feet in width, it was not thought feasible or necessary so to do. So that the gentlemen may fully understand the bill, it is simply this: In the West, as a whole, since 1875, whenever any portions of public lands have been granted to the railroads for right of way purposes, a reverter provision was retained in the patent, so that if the railroad abandoned the right of way for railroad purposes the land reverted to the Federal Government. It is only the right of way. I also want the House to realize this, that when the Government has issued patents to the homesteader or any other person getting the land, no diminution has been made by reason of this prior grant of the right of way. The patentee under the terms of the patent gets the entire legal subdivision, as the case may be. So all this bill does is to provide that, whenever rights of way have been abandoned, in cases of that sort, where they have been granted over public lands, the land will revert, not to the Government but to the patentee or his successor in interest, who has already received the patent on the entire legal subdivision. With this exception, namely, that the committee put in an amendment, or recommends the adoption of an amendment, that will save the use of these rights of way for public highways. The gentleman will readily realize that in some cases where the railroad has been actually established and then abandoned it makes a very good foundation for a public highway.

Members of the committee knew of several of such cases, so realizing that highways were of public importance they made an exception in the bill, so that any part that is used for a public highway is expressly reserved. Likewise it gives to the public authorities in charge of the establishment of highways the opportunity to establish a legal highway thereon within one year after the decree of forfeiture or abandonment.

Mr. PARRISH. I understand the different features of the bill as explained by the gentleman. But what I asked him about was if he had any objections to putting an amendment on the bill reserving to the Government the oil, gas, and mineral rights. I understand that the strip may not be wide, but I have known of cases where the wagon road through a single county was worth many thousands of dollars. It seems to me the gentleman ought to be willing that we should reserve to the Government the right to the oil and gas.

Mr. BURTNESS. I do not know anything about oil, as the gentleman from Texas does. But do I understand him to say that on a strip of that narrow width, running through a legal subdivision of not more than 40 acres the oil there would really be of value in the sense that it could be used separate and apart from the oil found under the land that the patentee already owns?

Mr. PARRISH. I have seen them pay thousands of dollars for the right to drill on railroad right of way.

Mr. BURTNESS. I am not the author of this bill, and I regret that he [Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON] is not present. The committee did not see fit to put the amendment in, but I have no personal objection to it.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURTNESS. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to call attention to the fact that the Texas & Pacific Railroad Co. has some of the most valuable oil lands along its right of way. The statement of my colleague [Mr. PARRISH] is eminently correct. This bill went off the calendar once before because of this very proposition—that it did not contain this provision reserving these rights to the Government.

Mr. BURTNESS. I do not know that it has gone off before; that has not happened in this Congress.

Mr. BLANTON. It was in the last Congress, and it went off the calendar because of my objection on that ground.

Mr. BURTNESS. Personally I would be in favor of the amendment and would accept it if that is satisfactory to the chairman of the committee.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. The title of this land is not now in the Government. It has already passed to the railroad company.

Mr. BURTNESS. But it reverts to the Government. If the gentleman from Texas has an amendment of that sort, I will accept it.

Mr. PARRISH. For the purpose of hastening the proceedings, unless the gentleman is willing to accept the amendment, I will object to the bill.

Mr. BURTNESS. I am willing to accept the amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That whenever public lands of the United States have been or may be granted to any railroad company for use as a right of way for its railroad or as sites for railroad structures of any kind, and use and occupancy of said lands for such purposes has ceased or shall hereafter cease, whether by forfeiture or by abandonment by said railroad company declared or decreed by a court of competent jurisdiction or by act of Congress, then and thereupon all right, title, interest, and estate of the United States in said lands shall, be transferred to and vested in any person, firm, or corporation, assigns, or successors in title and interest to whom or to which title of the United States may have been or may be granted, conveying or purporting to convey the whole of the legal subdivision or subdivisions traversed or occupied by such railroad or railroad structures of any kind as aforesaid, except lands within a municipality the title to which, upon forfeiture or abandonment, as herein provided, shall vest in such municipality, and this by virtue of said patent and without the necessity of any other or further conveyance or assurance of any kind or nature whatsoever: Provided, That this act shall not affect conveyances made by any railroad company or portions of its right of way if such conveyance be among those which have been or may be validated and confirmed by any act of Congress.

With a committee amendment, as follows:

On page 1, line 11, insert "except such part thereof as may be embraced in a public highway legally established within one year after said decree of forfeiture or abandonment." On page 2, line 15, strike out the word "or" and insert in lieu thereof the word "of" and in line 18, after the word "Congress," insert "nor shall this act affect any public highway now on said right of way."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment just reported.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PARRISH. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PARRISH: On page 2, following the word "way" in line 19, add "Provided further, That the transfer of such land shall be subject to and contain reservations in favor of the United States for oil, gas, and other minerals in the land so transferred and conveyed, with the right to prospect for, mine, and remove same."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Texas desire recognition?

Mr. PARRISH. No; I do not care to be heard.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BURTNESS, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ADDITIONAL JUDGE FOR THE DISTRICT OF ARIZONA.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 395) providing for an additional judge for the district of Arizona.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I have already objected to two bills creating additional judgeships, because I did not think they should be considered on the Unanimous Consent Calendar. That is a general reason. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has suggested some other very good reasons, in my opinion, why objection should lie, at least to some of the bills that are on this calendar. I do not know about the merits of any of these bills. I am not disposed to quarrel with the report of the Committee on the Judiciary. They are probably necessary, and, as has been said, probably a good many others will be necessary before this Congress shall conclude. But I do not think they should be considered on the Unanimous Consent Calendar and I therefore object.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Tennessee yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. HAYDEN. I understand the gentleman's position to be that he does not think bills of this character should be considered on the Unanimous Consent Calendar. But he is not objecting to this bill on its merits?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Not on its merits. I am making a general objection. From what I know of this bill it seems to me to be a very meritorious bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee objects and the bill is stricken from the calendar. The Clerk will report the next bill.

COINAGE OF PEACE DOLLARS.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the resolution (H. J. Res. 111) to provide for the coinage of peace dollars.

The title of the resolution was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of this resolution?

Mr. MANN. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects. The bill is stricken from the calendar, and the Clerk will report the next bill.

LANDS ON FORT BUFORD MILITARY RESERVATION.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 732) to extend the provisions of section 2455, Revised Statutes, to the lands within the abandoned Fort Buford Military Reservation in the States of North Dakota and Montana.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill. The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the provisions of section 2455, Revised Statutes of the United States, be, and the same are hereby, extended to all nonmineral lands within the abandoned Fort Buford Military Reservation in the States of North Dakota and Montana, which were restored to disposal under the homestead, town site, and desert land laws under the provisions of the act of May 19, 1900 (31 Stat. L., p. 180).

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

Mr. MONDELL. As I understand it, this act is intended to extend the law providing for the sale of isolated tracts.

Mr. BURTNESS. That is true.

Mr. MONDELL. That is its only purpose?

Mr. BURTNESS. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. My recollection is that the law for the sale of isolated tracts has been amended since the date of the act of May 19, 1900.

Mr. SINNOTT. Section 2455 of the Revised Statutes is an act permitting the sale of lands to which the priority claims have been rejected. It permits the sale of such lands. This is not the isolated tract law, strictly speaking.

Mr. MANN. As nobody knows what it does, we will let it go through. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. BURTNESS a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

STOLEN MOTOR VEHICLES.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 1060) to amend an act entitled "An act to punish the transportation of stolen motor vehicles in interstate or foreign commerce," approved October 29, 1919.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill. The bill was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That sections 3 and 4 of an act entitled "An act to punish the transportation of stolen motor vehicles in interstate or foreign commerce," approved October 29, 1919, be, and hereby are, amended so as to read as follows:

"Sec. 3. That whoever shall transport or cause to be transported in interstate or foreign commerce a motor vehicle, knowing the same to have been stolen or embezzled, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $5,000, or by imprisonment of not more than five years, or both."

"Sec. 4. That whoever shall receive, conceal, store, barter, sell, or dispose of any motor vehicle, moving as, or which is a part of, or which constitutes interstate or foreign commerce, knowing the same to have been stolen or embezzled, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $5,000, or by imprisonment of not more than five years, or both."

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, has this bill passed the objection stage?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It has.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Then I move to strike out the last word. I suppose that, the original bill having been passed, possibly this amendment may be necessary; and yet if it is a measure to strengthen that act, I am opposed to it. That original bill ought never to have been passed. I regret profoundly that such a departure in governmental practice was ever made. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] referred a while ago to the fact that Federal judges had become in large measure police judges, and that is true, and it is because of just such acts as this. If it can be done as to automobiles I do not know why you can not confer jurisdiction upon the Federal courts to try thefts of anything else carried in interstate commerce, thereby simply continuing to take over all the functions performed by the States, police, criminal, and otherwise, in every respect, and to lodge them in the Federal courts.

I move to strike out the enacting clause of this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee moves to strike out the enacting clause.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I think I was not present when the original law was passed.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I was not.

Mr. MANN. Probably that was one of the infamies perpetrated upon the country by a Democratic Congress; but I would like to ask whether there has been any construction of the authority of Congress to pass a law making it a penal offense to have in possession something which has been stolen, because it came from some other State than the one in which it is found. That goes very far. I am in sympathy with the idea of trying to prevent these automobile thieves getting in any more of their work safely, and I believe that there ought to be if possible—I do not know whether it is possible—some kind of regulation from a Federal standpoint. This law provides that it shall be an offense for a man to receive and have in his possession an automobile which has been stolen and brought from another State.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for me to make a suggestion with regard to this measure? We are proceeding by unanimous consent. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] could have objected to the consideration of the measure. Possibly his attention was not called to the bill at the time. But it seems to me that if we are to continue to give consideration to these bills in the way in which we started this afternoon we should not have a contest over this or any other measure; and I now ask unanimous consent that this bill retain its place on the calendar without prejudice, and that it be passed.

Mr. MANN. In the absence of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER] who reported the bill?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] asks unanimous consent that the proceedings subsequent to the call for objection be vacated, and that this bill retain its place on the calendar. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, let me say that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is in error in one respect, and that is as to this original law having been passed by a Democratic Congress. The original act was passed by the last Congress. I shall not object to the request.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I ask unanimous consent that H. R. 1578 and H. R. 1577, to which objection was made, be permitted to retain their places on this calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that H. R. 1577 and H. R. 1578 retain their places on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The clerk will report the next bill.

CERTAIN ENLISTED MEN IN THE NAVY.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 7105) to correct the status of certain enlisted men of the Navy and Naval Reserve Force, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. I object.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman reserve his objection?

Mr. BLANTON. I will reserve it.

Mr. MANN. This bill is incorporated in H. R. 7864, which is being considered in the committee, and I ask unanimous consent that this bill (H. R. 7105) be stricken from the Union Calendar and from the Calendar for Unanimous Consent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that this bill (H. R. 7105) be stricken from the Union Calendar and from the Calendar for Unanimous Consent. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

REPAIR AND REBUILDING OF CUSTOMS BUILDINGS IN PORTO RICO.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 6557) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to repair and rebuild customs buildings in Porto Rico and to pay for same out of duties collected in Porto Rico.

The Clerk read the title to the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. At the request of the gentleman from Iowa, and without objection, the bill will be passed without prejudice.

There was no objection.

ADDITIONAL JUDGE FOR THE DISTRICT OF MONTANA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 2261) providing for an additional judge for the district of Montana.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, for the same reasons as given heretofore, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill will be stricken from the calendar.

CONSOLIDATION OF FOREST LANDS, COLORADO NATIONAL FOREST, COLO.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 6259) for the consolidation of forest lands in Colorado National Forest, Colo., and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, authorized, in his discretion, to accept on behalf of the United States title to any lands within the Colorado National Forest, Colo., if in the opinion of the Secretary of Agriculture the public interests will be benefited thereby and the lands are chiefly valuable for national-forest purposes, and in exchange therefor may give not to exceed an equal value of national-forest land within the Colorado National Forest, or the Secretary of Agriculture may authorize the grantor to cut and remove an equal value of timber within the national forests of the same State. The values in each case shall be determined by the Secretary of Agriculture, who shall give consideration to any reservation which either party may make of timber, minerals, or easements. Timber given in such exchanges shall be cut and removed under the laws and regulations relating to the national forests and under the direction and supervision and in accordance with the requirements of the Secretary of Agriculture. Lands conveyed to the United States under this act shall, upon acceptance of title, become parts of the Colorado National Forest.

With the following committee amendment:

In line 14, page 1, and lines 1 and 2, page 2, strike out the following words: "Who shall give consideration to any reservations which either party may make of timber, minerals, or easements."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. TIMBERLAKE, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS PEND D'OREILLE RIVER, IDAHO.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 7328) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Pend d'Oreille River, Bonner County, Idaho, at the Newport-Priest River Road crossing, Idaho.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Peter Young, of Priest River, Idaho, is hereby authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Pend d'Oreille River in Bonner County, Idaho, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, and at the Newport-Priest River Road crossing, Idaho, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

Sec. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 3, after the word "Idaho," insert the words "his legal representatives or assigns."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

ADDITIONAL JUDGE FOR EASTERN DISTRICT OF MICHIGAN.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 1254) providing for the appointment of an additional district judge in and for the eastern district of Michigan.

The Clerk read the title to the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. I object.

EXPORTATION OF PULP WOOD FROM THE DOMINION OF CANADA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was Senate joint resolution 36, authorizing the appointment of a commission to confer with the Dominion Government or the provincial governments of Quebec, Ontario, and New Brunswick as to certain restrictive orders in council of the said Provinces relative to the exportation of pulp wood therefrom to the United States.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I would like to have the joint resolution reported.

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Joint resolution authorizing the appointment of a commission to confer with the Dominion Government or the provincial governments of Quebec, Ontario, and New Brunswick as to certain restrictive orders in council of the said Provinces relative to the exportation of pulp wood therefrom to the United States.

Whereas newsprint and other printing papers are commodities of universal use and are indispensable in the educational process of modern civilization, and the paramount importance of a sufficient production of such newsprint and other paper to supply the needs of the people of the United States is a self-evident proposition; and

Whereas practically the whole content of newsprint and other printing paper is composed of mechanical and chemical products of pulp wood, the supply of which in the eastern part of the United States is being rapidly exhausted by the growing demand and the price of which is being advanced to unprecedented levels; and

Whereas the existing scarcity of pulp wood and its threatened total exhaustion in the United States has become a matter of such grave concern to the paper industry, the users and manufacturers of forest products, the Federal Government, and the general public that the Forest Service, the lumber and pulp and paper associations, and the forestry authorities of the country are now formulating a broad and comprehensive national forest conservation and reforestation plan for early adoption; and

Whereas the lieutenant governors of certain of the Provinces of Canada, in council, did issue orders prohibiting the exportation of pulp wood cut from Crown lands, the chief source of supply of pulp wood, unless manufactured into lumber, pulp, or paper, thereby tending to create a monopoly beyond our borders in the manufacture of paper, to the great detriment of the people of the United States: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, etc., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, requested to appoint a commission of five persons and, by appropriate authority, to confer on this commission the power, on behalf of the administration and the Congress, to negotiate with said Dominion Government, or with said provincial governments, in respect to the cancellation of said restrictive orders in council, and as well any other restrictions on the exportation of pulp wood and newsprint and other printing paper composed of mechanical and chemical products of pulp and pulp wood, from the Dominion of Canada to the United States.

SEC. 2. That in the event the cancellation of said restrictive orders in council can not be agreed to by mutual arrangement of the Governments of the United States of America and the Dominion of Canada, that said commission shall investigate, consider, and report to the President, on or before December 1, 1921, what action in its opinion should be taken by the Congress that will aid in securing the cancellation of said restrictive orders in council, so that they may not continue to militate against the interests of the people of the United States.

SEC. 3. That for the necessary expenses of said commission the sum of $50,000 be, and it is hereby, appropriated from the moneys in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 2, line 4, strike out "requested" and insert "authorized."

Page 2, line 7, strike out "or" and insert "also."

Page 2, line 8, strike out "said" and insert "the," and, after the word "governments," insert "thereof."

Page 3, line 16, after the word "appropriated," insert ": Provided, however, That the members of the commission shall serve without compensation."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object—and I certainly do not want to object—I do not think the preamble ought to remain in this resolution. I think there are some things in the preamble which, going officially from the United States to Canada, might be taken exception to, and as this is a case where we are approaching Canada in the hope that we will have her good will it seems to me that the preamble ought to be stricken out of the resolution. I would like to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts, who has given much attention to this matter, if he would object to striking out the preamble?

Mr. ROGERS. I am satisfied to have the preamble stricken out. I do not like preambles in a resolution anyway, and I think this is more objectionable than many others.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the Senate joint resolution?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend, page 2, line 7, by striking out the word "said" and inserting the word "the."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk informs the Chair that in the print which he has it should be line 6.

Mr. MANN. I have the reported bill; has the Clerk a star copy of the bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Perhaps the gentleman has the Senate print.

Mr. MANN. It may be. The Printing Office lately is very careless in its printing for Congress. It makes so many mistakes that nobody can keep up with it. Now, the Public Printer is a fine man, and I wish he would pay less attention to advertising himself in office and more to running the office.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 3, line 6, strike out the word "said" and insert in lieu thereof the word "the."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the word "said" before the word "restrictive," in line 10, page 3, and insert the word "the."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MANN: Page 3, line 10, strike out the word "said" before the word "restrictive" and insert in lieu thereof the word "the."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the committee amendments.

The Clerk severally reported the following committee amendments, which were severally agreed to:

Page 2, line 4, strike out the word "requested" and insert in lieu thereof the word "authorized."

Page 2, line 7, strike out the word "or" and insert in lieu thereof the word "also."

Page 2, line 8, strike out the word "said" and insert the word "the," and after the word "governments" insert the word "thereof."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That for the necessary expenses of said commission the sum of $50,000 be, and it is hereby, appropriated from the money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 3, line 16, after the word "appropriated," insert ": Provided, however, That the members of the commission shall serve without compensation."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I now move to strike out the preamble.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. ROGERS moves to strike out the preamble.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now is on the third reading of the joint resolution.

Mr. MCKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. I have not had opportunity to study the resolution, but there is one thing that strikes me with considerable force and that is that evidently we are going to get a commission to serve without pay. Who are these gentlemen? Are they in keeping with the dollar-a-year men we had during the war, or what is the purpose of it?

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, the attitude of the committee in considering the resolution was that this is in its essence temporary service, that it would be very much in opposition to what I suspect is the temper of the House to recommend the creation of a paid commission. We have two or three paid commissions in connection with the relationship between the United States and Canada. When the commissions are created we are assured that they will take a year or two years or three years at most, perhaps, for the completion of their entire task, and the decades pass, and yet those men are still holding down the jobs which were created for that purpose. The International Joint Commission between the United States and Canada is perhaps 10 years old. It has come to be a recognized position for the lame ducks of the party in power at the moment. The members of that commission get a salary of $7,500 a year. For one I have tried for many years to get those salaries reduced or perhaps abolished altogether, and each time the Senate comes forward and insists on the continuance of those salaries at the old scale. This work is in very large measure technical work. I have no information as to the people President Harding will appoint if the resolution becomes a law, but I should suppose that he would designate men who are now holding responsible governmental positions to take on this extra function. For example, perhaps the forester in the Department of Agriculture and some official in the Department of the Interior. There are other men now in the Government service who would naturally be appointed to perform this kind of work.

Mr. McKENZIE. What is the real purpose of this commission; what are they going to do? What evil are we suffering from now that it is necessary to have remedied?

Mr. ROGERS. The evil is a very real one. It is one that is growing increasingly vital as the years pass. This controversy has been continuing now for about 10 years. An effort has been made, and I think made in good faith, to settle the controversy through the usual diplomatic channels, but we are not making the slightest headway that anyone can ascertain toward an actual solution. We felt that the State Department had had time enough to bring this thing to a head and a solution and we felt that they had failed and that we better try some other way.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will pardon me, we are largely dependent upon Canada for our pulp-wood supply, pulp wood consisting in the main of spruce, although there are some other classes of firs used in the manufacture of print paper. The Canadian Provinces, as provinces, own most of the great forests of spruce wood in Canada, and they are known as Crown lands. They lease those Crown lands. A number of our paper manufacturers have leased large areas of those Crown lands in Canada. The Canadians have put in force in their leases a provision requiring that the pulp wood cut upon these Crown lands shall be manufactured in Canada, practically thereby prohibiting the export of pulp wood to the United States where it is cut on the Crown lands. There is still more or less privately owned land in Canada from which we do import considerable quantities of pulp wood. It may be that the Canadian Provinces after a while will not only forbid the exportation of pulp wood, but they may forbid the exportation of wood pulp, which is the pulp wood ground into pulp, and require that the pulp wood cut on the Crown lands shall be manufactured into paper in Canada. It will be a sad day for our manufacturers if they do, and I am not sure but that it will be a sad day for our newspaper owners, producers, and readers as well.

Mr. McKENZIE. If I understand the gentleman's explanation, and it has thrown some light on the matter, we have in this country certain corporations or partnerships or individuals engaged in the manufacture of print paper, using wood pulp brought in from Canada, but the Canadian Government has this restriction upon bringing over the lumber into this country to be manufactured at our mills. If I get the idea, the purpose of this commission is to go over to Canada to see if they can not make arrangements to have that restriction taken off. Am I right?

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is correct, and if they can not, I suppose in connection with that they will give consideration to restrictive measures that ought to be adopted on this side of the border line.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. McKENZIE. I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois if he does not believe that if the Canadians are as wide-awake as we are over on this side that the commission will have some difficulty?

Mr. MANN. Well, I can assure my colleague that the Canadians are wide-awake, not only in this but in other matters, and I am inclined to think they are much wider awake than we were when we passed the tariff bill the other day. However, this is not wholly a one-sided proposition. We require some things from them and they require some things from us. But, Mr. Speaker, I move to amend, page 3, line 14, by striking out "$50,000" and inserting "$10,000."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 14, strike out "$50,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$10,000."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I have no desire to restrict any needed money for this purpose.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I think the adoption of the committee amendment prohibiting the members of the commission from serving for compensation makes it possible materially to reduce the $50,000 which was reported in the bill, but whether $10,000 will be at all adequate I do not know. We can make inquiry about it and try to reconcile the difference in conference,

Mr. MANN. I do not believe that a commission of this sort which is bona fide ought to be used either for the appointment on the commission, or as counsel or otherwise, men who have passed out of public life and are now looking for a living.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment—

Mr. MANN. Oh, do not; let it go.

Mr. BLANTON. To strike out "$10,000" and insert "$5,000."

Mr. MANN. Let it go; I think we ought to make it $10,000.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] by striking out "$10,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$5,000."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask recognition for a moment. I think that this amendment ought to be passed. I think we ought to watch every one of these new commissions. If this measure carries any great amount, when we come to a final vote, I will vote against it. I agree with the gentleman from Illinois that this work is necessary to be done. It involves a subject that means much to the country, but there is no use spending any great amount of money on it; it is not necessary to spend it. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] knows, I believe, that $5,000 ought to cover every reasonable expense connected with this work, and what is there about it that requires the expenditure of any great sum of money? The committee has gotten in the habit, and other committees have, of putting in great big amounts on bills of this character. Hence, it put in here $50,000, and I think we ought to reduce it to $5,000, as that ought to be the limit.

Mr. MANN. I will say to the gentleman from Texas I hope they will not spend as much as $5,000, but I think it would be undesirable to put it at $5,000 when we do not know. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. I think my amendment ought to pass. But if it does not, we ought by all means to adopt the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] reducing this $50,000 to $10,000; otherwise we ought to defeat the passage of this measure.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken, and the Speaker pro tempore announced the yeas appeared to have it.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The House again divided; and there were—yeas 2, yeas 52.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote because there is no quorum present, and I make that point of order.

Mr. HERRICK. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman can not submit a parliamentary inquiry on a motion of no quorum.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution as amended was ordered to be read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the title be amended in accordance with the recommendation of the committee.

Mr. MANN. I suggest to the gentleman that in next to the last line, after the words "pulp wood," in the amendment, he insert the words "and paper."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment to title: After the word "wood," in next to the last line of the committee amendment to the title, insert the words "and paper."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment to the title as amended was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. ROGERS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that we have gone along pretty well with this Unanimous-Consent Calendar. I do not see anything of great importance left on it now.

Mr. MONDELL. It was my hope we could go through the calendar down to No. 92. There are three bills reported within the last few days and it has been a long time—

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I think we had better save a little seed for the next Unanimous-Consent Calendar day.

Mr. MONDELL. There are a number of bills here that are rather important.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I understand that there are some suspensions to be considered, and I think—

Mr. MONDELL. Only one.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee (continuing). We had better proceed with those.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Why stop at No. 92 on the calendar, which is one that ought to be passed immediately, if at all?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I will.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will not the gentleman permit at least the next one after this to be considered by the House? It is a bill of great importance to the disabled veterans of the World War.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It is to incorporate disabled veterans—

Mr. LONGWORTH. And it has the unanimous report of the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. MONDELL. May I suggest to the gentleman from Tennessee that there are a number of rather unimportant bills on the calendar that I am sure there is no objection to?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. That is true.

Mr. MONDELL. And we can dispose of them all while we are talking about it.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Those are the important ones, I think, that ought to be saved for seed.

Mr. MONDELL. I think that we can dispose of the remaining bills in 15 minutes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I think some of the suspensions best be tried out now.

Mr. MONDELL. There is only one.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I will.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Why should you suspect all the Members of the House as being at the ball game when some of us here are trying to do business?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I did not make any such charge.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The newspapers will. Every time this House adjourns prematurely, they say that we are at the ball game.

Mr. MONDELL. As the gentleman from Tennessee and myself never go to the ball game, I do not think we should allow that opinion to be formed.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The gentleman is facetious. I think we had best try suspensions unless the House sees fit to adjourn in the meantime.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6611) to establish in the Treasury Department a veterans' bureau and to improve the facilities and service of such bureau, and further to amend and modify the war risk insurance act, had receded from its amendments Nos. 13, 14, 15, 16, 18, 22, 23, 26, 28, 38, 46, 48, 53, 54, 56, 57, 59, 61, and 62, and had agreed to the amendments of the House to Senate amendments Nos. 12, 17, 19, 33, 37, 55, 67, and 83.

BRIDGE ACROSS OHIO RIVER, HUNTINGTON, W. VA.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, there is a bridge bill on the calendar, the last one. It went onto the calendar only Saturday, but we ought to pass all these bridge bills when we have the calendar up. I ask unanimous consent that the bill, Calendar No. 95, may be considered. It is S. 1934.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill No. 95 on the Unanimous-Consent Calendar. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, it is customary to take up bridge bills on days other than even unanimous-consent days, by unanimous consent, but I have no objection to crossing this bridge before we get to it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 1934) granting the consent of Congress to the Huntington & Ohio Bridge Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a highway and street railway toll bridge across the Ohio River between the city of Huntington, W. Va., and a point opposite in the State of Ohio.

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the Huntington & Ohio Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a highway and street railway toll bridge and approaches thereto across the Ohio River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, one end of said bridge being in the city of Huntington, W. Va., and the other end at a point opposite said city of Huntington, in the State of Ohio, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

Amend the title so as to read: "An act granting the consent of Congress to the Huntington & Ohio Bridge Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a highway and street railway bridge across the Ohio River between the city of Huntington, W. Va., and a point opposite in the State of Ohio."

The following committee amendment was read:

Page 1, line 6, strike out the word "toll."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended by striking out the word "toll" in the third line thereof.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill H. R. 216 be now considered.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is no quorum present.

Mr. CURRY. There is a real emergency calling for the passage of No. 91 (S. 2062) on the calendar.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. OSBORNE, until August 15, on account of important business.

To Mr. BRENNAN, for five days, on account of death in family.

To Mr. UNDERHILL, for two weeks, on account of illness in his family.

To Mr. ATKESON, for one week, on account of important business.

UNANIMOUS CONSENT CALENDAR.

Mr. CURRY. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that No. 91, for ratifying, confirming, and approving certain acts of the Legislature of Hawaii, be taken from the calendar and considered. There is a real emergency calling for the consideration of the bill at the present time.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The "gentleman from Ohio" received recognition to make a unanimous-consent request just before.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair was not aware of what either gentleman desired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I believe we shall get further along with the dispatch of business, inasmuch as objection was made and the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] was promised to be recognized, I think, to move suspension, and therefore I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The objection is made to the unanimous-consent requests of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] and the gentleman from California [Mr. CURRY].

Mr. CURRY. That objection does not take the bill off the calendar, does it?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It does not.

CORPS OF CADETS AT UNITED STATES MILITARY ACADEMY.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and take up the bill (S. 1358) to provide for maintaining the Corps of Cadets at the United States Military Academy at its maximum authorized strength, and for other purposes.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I make the point there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California moves to suspend the rules and pass the bill S. 1358, and the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. Wingo] raises the point of no quorum. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Ninety-six gentlemen are present.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, the Chair did not put the motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from California for a call of the House.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the yeas seemed to have it.

Mr. KAHN. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 42, noes 6.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I beg to make a privileged motion.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote, because it shows there is no quorum present, and I make the point of no quorum.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged motion, that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Arkansas moves that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of no quorum on the motion of the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN].

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a point of order against the motion of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO]. The House ordered a call of the House, and nothing is in order except that.

Mr. WINGO. I made that before the announcement was made.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO] is in order. The question is, Shall the House now adjourn?

The question was taken, and the motion was rejected.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

During the roll call,

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the Chair permit a parliamentary inquiry as to whether or not the count has disclosed a quorum?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The clerks have not reported yet.

Mr. BLANTON. I have seen clerks when they were faster than they are to-day. I ask for the regular order. I make the point of order that the clerks are dilatory. I make the point of order that the House is entitled to know whether or not there is a quorum.

Mr. MCARTHUR. I make the point of order, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman from Texas has no right to interrupt the roll call.

Mr. BLANTON. It is about 30 minutes since this roll call was commenced. I insist on the point of order that the House has the right to know whether there is a quorum present.

Mr. MONDELL. The regular order is demanded. The regular order is the securing of a quorum.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, the Speaker ought to issue his warrants.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, do I understand the Chair to rule that the motion to adjourn is not in order? I would like to call the attention of the Chair to a ruling by the Speaker here the other day, when a roll call was pending. He ruled that it was in order, pending the securing of a quorum; that the only business that this House can transact is either to adjourn or secure a quorum.

Mr. STEAGALL. You can do either one of those two things, I submit to the Chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is within the rule. That was under a special order. This is not. The Chair will try to dispose of the business of the House as rapidly as possible. The Chair is just as anxious as the gentlemen can be to secure a quorum, and we will await the determination of the clerks as to whether or not there is a quorum.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not think he ought to recognize the gentleman.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. What is the Chair going to do? Sit there like a— [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will be guided by the action of the House.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I think the Chair is just as uncomfortable as the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Replying to the gentleman's point in good faith, it has been absolutely decided that you could not interrupt a call of the House, so that you can not finally determine to dispense with further proceedings under the call until the determination of the question of a quorum.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Does the Chair know? If not, the Chair can not find out either fact.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is not nearly so much agitated as the gentleman.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. It is clear that the Chair is not agitated.

At the conclusion of the roll call—

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Two hundred and seventeen Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I move that further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California moves that further proceedings under the call be dispensed with. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The question was taken, and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the "ayes" appeared to have it.

Mr. WINGO. A division, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Arkansas asks for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 95, noes 24.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Arkansas demands the yeas and nays. Those seconding the demand will rise and stand until they are counted. [After counting.] Thirty Members have seconded the demand. Not a sufficient number.

Mr. WINGO. I demand the other side.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is no other side. The roll call has disclosed the number present.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules—

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from California will just not butt in for a moment; I demanded the other side. I think under the rule we are entitled to it on a call for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is not entitled to it under the rule.

Mr. WINGO. The present occupant of the chair rules that I am not entitled to it. All right.

Mr. KAHN. I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill S. 1358 as amended.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. I demand a second.

Mr. BLANTON. I make the point of order that the demand for a second comes prematurely, having been made before the bill has been reported.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas is correct.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Mr. Speaker, as a matter of fact the bill had been reported prior to the roll call, as I understand.

Mr. BLANTON. No; it has never been reported.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. WINGO. It was not reported.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The clerk will report the bill which the gentleman from California moves to suspend the rules and pass.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 1358) to provide for maintaining the Corps of Cadets at the United States Military Academy at its maximum authorized strength, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That whenever following any regular entrance examination the number of candidates authorized under existing law to report for admission to the United States Military Academy from any State is not sufficient to fill the quota of cadets authorized from that State, a sufficient number of qualified alternates therefrom not otherwise authorized to report for admission as such, selected in their order of merit established at such examination to fill said quota, shall be admitted and charged to that State as additional cadets. If such admissions do not bring the Corps of Cadets to its maximum authorized strength, a sufficient number of the remaining qualified alternates not otherwise authorized to report for admission as such, selected from the whole list in their order of merit established at such examination, sufficient to bring said corps to its maximum authorized strength, shall be admitted and charged to the United States at large as additional cadets: Provided, That the admission of alternates as authorized herein shall not interfere with or affect in any manner whatsoever any appointment otherwise authorized by law, and that if by the operation of this or any other provision of law the Corps of Cadets shall exceed its maximum authorized strength, the admission of alternates as herein prescribed shall cease until such time as said corps may be reduced below its authorized strength.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a second demanded?

Mr. WINGO. I demand a second, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I am a member of the committee, and I demand a second.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is the gentleman from Arkansas opposed to the bill?

Mr. WINGO. Very violently.

Mr. KAHN. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

Mr. WINGO. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I want to submit that, being a member of the Committee on Military Affairs and being opposed to the bill, I have a right to demand a second.

Mr. WINGO. I did not know the gentleman was opposed to the bill.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. I am.

Mr. WINGO. I judge the gentleman by the way he has voted. He has been voting with those in favor of the bill.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. The gentleman is entirely mistaken. I did no such thing.

Mr. WINGO. I challenge the gentleman's statement. I looked at him and asked him to vote with us, and he declined.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. I have not heard the gentleman make any such statement.

Mr. WINGO. I did, and I can prove it by a number of Members.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Speaker, I protest that this is not a Democratic laundry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made to the request that a second be considered as ordered. The gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARRETT] will take their places as tellers.

Mr. WINGO. I make the point of order that I demanded a second, and I am opposed to the bill; and the statement of the gentleman from Texas to the contrary notwithstanding, I deliberately charge that on the last division he voted with the friends of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California and the gentleman from Texas will take their places as tellers.

Mr. WINGO. Does the Speaker rule that I can be set aside by a man who insists that he has prior rights, when he voted with the friends of the bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. On the statement of the gentleman from Texas the Chair thinks he is entitled to act as one of the tellers.

Mr. QUIN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARRETT] opposed the bill in committee. He has opposed it all the time.

Mr. KAHN. And he was on his feet when the gentleman from Arkansas was also on his feet.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California and the gentleman from Texas will take their places as tellers. Those in favor of ordering a second will pass between the tellers and be counted.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 100, noes 23.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that there is no quorum present, and I make the point of no quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Arkansas makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. An automatic roll call is ordered. The Clerk will call the roll. As many as are in favor of ordering a second will vote "yea," those opposed "nay."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 160, nays 59, not voting 212, as follows:

SENATE.

TUESDAY, August 2, 1921.

(Legislative day of Wednesday, July 27, 1921.)

The Senate reassembled at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

EXPORTATION OF FARM PRODUCTS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1915) to provide for the purchase of farm products in the United States, to sell the same in foreign countries, and for other purposes.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CURTIS in the chair). The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Broussard	Caraway	Dial
Borah	Bursum	Culberson	Edge
Brandegee	Capper	Curtis	Ernst

Fernald	King	Overman	Sterling
Gerry	Ladd	Pittman	Sutherland
Gooding	La Follette	Pomerene	Swanson
Harrell	McCormick	Ransdell	Townsend
Harris	McCumber	Reed	Trammell
Harrison	McKellar	Sheppard	Wadsworth
Hedlin	McKinley	Shortridge	Walsh, Mass.
Hitchcock	McLean	Smith	Walsh, Mont.
Jones, Wash.	McNary	Smoot	Warren
Kellogg	Moses	Spencer	Watson, Ga.
Kenyon	Norbeck	Stanfield	Williams
Keyes	Oddie	Stanley	Willis

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to announce the absence of the junior Senator from Arizona [Mr. CAMERON] on official business.

I also wish to announce that the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] is detained at a meeting of the Committee on Finance.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE and Mr. BRANDEGEE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin is entitled to the floor. Does he yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Last evening after we had entered into the unanimous-consent agreement I gave notice in accordance with the rule as to a modification of unanimous-consent agreements that to-day I would ask unanimous consent that the existing agreement, which provides that the pending unfinished business shall be continued to the exclusion of all other business, shall be modified by inserting after the word "business" the words "except routine morning business and such matters as may be agreed to by unanimous consent." That would take care of any emergency matter or a message from the President or the House of Representatives or the introduction of bills, joint resolutions, and so forth.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. KENYON. I am not rising to object, but I wish to get the parliamentary viewpoint of the Senator from Connecticut. The unanimous-consent agreement was not for a final vote and did not require a roll call. Under those circumstances, does the Senator believe that it was necessary to give a day's notice in order to ask a change, or does the rule apply only to agreements to take a final vote?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I thought it was necessary, and that is the reason why I gave the notice.

Mr. KENYON. I thought perhaps the Senator had reflected upon it since.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. No.

Mr. KENYON. I think the rule applies only to a unanimous-consent agreement which requires a roll call and is for a final vote.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. STERLING. I should like to ask what is the difference between a unanimous-consent agreement such as the Senator from Connecticut desires and an adjournment followed by a morning hour with routine morning business; that is, the presentation of petitions, the introduction of bills and joint resolutions, and so forth?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Of course, what is known as routine morning business usually occurs in the morning hour; that is, the introduction of bills and joint resolutions, the presentation of petitions, and so forth. It does not mean that unless we have an adjournment we can not have any routine morning business. Such things as usually constitute routine morning business when we do have a morning hour would be admissible under this consent agreement, in my view.

Mr. STERLING. It would not mean that the morning hour might be taken up in the discussion of resolutions or questions arising under the order of petitions, memorials, and matters of that kind?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. No; because such a discussion could not take place in the morning hour anyway except by unanimous consent, and this provides that it can be done by unanimous consent. The idea is that if there should come up some emergency measure and the Senate thought it of sufficient importance to require passage, unanimous consent could be given so that the Government would not be crippled; but, of course, unanimous consent would not be given except for a measure of such magnitude.

The reason why I proposed that the unfinished business should be held before the Senate to the exclusion of all other business was that at that time the proposed unanimous-consent agreement was so framed as that it provided that at 3 o'clock to-morrow we should vote, so that we were only excluding other business for a limited time. But afterwards the agreement was changed, and I had not kept track of the change, so as to provide simply that after 2 o'clock to-morrow no one shall speak longer than 10 minutes, so that no time is fixed for a vote now. The debate has been limited to 10-minute speeches after 2 o'clock to-morrow, and therefore we ought not to tie ourselves up so tight as is done by the existing unanimous-consent agreement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut? The Chair hears none, and the amendment to the unanimous-consent agreement is agreed to. The Senator from Wisconsin has the floor.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. I submit at this time an amendment which I shall offer to the pending bill whenever we reach the point where the amendment will be in order. I simply desire at this time to have it read and to say just a word in explanation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho desire to have the amendment to the amendment read?

Mr. BORAH. I desire to have it read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment which is proposed by the Senator from Idaho to the amendment.

The READING CLERK. At the end of the amendment it is proposed to add the following as a new section:

That an act entitled "An act to provide capital for agricultural development, to create a standard form of investment based upon farm mortgage, to equalize rates of interest upon farm loans, to furnish a market for United States bonds, to create Government depositaries and financial agents for the United States, and for other purposes," and known as the Federal farm loan act, be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding thereto a section to be known as "section 12a," reading as follows:

"Sec. 12a. The lien reserved to the Government of the United States, however created, for payment to it of construction charges, and charges for operation and maintenance, and all penalties required to be paid under the act of June 17, 1902 (32 Stat., p. 388), and acts amendatory thereof or supplementary thereto, shall not be construed to be a lien or incumbrance as contemplated by this act, wherein loans under this act shall be secured by first mortgages on farm lands, to the end that the provisions of said Federal farm loan act shall extend to lands within all Government reclamation projects, without regard to Government liens for payment of said charges."

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the proposed amendment to the amendment is somewhat long, but it involves a very simple proposition. I can state it in a word. Under the Federal farm loan act as it now exists the Farm Loan Board is prohibited from making loans upon reclamation farms for the reason it has been determined such loans must be first-mortgage loans. The amendment is simply designed to exclude the lien which the Government may have upon lands within reclamation projects, so as to permit the Farm Loan Board to make loans upon reclamation projects notwithstanding the fact that the Government may have a lien for charges and for expenses in connection with building the canals, and so forth.

As we know, the Farm Loan Board has construed the law in such a way that at the present time it is impossible under the law to make a loan to parties holding lands under Government reclamation projects. By this proposed legislation it is desired simply to extend the farm loan act so that its benefits may accrue to settlers on reclamation projects. The proposed amendment has no other purpose than to permit loans upon the lands under reclamation projects, the lien of the Government notwithstanding.

Mr. ASHURST and Mr. SMOOT addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield, and if so, to whom?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield first to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I am glad that the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] has submitted his amendment to the amendment. I presented an amendment on last Thursday, the 28th ultimo, similar to the one now submitted by the Senator from Idaho. It would seem that the Senator from Idaho is following me in this task, but really he is not; he is leading, rather, because the amendment which was presented by myself on last Thursday was, in fact, almost an exact copy of a bill which the Senator from Idaho had introduced on the same subject some months ago.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. ASHURST. I have not the floor, but, with the permission of the Senator from Wisconsin, I will yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. Do I understand that the Senator from Arizona has offered the amendment to which he refers to the pending bill?

Mr. ASHURST. Yes; I have offered it to the so-called Norris bill.

Mr. BORAH. I did not know that. I shall be very glad to support the Senator's amendment.

Mr. ASHURST. I want it distinctly understood that the Senator from Idaho is only apparently later than myself in offering the amendment, for the one which I submitted was copied from his bill. The language of his bill was so appropriate that I copied the Senator's bill in my amendment.

If the Senator from Wisconsin will pardon me a moment further, I am not so certain that the amendment will not develop into the best feature of the proposed bill. Senators, recollect what the Reclamation Service has done in 19 years. It has transformed 3,000,000 acres of land, originally worth only about $5 an acre, or, in the aggregate, $15,000,000, into fields and farms of a value now aggregating $600,000,000.

Each year the value of the agricultural products of this reclaimed land, not counting live-stock products, amounts to $90,000,000. The total value of agricultural products, not counting the live stock which has been grown on those irrigation projects, aggregate $400,000,000. Five hundred thousand people are now housed and employed on those reclamation projects; 50,000 homes have been built thereon. The work of the Reclamation Service is the epic of our western world, yet, as the learned Senator from Idaho has pointed out, the very people living beneath and under these projects are precluded from the benefits of the Federal farm loan law.

The Senator from Idaho has a record so illustrious with rich statesmanship and work for the good of his country that it is difficult to know which of his efforts to praise the most, but of all the good work he has done or may in the future do for the agricultural interests of this country no greater work can be done, no more true statesmanship can be exhibited, than to pass a bill which will permit the farmers under the reclamation projects to share in the benefits of the Federal farm loan law.

I thank the Senator from Wisconsin for yielding to me at this point.

JOINT COMMITTEE ON REORGANIZATION.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Senate resolution 109. I intended to call the resolution up last night. It proposes to provide for the payment of the employees of the Joint Committee on Reorganization.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to consideration of the resolution referred to by the Senator from Utah, which will be stated?

The READING CLERK. A resolution (S. Res. 109) to provide for payment of expense of Joint Committee on the Reorganization of the administrative branch of the Government out of the contingent fund.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. PITTMAN. I should like to have the resolution read, in order that we may understand what it is.

Mr. SMOOT. I will state to the Senator from Nevada what the resolution proposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Let the Secretary read the resolution, as that is the quickest way to dispose of the matter.

The reading clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 109), which had been submitted by Mr. Smoot on July 12, 1921, and reported from the Committee on Appropriations July 15, 1921, as follows:

Resolved, That, pursuant to the authority contained in the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution to create a Joint Committee on the Reorganization of the Administrative Branch of the Government" (Public Resolution No. 54, 66th Cong.), and in the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution to authorize the President of the United States to appoint a representative of the Executive to cooperate with the Joint Committee on Reorganization" (Public Resolution No. 1, 67th Cong.), there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate one-half of the expense of said Joint Committee on Reorganization, upon vouchers countersigned by the chairman of the said committee on the part of the Senate and approved by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, as I understand, the money for the payment of the employees of the joint committee is to come from the contingent fund of the Senate?

Mr. SMOOT. Half of it is to come from the contingent fund of the Senate and half of it from the contingent fund of the House.

Mr. OVERMAN. Why is not a direct appropriation made to cover this expense?

Mr. SMOOT. Because the original joint resolution provided that the expenses should be taken care of in this way from the contingent fund. I will say to the Senator that the House has already passed a resolution providing that half of the expenses may be taken from the contingent fund of the House, but it will be impossible to pay the employees until the pending resolution is passed by the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

COMPARISON OF PROPOSED FEDERAL HIGHWAY LEGISLATION.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Will the Senator from Wisconsin yield to me to make a request to have a statement printed in the RECORD?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Certainly; I yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads requested me recently to prepare a comparison of the two road bills now pending. I have done that, and ask leave to have the comparison printed in the RECORD in parallel columns.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The comparison referred to is as follows:

SELECTION AND DESIGNATION OF ROADS.

Dowell bill—Continued.

Sec. of Ag. and S. H. D.'s shall agree on roads to be constructed and the character and method of construction. (Sec. 1, 1916.)

Sec. of Ag. shall have authority to approve in whole or part or require modifications or revisions thereof.

S. H. D. shall select not exceeding 7 per cent of State road mileage, not exceeding  $\frac{1}{4}$ ths of which shall be known as primary or interstate roads and the balance ( $\frac{3}{4}$ ) secondary or intercounty roads.

States shall submit any proposed revisions of the system selected.

When provision made for completion and maintenance of the system 7 per cent more may be added. (D., sec. 6.)

PROJECTS.

S. H. D. shall submit projects, "setting forth proposed construction of any rural post road or roads therein." (D., sec. 4.)

If projects approved, State shall furnish such surveys, plans, specifications, and estimates therefor as the Sec. of Ag. may require. (D., sec. 4.)

Preference shall be given to "such projects as will expedite the completion of an adequate and connected system of roads interstate in character." (D., sec. 4.)

"Upon this system (7 per cent) all Federal aid shall be expended." (D., sec. 4.)

Not less than 60 per cent of all Federal aid shall be expended on the primary or interstate roads until provision has been made for the entire system. (D., sec. 6.)

CONDITIONS PRECEDENT.

Legislative assent to this act. (Sec. 1, 1916.)

Submit project statements. (D., sec. 4.)

Not later than 3 years after adjournment of first regular session of legislature after passage of act State must provide funds "equal to apportionment of Federal funds allotted each year for construction of roads."

"Provide a State fund adequate for the maintenance of Federal-aid roads and by law shall place said maintenance work under the direct supervision of the S. H. D." or—

If the State constitution or laws do not provide for such fund and maintenance, projects may be approved until 3 years after adjournment of first regular session of legislature if "funds for maintenance are appropriated or provided by the civil subdivisions of the State and expended under direct control of the S. H. D." (D., sec. 4.)

The commission, in cooperation with the S. H. D., shall from time to time, and subject to such changes as deemed advisable, select, designate, and establish an interstate system composed of primary roads, with due consideration for the agricultural, commercial, postal, and military needs, and afford ingress and egress from each State and the D. of C.

When these are built in any State, the commission then to cooperate with the S. H. D. in selecting, etc., other highways connecting or correlating therewith.

"If any S. H. D. fails, neglects, or refuses to cooperate, or fails to agree with the commission, the commission may then determine the selection, designation, and establishment of the route or routes." (T., sec. 6.)

S. H. D. shall submit project statements, setting forth proposed construction, etc.

If projects approved, State shall furnish such surveys, plans, specifications, and estimates therefor as the commission may require. (T., sec. 23.)

In any State where the interstate roads have been constructed according to standard adequate for traffic, then aid extended to construction of connecting roads. (T., sec. 6.)

State must make "adequate provision for the maintenance of all highways selected in that State which have been or which may hereafter be constructed according to adequate standards approved by the commission." (T., sec. 6.)

The point has been raised that States should be required to provide only the amount needed to match the Federal aid, which in the public-land States is less than half. Why require an amount "equal to apportionment before approving project"?

It has been suggested that the regular sessions of the legislatures do not meet until 1923 in most States. Three years after that makes 5 years' grace added to the 5 years the law has been in force, making 10 years. That few States have a "law" providing for a "maintenance fund" or a law placing the work under direct control of the S. H. D., and practically no civil subdivisions of States have a law permitting these subdivisions to collect taxes for expenditure "under direct control of the S. H. D." In such cases the point has been raised, How could a State have a project approved?

CONSTRUCTION.

Dowell bill—Continued.

"The construction work and labor in each State shall be done in accordance with its laws and under the direct supervision of the S. H. D., subject to the inspection and approval of the Sec. of Ag. and in accordance with the rules and regulations made pursuant to this act." (Sec. 6, 1916.)

"The construction and reconstruction work and labor in each State shall be done in accordance with its laws and under the direct supervision of the S. H. D., subject to the inspection and approval of the commission and in accordance with the rules and regulations pursuant to this act." (T., sec. 23.)

That the construction and reconstruction of such highways Federal funds may be expended on under this act shall be undertaken by the S. H. D. subject to the approval of the commission. (T., sec. 8.)

PAYMENTS.

When project completed, or may arrange for partial payments as the work progresses. (Sec. 6, 1916.)

Not to exceed $20,000 per mile plus portion State's part is reduced on account of public-land area, which is in proportion the "unappropriated and reserved lands" bear to total area of State.

When project completed, or may arrange for partial payments as the work progresses. (T., sec. 23.)

No mention is made of limit per mile, but this provision in present law not being "inconsistent" with provisions of Townsend bill, the $20,000 per mile probably applies.

MAINTENANCE.

"State shall provide a State fund adequate for the maintenance of Federal-aid roads and by law shall place said maintenance work under the direct control of the S. H. D." Or if the constitution or laws of the State do not provide for such fund and control the civil subdivisions must provide the funds to be expended under direct control of S. H. D. Or no projects will be approved. (D., sec. 4.)

"To maintain the rural post roads constructed under the provisions of this act shall be the duty of the States." (D., sec. 5.)

No project shall be approved until the State has made adequate provision for maintenance of all roads then or thereafter constructed with Federal aid. (T., sec. 6.)

PENALTY.

If roads are not properly maintained Sec. of Ag. shall give notice to the S. H. D.

If within 100 days they are not put in proper condition Sec. of Ag. shall refuse to approve any project.

Sec. of Ag. shall proceed immediately to have road put in proper condition and charge the cost to Federal fund allotted to that State.

Upon reimbursement by the State the funds reimbursed will be placed in the U. S. Treasury to the credit of miscellaneous receipts and the

If State fails to maintain roads after construction the commission shall give notice to the S. H. D.

If within 60 days the road is not placed in proper condition, the commission shall refuse to approve any further project in the State and proceed to put the road in condition and charge the cost against the Federal fund allotted to that State.

Upon reimbursement by the State the funds reimbursed to be placed back in the Federal fund to the credit of the State

Sec. of Ag. shall then approve further projects. (D., sec. 5.)

It has been suggested the Federal road fund should not be deprived of the money reimbursed. In fact, only one State so far has failed in its undertaking to maintain, and this was for lack of funds, then why should such a severe penalty be imposed?

The point has also been raised that this language requires the State to maintain the Federal-aid roads, constituting 7% of the total road mileage, as soon as they are elected and whether constructed or not, which might be very burdensome to some States and possibly bar them entirely from qualifying to receive Federal aid.

No provision.

and further projects may then be approved.

The commission may do the work and buy or lease the necessary equipment, etc., to repair the road. (T., sec. 6.)

"The commission shall establish an accounting division in its organization, which shall devise and install a proper method of keeping the commission's accounts." (T., sec. 4.)

EXPENSES.

The Sec. of Ag. empowered to employ assistants, clerks, and other persons from civil service lists of eligibles, rent buildings outside of Washington, and purchase such supplies, materials, equipment, office fixtures, and apparatus, and to incur such travel expenses as he may deem necessary. (Sec. 9, 1916.)

The commission shall employ and fix the salary of a chief engineer, a secretary, and such accounting, engineering, and other assistants and employees as it deems necessary. With the exception of the chief engineer, secretary, and labor to be taken from civil service lists.

No salary to exceed $5,000 per annum shall be paid except to the chief engineer, and in fixing the salaries to be governed by the salaries paid other Government employees. (T., sec. 4.)

The commission may incur expense for transportation, rent, travel, office equipment, etc. (Sec. 5.)

EXPENSE FUND.

Not to exceed 3% of the fund shall be set aside for expenses and the balance remaining at the end of the year be turned into the general fund for apportionment to the States.

Not to exceed 1½% of the fund shall be set aside for expenses, and the balance remaining at the end of the year shall within 60 days after the close be turned into the general fund for apportionment to the States. (T., sec. 20.)

WAR SURPLUS MATERIALS.

The Sec. of War authorized to turn over to the Sec. of Ag. war material, equipment, and supplies not needed for war and suitable for road work, reserving 10% for forest road work.

Those turned over to be allotted to the States in the same proportion as funds. (Sec. 7, 1919.)

Same provision in Townsend bill. (T., sec. 7.)

MAPS.

No provision.

"Within two years * * * the commission shall prepare, publish, and distribute a map showing highways and forest roads it has selected * * * and at least annually thereafter * * * supplementary maps showing its program in selection, construction, and reconstruction." (T., sec. 9.)

TRANSFER OF LANDS GRANTED TO RAILROAD AND CANAL COMPANIES.

No provision.

"Consent of the U. S. is hereby given to any railroad or canal company to convey * * * any part of its right of way or other property in that State acquired by grant from the U. S." to the S. H. D. (T., sec. 11.)

"If the commission determines that any part of the public lands or reservations of the U. S. is reasonably necessary for the right of way * * * or as a source of materials * * * for the construction or maintenance * * * the commission shall file with the Sec. of the department supervising such land a map, etc."

The Secretary may grant the request imposing conditions for the protection of the public estate, or failing to do this may certify that the appropriation would be contrary to the public interest or inconsistent with the purpose for which the lands or materials were reserved. If he does neither within four months the commission may proceed to appropriate the lands or materials. (T., sec. 12.)

TYPES OF ROAD.

Must be free from tolls. (Sec. 1, 1916.)

"The Sec. of Ag. shall approve only such projects as may be substantial in character, and the expenditure of funds hereby authorized shall be applied only on such improvements." (D., sec. 4.)

Must be free from tolls. (T., sec. 6.)

"That only such durable types of surface and kinds of material shall be adopted * * * as will adequately meet the existing and probable future traffic needs and conditions thereon."

"* * * consideration being given to the type and character which shall be best suited for each locality and to the probable character and extent of the future traffic." (T., sec. 13.)

"That all highways in the interstate system constructed after the passage of this act shall have a right of way of ample width and a wearing surface of an adequate width which shall be not less than 20 feet unless, in the opinion of the commission, it is rendered impracticable by physical conditions, excessive costs, probable traffic requirements, or legal obstacles." (T., sec. 14.)

INFORMATION—PUBLICATION OF.

"The Sec. of Ag. shall encourage more general understanding of the economic use of public roads and highways, and shall collect, publish, and demonstrate for the benefit of all sections of the U. S. useful information on highway transport, construction, and maintenance, which shall include such recommendations as he may deem necessary for preserving and protecting the highways and insuring the safety of traffic thereon." (D., sec. 8.)

"The commission shall encourage a more general understanding of the economic use of public roads and highways, and shall collect, publish, and disseminate for the benefit of all sections of the U. S. useful information on highway transport, construction, and maintenance." (T., sec. 15.)

RULES.

"That the Sec. of Ag. is authorized to make rules and regulations carrying out the provisions of this act." (Sec. 10, 1916.)

"That the commission shall prescribe rules and promulgate all needful rules and regulations for the carrying out of the provisions of this act, includ-

STATES EXEMPT WHEN.

"Provided further, That nothing herein shall be deemed to prevent any State from receiving such portion of said principal sum as is available under its existing constitution and laws." (Sec. 6, 1919.)

"Provided further, That nothing herein shall be deemed to prevent any State from receiving such portion of said principal sum as is available under existing constitution and laws, or to receive their proportionate share of each year's appropriation under existing constitution and laws until 3 years after the adjournment of the next regular session of the legislature from and after approval of this act." (D. sec. 2.)

ing such recommendations as the commission may deem necessary for preserving and protecting the highways and insuring the safety of traffic thereon." (T., sec. 16.)

"The commission is authorized to cooperate with the State H. D. and with the Department of the Interior in the construction of public highways within Indian reservations, etc." (Sec. 17, T.)

ANNUAL REPORTS.

That on or before the first Monday in December of each year the commission shall make a report to Congress, which shall include a detailed statement of the work done, the status of each project undertaken, the allocation of appropriations, the expenditures and receipts during the year, an itemized statement of traveling and other expenses, list of employees, their duties, salaries, and traveling expenses, etc. (Sec. 18, T.)

"Any State desiring to avail itself of the benefits of this act shall, not later than two years from and after the passage of this act, make provisions for State funds required each year of such State by this act for the construction and reconstruction of highways." (T., sec. 22.)

tain and they are expended under direct control of the S. H. D. (D. sec. 6.)

EX-SOLDIERS—PREFERENCE FOR.

Sec. 6 of the act of 1919 provides that ex-soldiers, sailors, and marines should be given preference.

Sec. 4 of the Dowell bill amends the first paragraph of sec. 6 of the "act of 1916 as amended."

There is but one paragraph in sec. 6 of the act of 1919, and if sec. 4 of the Dowell bill is intended to amend this, then the provision preferring the ex-soldiers, etc., is dropped out and ceases to be a part of the road law.

Officers or enlisted men of the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps engaged in road work shall be paid the difference between Army pay and compensation to civilians for the same work on roads. (Sec. 9, 1919.)

No provision.

INVALID.

Provides that if part of the act should be held invalid, it will not invalidate the whole act. (T., sec. 19.)

PUBLIC LAND STATES.

The share of Federal aid set aside for the State shall not exceed 50% of the total cost per mile of the road, except in "States containing unappropriated public lands and reservations under Federal control exceeding 5% of the total area" of the State, in which case the amount set aside for the project from the funds apportioned to the State shall be the 50% plus a percentage of the total cost equal to one-half the percentage the unappropriated public lands and reservations bear to the total area of the State. (D., sec. 4.)

FOREST ROADS.

No appropriations.

50% of the appropriations made under the act of 1919 to be expended on roads within and partly within the national forests and apportioned among the States, Territories, and insular possessions in the ratio the area of such forests in the State bear to the total area of the State, and the remaining 50% expended on roads and trails necessary for the protection, administration, and utilization of the national forests, and shall be apportioned by the Sec. of Ag. in proportion to the relative needs of the national forests, taking into consideration existing transportation facilities, value of timber or other resources served, relative fire danger, and comparative difficulties of construction. (D., sec. 7.)

"That the cooperative agreement for the survey, construction, and maintenance * * * shall be between the Sec. of Ag. and the proper officials of the State, Territory, or insular possessions." (D., sec. 7.)

"Other things being equal, preference shall be given to honorably discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines." (T. sec. 4.)

Adjusted pay for soldiers, sailors, and marines doing road work is not mentioned, but, being part of the present law and not inconsistent with the provisions of the bill, would probably remain as the law.

Provides that when the commission shall approve any project the Sec. of the Treasury shall then set aside not to exceed 50% of the cost as estimated, except in States containing unappropriated public lands exceeding 5% of the total area of the State, in which case the Sec. shall set aside the 50% plus a percentage of the total estimated cost equal to one-half the percentage which the area of the unappropriated lands in such State bears to the total area of such State. (T., sec. 22.)

Appropriates $5,000,000 for the year 1921-1922 and $10,000,000 for the year 1922-1923 for the survey, construction, reconstruction, and maintenance of forest roads. (T., sec. 24.)

Forest roads defined to be "roads wholly or partly within or adjacent to and serving the forest reserves." (T., sec. 2.)

The funds to be apportioned among the States and Alaska according to the area and value of Government-owned lands within national forest reserves. (T., sec. 24.)

Commission may purchase, hire, or lease all necessary supplies, equipment, and facilities it deems necessary to perform the work. (T., sec. 24.)

"That the commission is authorized to enter into contracts with the Sec. of Ag. for the construction, reconstruction, or maintenance of any forest roads." (T., sec. 24.)

If more than $8,000,000 is appropriated for any one year under the provisions of this section the excess shall be added to the 50% applicable to roads forming parts of or extensions of the system of main State roads. (D., sec. 7.)

It has been suggested: That distribution according to area alone was unfair and not an equitable distribution. It should be according to area and value, as near the basis as possible upon which taxes are levied.

That the provision in the Dowell bill applies only to the appropriations made under the act of 1919, which were $3,000,000 for 1919, $3,000,000 for 1920, and $3,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921. Nearly all of this has been expended and does not apply to future appropriations. This should be made to apply to future appropriations.

The provisions in the Townsend bill should be made clear that that part of the money to be used in building roads and trails for the protection and utilization of the lands should be under the supervision of the Sec. of Ag. (Forest Service) and the balance under the Federal highway department.

BRITISH INFLUENCE IN THE SHIPPING BOARD.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE resumed and concluded the speech begun by him on Friday last upon British influence in the Shipping Board. The speech is published entire as follows:

Monday, August 1, 1921.

BRITISH INFLUENCE IN SHIPPING BOARD.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, on Friday evening before the Senate took a recess I had taken the floor and had submitted some observations upon a resolution which I introduced some time ago and which is upon the table. I discussed the resolution for some 5 or 10 minutes. However, as there were but few Senators present at that time I wish briefly to make a résumé of the matter which I then submitted.

On the 25th of July I submitted some observations to the Senate on one branch of the investigation which the resolution which I have presented contemplated, and that was the attitude of the Shipping Board toward American seamen. On that date I referred back to the differences between the American seamen and the Shipping Board, and I believe I made it clear that the policy of the Shipping Board with respect to American seamen is such that it is impossible for us to build up under that policy an American merchant marine.

The interest of the American people in the American merchant marine is twofold. First, it is that we shall establish a condition with respect to the American ships that fly the American flag that will insure us in time of war an auxiliary to our Navy. Basic to that proposition, of course, is the personnel who man the ships of the American merchant marine. It is vitally essential, as I see it, and I believe the history of shipping the world over sustains the view that, in order that any merchant marine built up by any national government shall be useful to that government in time of war, the men who man the ships must be of the nationality that supports that merchant marine. Applying it to our own case, I hold that it is vital, if we are to have an American merchant marine, that our ships shall be manned by American sailors.

That was the theme of the discussion in the remarks which I submitted to the Senate on the 25th of last month. Then in that connection I said to the Senate that the attitude of the Shipping Board with regard to Great Britain was, I believe, so hostile to the upbuilding of an American merchant marine that if it were once submitted to the Senate and to the American people and understood by them not one dollar of money would be contributed to support the Shipping Board and enable it to carry on its policies unless they were radically changed. I believe that attitude of the Shipping Board is such; I believe that the whole policy upon which we are proceeding is such that if it is once definitely and clearly understood by the American people no Senator and no Member of the House of Representatives will vote one dollar of taxation upon the American people to support that policy.

Mr. President, when I addressed the Senate on the 25th of last month, making what I believed to be a demonstration of the fact that the labor policy of the Shipping Board is such that we can not build up an American merchant marine manned by American sailors, I said in that connection that I would also take up the discussion of the attitude of our organization known as the Shipping Board toward the British interests and British shipping, and that I thought I would be able to show to the Senate and to the country that that attitude is one which contributes not to the upbuilding of an American merchant marine in any sense of the word, but to the upbuilding of British shipping, and I think I am prepared to make the next installment of my argument in conclusive support of that proposition.

So, Mr. President, I have this to say: It has been announced that we are about to be confronted with a proposition to appropriate $300,000,000 to the Shipping Board to carry on its present policies, and Members of this body and of the House will be confronted with the responsibility of taxing the farmer, the laborer, the manufacturer, the man engaged in mercantile pursuits, to the extent of a million dollars a day, counting only the working days, to support the policies of the Shipping Board as at present conducted.

However, if it is worth while to tax the people of the country to maintain an organization that shall build up an American merchant marine not only as an auxiliary of the Navy, but to insure us fair treatment in our overseas trade, it must mean that it is important that there shall be in that overseas trade vessels flying the American flag supported by the American people and promoting the transfer of our products across the sea to the markets of the world. How can an organization of that kind minister to the producers of this country, whether they be manufacturers or producers from the soil, unless the shipping organization which is built competes with foreign shippers and the owners of foreign lines? If it shall develop that all of the aid which through taxation we turn into the so-called upbuilding of an American merchant marine contributes to the building up of the greatest rival that we have in overseas commerce, then the American people are betrayed in every dollar of taxes levied to support an organization of that kind.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do.

Mr. MOSES. Is the Senator from Wisconsin referring to policies which are now actually in force by the Shipping Board or which have been in force in the past?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I am referring to policies which not only have been in force, but which are being continued in force up to the present moment.

Mr. MOSES. Does the Senator discover any indication in the action of the Shipping Board that those policies are to be continued?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Undoubtedly. I have discovered that by the appointment of men taking charge of the assignment of our ships, men in charge of the operation of ships which we are bleeding at every vein and every artery to sustain in these distressing times, who are going to the support of a British merchant marine rather than to an American merchant marine. It is to make something approaching at least a demonstration of that proposition that I have taken the floor and that I appeal to the Senate for its considerate attention and upon which I ask the attention of the country.

There hangs upon the wall of this Chamber [indicating] a map which I have made after a somewhat critical study of the ramifications of the shipping interests; and, Mr. President, I ask Senators to yield me their attention while I discuss this subject. I venture to say it will be worth their while to do so, for they are to be called upon, as stated by the chairman of the Committee on Commerce, the distinguished author of the Jones Act of 1920, to vote in a few days $300,000,000 additional in order to support the policy of the present Shipping Board.

Mr. President, I am now going to come back to my manuscript. I do so for the sake of saving time, because I find that when I depart from my manuscript I amplify. I beg the attention of Senators.

THE CHARGE OF BRITISH CONTROL.

The charge that British influences are at work to control the policies of our merchant marine has been so frequently and recently made and upon such high authority that it can not longer be ignored. For example, on the 6th of June last the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] on the floor of the Senate said this:

I think it is a safe statement—I hazard the statement—that of the 300 employees [of the United States Shipping Board] across the sea, 75 per cent are British subjects, and some of the most important positions are filled by British subjects, such, for instance, as that of marine superintendent, Capt. Blake, who is getting a salary of $8,000 a year, a British subject, and his entire department is composed of British subjects.

The remarks I have just quoted will be found in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of June 6, 1921, page 2157.

Before I conclude what I have to say I expect to lay before the Senate information showing that it is not necessary to go across the sea to find men powerful in the affairs of American shipping whose interests and sympathies are far more British than American.

Who is it that is our commercial rival for overseas trade? Great Britain, of course. There is no other country which compares with Great Britain so far as tonnage is concerned. I take it that is what the Senator from Iowa was speaking about when he made the statement before the Senate which I have just quoted. In order to confirm that, I addressed a letter to the Shipping Board and asked them to send me a statement of the employees of the present Shipping Board, their residence, and their allegiance. I have their reply here; I have compared it with the statement of the Senator from Iowa and of the Senator from Missouri, who spoke following the Senator from Iowa, and I find in it, Mr. President and Senators, that which challenges the attention of every Senator who shall be called upon to vote dollars out of the pockets of the American taxpayers and into the coffers of our Shipping Board.

Mr. President, I realize that the Shipping Board has changed in personnel within the last two months. I waited before saying a word upon my resolution in order to see what the trend of the policy of the new Shipping Board might be. If I had seen a radical change, if I had seen that they canceled the cost-plus contracts under which we are being bled at every artery by a cost that is staggering, and under a policy that this Congress has condemned, I should have waited longer before speaking. Moreover, if I had seen that there was any change in the attitude of the present Shipping Board, the new Shipping Board, toward labor, I would have waited; but no; they have not only adopted the policies of the old board with respect to American seamen, but they have pushed them even further, until there is a feeling on the part of the American seamen in this country toward the American merchant marine that is one of open hostility and antagonism. Sir, that is not the policy of our great rival, Great Britain. She has adopted a policy of cooperation with the Seamen's Union of Great Britain. As I said on the 25th day of July in that branch of the discussion which I then engaged in, she has turned over to the British Seamen's Union the employment of the men who shall operate the ships under the British Jack. They are working in harmony. Their sailors accepted the 15 per cent reduction, just as our sailors, as shown in the correspondence which I submitted here on the 25th of July, were ready to accept the 15 per cent reduction; but, no, there is a spirit of hostility here on this side of the Atlantic different from the spirit prevailing over there. Why? Because the men who are benefiting under the taxation which we are imposing upon the American people are more interested in the upbuilding of the British merchant marine than in the upbuilding of an American merchant marine. I have the proof of that statement, and I am prepared to establish that fact.

Men who are masquerading as the sponsors of an American merchant marine are the emissaries of Great Britain. They are to be found in the Commerce Department of this Government; they have had their representatives there for years. I know some of the new members of the Shipping Board, and I have as much confidence in their integrity as I have in my own; but they are so surrounded, just as Congress is, with respect to news, that they can not get the light from the outside.

I called the attention of the Senate on Saturday night to the fact that a man had been appointed to investigate the operations in this country of the British merchant marine and the British Government in confining, undermining, and destroying the effect of all the appropriations that we are making here. That man was Roscoe C. Mitchell, assistant to the special commissioner in Europe, and it was made to Capt. Foley, Director of Operations, United States Shipping Board, under date of March 14. It was a mighty important report. Mr. Mitchell went out of office after having made it, and Foley is out of office to-day.

It was an exposé of what is going on upon the other side. I shall not tax the patience of Members to read from that report now. I shall print it, unless it is called for. It is well worth your reading. It is well worth your consideration before you vote another dollar in support of this enterprise that is reaching into the Treasury day by day up to its armpits.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Notwithstanding the natural advantages I have enumerated and the fact that England enjoyed a practical monopoly as the sea carrier for the great part of the world during the half-century period when the American exporter and importer was satisfied to move his merchandise in British bottoms, I am fully convinced that the shipowners of the United Kingdom have adopted other means by which they hope to eliminate the United States as a serious competitor on the high seas.

Propaganda is the new weapon, and to-day they are conducting an active campaign within our own borders. Their object is to discourage the American people from supporting Congress in placing our mercantile marine upon a firm footing. Daily utterances in the news and editorial columns of the English press are of such tenor as to justify this statement, but, as additional proof, I cite the fact that Britishers well versed in all maritime matters have admitted to me that this method of breaking down our peace-time morale already has been employed with considerable success.

"Lack of stability. * * * Failure to adopt and adhere to definite policies. * * * Extravagance in the operation and upkeep of ships. * * * Desire of inexperienced operators to become millionaires overnight. * * * Tendency to form shipping alliances with Germany." These are some of the criticisms directed at the Shipping Board and shipping industry in the United States by our friends across the sea. Unlike America, where interest in the success or failure of our mercantile marine is confined almost entirely to those actively engaged in the industry, every man you meet in England can discuss intelligently all questions having any bearing on the British Empire's maritime policies. Shipping is the very heart of English commerce and industry, and from their school days the youth of the Empire are taught to think in terms of ships. Shares in shipping companies are purchased by the public with a greater degree of confidence than are bonds of the British Empire. I was impressed by a practical demonstration of this fact in January of this year, when, despite the economic conditions in the United Kingdom, the new issue of £4,000,000 7 per cent debenture stock offered to the public by the Cunard Steamship Co. was oversubscribed within a few days. What better proof could be given of the deep-rooted confidence of the British public in the future of the shipping industry?

BRITISH COMPETITION AND PROPAGANDA.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. In this statement of a trained observer who was abroad for the very purpose of studying the questions upon which he reported, we are brought face to face with the fact that we must not only expect from Great Britain every form of competition which the law permits and which ingenuity can devise, but we must be prepared to combat insidious propaganda calculated to nullify our efforts to secure that portion of the maritime commerce of the world to which we are justly entitled. It behooves us then to see to it that so far as possible every person connected with our merchant marine shall be not only an American but that he shall be loyal to American interests when they are opposed to British interests. This ought to be true of every man on board of every ship from the captain to the humblest seaman; and of every employee in every department from the chairman of the Shipping Board to the least important clerk.

It is perhaps not amiss that we should pause at this point long enough to inquire why we have spent billions of dollars to build up a merchant marine and are pledged to a policy of spending hundreds of millions more in order to maintain it. Those reasons are declared in the very statute which gives life to the Shipping Board and from which it derives its power. The first section of the merchant marine act of 1920 provides:

That it is necessary for the national defense and for the proper growth of its foreign and domestic commerce that the United States shall have a merchant marine of the best equipped and most suitable types of vessels sufficient to carry the greater portion of its commerce and serve as a naval or military auxiliary in time of war or national emergency, ultimately to be owned and operated privately by citizens of the United States; and it is hereby declared to be the policy of the United States to do whatever may be necessary to develop and encourage the maintenance of such a merchant marine, and, in so far as may not be inconsistent with the express provisions of this act, the United States Shipping Board shall, in the disposition of vessels and shipping property as hereinafter provided, in the making of rules and regulations, and in the administration of the shipping laws, keep always in view this purpose and object as the primary end to be attained.

Our declared purpose therefore in building a merchant marine was twofold. One was because of its military or naval value in time of war, the other because national self-interest requires that our overseas commerce in time of peace should be carried on in our own ships. I assert, sir, that the reason, and the sole reason, why we had practically no merchant marine at the outbreak of the late war was because national interests, the real purpose for establishing a merchant marine as laid down in this statute, had never been regarded by American capitalists, and if the present attempt to create and maintain an American merchant marine with all its expense and tax burden and sacrifice on the part of the people shall fail it will be for the same reason.

The masters of American finance have not in the past considered a merchant marine from the point of view of national interest either in peace or war, and the national interest is receiving no consideration at their hands to-day. The one question which has been considered has been the question of profits. How can the greatest profit be made in carrying our products abroad and in bringing to our people what they need or desire from other countries? That has been and still is their sole object. If the greatest profit could be made by conducting our overseas commerce under the British flag, that has been done. If it is thought necessary to camouflage or conceal the British influences in our shipping business, that has been done. But the consideration of national interest, protection in war, fair rates, and good service in peace for all the people is a purpose which has found no place in the plans of the shipping masters of this country.

And yet, sir, Senators can not find justification for voting a soldiers' readjusted compensation upon a basis that I believe to be sound and righteous; but Senators upon this floor can find reasons for supporting the United States Shipping Board in its enormous drafts upon the Treasury, for supporting the railroads in their enormous drafts upon the Treasury, for supporting the builders of warships in their enormous drafts upon the Treasury, for the support and maintenance of a standing Army greater than we have ever had before at a time when no nation in the world can by any possibility make war upon us. Senators who can find reasons for supporting these enormous and almost unlimited appropriations, and can not find justification for readjusting the pay of the men who were torn away from their homes and sent in contravention of every understanding of the meaning of the Constitution of the United States down to that hour across the seas to fight in a foreign country, will be able, I presume, to find reasons for voting continued appropriations to a shipping board that supports British shipping vastly more than it does an American merchant marine, or at least those Senators are not so imbued with a desire to defend the Treasury against the inroads that have been made by the Shipping Board, that they have raised a question here on this floor as to the enormous appropriations that have already been made under the guise of taking care of deficiencies; and I have heard on this floor up to this hour no protest, sir, against the appropriation of $300,000,000 that some four to six weeks ago we were warned by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] would be found necessary to continue the operations of the Shipping Board.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LADD in the chair). Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield, with pleasure.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I should just like to correct the Senator in one mistake. I did not say three hundred millions; I said one hundred millions. That was the amount that was estimated at that time. Since then, however, the estimate has been raised to three hundred millions, but I had in mind only one hundred millions.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. My recollection was that the Senator stated that there was a deficiency of three hundred and eighty millions, and that an appropriation of three hundred millions would be necessary to save the situation.

Mr. JONES of Washington. No; the Senator no doubt saw that in the statement that was given to the press, but it came from the chairman of the Shipping Board, not from me. I did not know that any such statement as that was coming out when I made my statement on the floor.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The Senator made his statement on what the chairman of the Shipping Board had already informed him, I presume.

Mr. JONES of Washington. On what he had told me; and when he told me, he estimated only one hundred millions.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes; but subsequently he found that it should be three hundred millions?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. And had the Senator made his statement after the chairman of the Shipping Board found that it should be three hundred millions, he would have said that it should be three hundred millions?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Oh, yes; certainly.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes. So we are not very far apart, Mr. Chairman, excepting that I did not state the matter exactly as the chairman of the Committee on Commerce had stated it, but, rather, as he would have stated it if he had waited for the further statement of the chairman of the Shipping Board, I take it from what he says.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Possibly so, although I must say that when I examined the figures of the chairman of the Shipping Board upon which he made his estimates I did not understand just exactly how he reached that total. In the amount that we spent during the last year in the operation of the ships he had receipts of $200,000,000 from the sale of ships. I am satisfied that that is wrong. I do not think we have received any $200,000,000 from the sale of ships. We may have sold ships on contracts aggregating $200,000,000, but I am satisfied that we have not received that much money; so I think probably there was a little mistake in the bookkeeping there, although I may be wrong in that. I think not, however.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. But, even if there was, it was against the Government and not in its favor. We have not received that money; we may not receive that money.

Mr. JONES of Washington. No; it was really against the estimate of the chairman of the Shipping Board as to what we shall need next year. He based his estimate for next year upon what he claimed we had received and spent during the past year. Now, if we had not received $200,000,000 from the sale of ships, we had not spent $200,000,000. He may be right and I may be wrong. There is not any question, however, but that we have a deficit that we will have to meet.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Well, Mr. President, I do not think it makes so much difference whether it is $100,000,000 or $300,000,000.

Mr. JONES of Washington. No; I do not, either. I agree with the Senator on that.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The question is, Is it being spent in the interest of the American public? That is the great question; and if it is not, not a dollar of it should be appropriated.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I agree heartily with the Senator in that statement.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I have unlimited confidence in the integrity of the Senator from Washington, the chairman of the Committee on Commerce, and in his capacity to deal with this question; but when it comes to voting this money each Senator is going to be answerable to his constituents, not upon the judgment of the Senator from Washington, but upon his own judgment; and in some respects, when it comes to the determination of the question in whose interest in a large way this money is being expended, I may disagree with the Senator from Washington as to that, as a matter of judgment. Upon my investigation I am prepared to say to Senators where I think the real benefit of the money is going. I put it upon the facts that I have gathered. I lay them before the Senate. I do not say that they are conclusive. If they were, my resolution would not have any place in the Senate, because all that it would be necessary to do would be to lay the facts before the Senate and they could determine the matter; but my resolution is just for an investigation, and all I propose to do and all I am called upon to do is to lay before the Senate facts enough to warrant an investigation, to demand an investigation before a vote is taken on the matter. That is what I take my office to be.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. MOSES. Has the Senator quite finished with his comparison between the condition of the American seamen and the British seamen to which he referred in the opening portion of his remarks?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I want to say to my friend from New Hampshire that I only just touched it. I made a speech of an hour and a half or two hours on that subject here on the 25th day of June, and I beg to refer the Senator to that speech.

Mr. MOSES. Yes; that is the very point. I heard that speech, and there were some things in it which I had vaguely in my mind, and I have since refreshed my memory, and I find things in that speech which lay in my mind nebulously—that is to say, in that speech the Senator enumerated five points of difference between the organized seamen and the Shipping Board—five specific refusals of the Shipping Board to meet the requests of the organized seamen.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes; I did.

Mr. MOSES. But what I wish to ask the Senator—and I do not find that in his speech—

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It is there.

Mr. MOSES. Yes; I do find that, but the thing I do not find in his speech, and that I wanted to ask the Senator about, was whether in the settlement in Great Britain those five points were conceded by the British Board of Trade, or whether the British Board of Trade, which still continues its functions, was considering those points, or whether they had been settled.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, as I stated, if the Senator would do me the great honor to read the speech carefully, he would find the answer to his question. We know how it is. We have now just a handful of Senators present in the Chamber, and unless Senators who are absent shall read what one says here it counts as if it had not been said. I stated in that speech that "British seamen accepted a wage cut of £2 10s. per month, amounting to about 15 per cent of their war-time wage, other conditions remaining unchanged."

Mr. MOSES. I have not been able to find that.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It is there, and it is there stated very plainly, and it is the fact, Mr. President; and it illustrates in a very pointed way the difference between the British treatment of their seamen and our treatment of American seamen in this country, I do not care whether they are organized or unorganized.

The seamen in this country in their controversy with the Shipping Board got to a point where they were prepared to state and did state and specifically requested as the only condition of priority of employment on American ships that they should be American citizens—that is all; not union men as against nonunion men, but American citizens—and the Shipping Board denied that, and the organization known as the owners of steamship lines denied it.

I ask Senators if you can hope in any way to build up an American merchant marine when you will not give preference to American citizens to sail under the American flag? Is it not worth your while to note that the attitude of Great Britain is very different in that respect? I shall read to you, if Senators care to follow me here, the contracts with respect to the British ships which require how they shall be operated, how they shall be run under the British flag, manned by British subjects, and operated under conditions which shall be satisfactory to the British Board of Trade, and in case of differences arising—and I am speaking now of British vessels which are affiliated with so-called American organizations, and getting the benefit of the appropriations which we are making—those differences shall be determined by the Lord Chancellor of Great Britain, and his decision shall be final.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, no one can controvert the position which the Senator from Wisconsin has taken, that the American merchant marine must be manned by American citizens if it is to be an effective organization.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I am glad to have the Senator agree with me on that.

Mr. MOSES. I did not think, however, that the decision arrived at by the Shipping Board under the fatuous and expensive administration of Admiral Benson, when he was its chairman, was permanently conclusive, and I did not suppose that the men were prohibited from reopening that question with the new personnel of the board.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Nor were they, Mr. President. But the attitude of the present board has been just exactly the same as that of Admiral Benson, who has been retained on the board, and the result has been that American sailors have been driven off American ships. Where they have gone on at all, they have gone on with heartburning and with resentment, and with a determination to renew the struggle as soon as they have earned enough money to do it. But, Mr. President, you can not hope to build up an American merchant marine with such a condition as that existing between American sailors and the Government which operates the American merchant marine.

Mr. MOSES. Is the Senator asserting that this question has been laid before the new Shipping Board and that a negative answer has been given to it?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I am asserting, and I asserted it on the 25th of last month on this floor, with facts piled upon facts to show that the present Shipping Board has not only assumed all of the positions taken by its predecessors, but has gone even further.

Mr. MOSES. I did not so understand it, Mr. President. My understanding was that that was a matter which the new Shipping Board intended to take up after it had gone through the tangled mess of accounting and everything else it found there and discovered just where it was with reference to all of its problems. I have no official knowledge, but simply that gained from conversation with members of the board.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I have not a bit of doubt but that the Senator from New Hampshire, in talking with individual members of the board, may find some of them taking that attitude. But that is not the policy which the board has adopted and is enforcing. That policy has disorganized all of the American seamen, as such, who were manning, to the extent of more than 60 per cent, the American merchant marine at the time the war ceased, and, indeed, down to the time when this controversy arose. It is a deplorable condition. It calls for the honest, sincere investigation of every man in the Senate who believes in building up an American merchant marine and who expects to vote the money of the people to do it.

To establish an American merchant marine, it must be manned by American sailors, American citizens. When we passed the seamen's act in 1915 there were but 5 per cent of the seamen employed upon ships sailing under the American flag who were American citizens. Under the beneficent provisions of the act known as the seamen's act we continued to draw from other occupations back to the sea men who had left it because its employment entailed degradation unspeakable.

Under the beneficent provisions of the seamen's act of 1915 we won back to the sea American sailors; so that when this raid was made a few months ago we had over 51 per cent of American citizens on the ships sailing the Atlantic—very much more than that on the Pacific—and we had at least 10 per cent additional who had declared their intention to become American citizens. So that it is fair to say that we had won back to the sea American citizens so that we had 60 per cent in our merchant marine instead of the 5 per cent, which was the number before the seaman's law was passed.

One of the most important propositions the Senate has to solve is the question of this British influence, and in support of that statement I ask the attention of Senators to a speech made by the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Commerce of the Senate [Mr. JONES of Washington] no longer ago than January 22, 1921.

That is pretty recent. That deals with conditions as they now are, unless it shall be shown that the new men on the Shipping Board have radically changed them; and I am going to show that they have confirmed them, as far as British influences are concerned, by the employment of men who have British affiliations—that they have entrenched British interests—and when that is shown the statements made by this man, this colleague of ours, who sits at the head of the table in the Committee on Commerce, and whose integrity and high purposes and loyalty to this Government nobody can question, about those conditions I think are pertinent and worthy the interested attention of Senators. He had more to do with framing the merchant marine act of 1920 than anyone else. His profound study of this subject entitles his every utterance upon it to the greatest consideration.

The speech to which I refer was not delivered in the Senate, but was delivered at the second annual convention of the National Merchant Marine Association here in Washington on the 20th of last January. The speech, however, was very properly put into the RECORD by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR], and is found in the RECORD of January 22, 1921, at page 1887.

Mr. President, I know how busy Senators are. I doubt if there are four Senators in this Chamber who have read that speech. I would be glad to have anyone who is present, outside of the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] himself, who has read that speech to arise in his place and state that fact.

Mr. MOSES. The Senator has no takers.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The Senator from New Hampshire says there were no takers to my proposition to have some Senator arise and say that he had read that important speech. So that justifies me, Mr. President, in reading from it.

The warning words of the able chairman of the Committee on Commerce, the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES]—I am quoting from page 1887 of the RECORD of January 22, 1921. That is only six months away, in round numbers. Read it, Senators. It is worth your reading. I quote as follows:

Our principal competitor for the world's carrying trade is Great Britain. She will do everything possible to keep us off the sea. Her citizens have vast and far-reaching business connections with our people.

The chart now on the wall shows a little section of that, and there are revelations to follow.

She has been so long dominant in shipping that her citizens control many of the great financial, industrial, and transportation interests in this country.

Every word weighted with thought and indicating a knowledge of conditions to the last detail.

They will use and are using this power to defeat our efforts to build up an American marine. Their attacks will be most insidious where that is the wisest course to follow—bold and daring where that is best—but they will always keep in view the one great thing—success for British trade and shipping.

We fight their battles in many ways—

"Their battles"—the battles of Great Britain.

Every man who discourages American enterprise from going into shipping, every newspaper that uses its columns to discredit our efforts and our laws to build up an American marine, gives aid and encouragement to our competitors. Some act unwittingly; some, I fear, purposely.

That is, some American newspapers.

As the Senator well says, every effort to discredit our laws designed to build up an American merchant marine gives aid and comfort to our competitors. That there is an organized effort abroad to discredit our seaman's law no one doubts who is at all familiar with the facts. Upon the existence and enforcement of that law we must depend for securing American seamen and American officers for our merchant marine. We must also depend upon it to equalize whatever difference there is in wage cost between the United States and our competitors.

That law was imperfectly administered after it was passed in 1915. Mr. Redfield, the then Secretary of Commerce, influenced by a man who has held his position there under all administrations and who, I assert, has served British interests rather than American interests—I refer to Chamberlain, the Commissioner of Navigation in the Department of Commerce.

Mr. President, I will digress just long enough to say that when the seamen's law was passed and signed by President Wilson on March 4, 1915, we were paying higher wages for seamen upon American ships than were paid by foreign ships which were loading at our ports and sailing out of those ports; but provisions in the seamen's act released an economic law that made it impossible for a foreign ship to leave our ports unless she paid the same wages as American seamen were paid on ships under the American flag. That worked out so that inside of two years all up and down the Atlantic coast and the Pacific coast every vessel that cleared from an Atlantic port or Pacific port paid American rates of wages that equalized the cost of operation on every cargo that left our shores. Under those conditions not only did we win back to the sea from 5 per cent of American sailors, which was the outside limit when the act was passed, to 60 per cent of American citizens on all ships leaving Atlantic seaports, but a very much larger number than that on all ships leaving the Pacific seaports. That was accomplished in four or five years. There are just two ways of equalizing that wage cost. One is by enforcing the provisions of our seaman's law, thus compelling our competitors to approximate at least our standards of wages and working conditions; and the other is to break down and destroy the provisions of the seaman's act so that we can man our ships with the cheapest of foreign labor and bring American seamen to the level of the cheapest foreign labor.

No one knows better than Great Britain how fatal that latter policy would be to our plans for an American merchant marine; hence the insidious propaganda manifesting itself to-day in the newspaper publications and the efforts of some individuals and organizations to weaken or destroy our maritime code. A raid is being planned on the seaman's law. Everybody who has kept up with the facts understands that.

I am permitted to quote from a personal letter of J. Havlock Wilson, president of the Sailors and Firemen's Union of Great Britain and Ireland, and member of the marine board, written to Andrew Furuseth, president of the International Seamen's Union of America, on June 14, 1921, where it is said:

It may be perfectly true that there is some understanding amongst them (the International Shipping Federation) with regard to the shipping legislation of the United States. I am using all my time, and every time all my influence, to get the British shipowner to see that he is fighting a shadow when he is fighting the United States shipping law.

There is an organization in Great Britain—and I am going to submit its articles of incorporation in the course of the discussion which I wish to make upon this subject—to control legislation in the interest of British commerce all over the world. There never has been an hour while we have been pouring the hundreds of millions of dollars in taxes which have been levied upon the people into the upbuilding of a merchant marine when that organization has not been in operation in this country in order to control legislation in the interest of the British mercantile marine.

Of course, the British seamen are for the maintenance and extension of the United States seamen's legislation, because that legislation must ultimately result in raising the standards of living for British seamen, but the British shipowner, as we see from this letter, is engaged in fighting that law, and more than that, has enlisted all of the powerful interests in the International Shipping Federation for the same purpose. That is the federation which is organized under a charter which I propose later on to lay before the Senate. I shall not be able to do it to-day, but in subsequent discussions of this subject I propose to get everything before the Senate, and I will bring that forward. Forewarned against this foreign-born propaganda, no friend of the American merchant marine will be deceived by it.

Turning to the speech of the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], from which I have previously quoted, I desire to read a few additional paragraphs. He said:

Great business interests, supposed to be American—

There is one of them in that black frame in the center of the chart that hangs upon the wall of the Senate. It is called the International Mercantile Marine Co., owning 55,000 tons of shipping. I am going to speak of it and its British control before I get through.

The Senator says:

Great business interests, supposed to be American, are subordinating American interests to British interests. British shipping interests and the British Government are pulling strings behind the scenes and Americans are stifling American shipping and thwarting American efforts.

I quote further:

A short time ago a reputable gentleman from Newark, N. J., told me of his experience in attempting to establish a shipping line between Newark and England. He applied to the Shipping Board to buy or charter Government ships for this purpose. His application was referred to the Shipping Board's representative in New York, and he said he was opposed to it. On being pressed for his reasons, he said that the establishment of such a line would injure the business of British lines sailing out of New York.

In that same speech Senator JONES said that the International Mercantile Marine Co., which is one of the principal shipping concerns of the United States—and I quote now Senator JONES's language—had "entered into an agreement in 1903 whereby it bound itself for a period of 20 years to follow no policy that would injure British shipping or British trade." This International Mercantile Marine Co., with which Morgan is tied up, and the Guaranty Trust Co. of New York, and the National City Bank, as I shall show, surrounded by British affiliations and tied up with British interrelations that control it absolutely, is under a contract that it will follow no policy that would injure British shipping or British trade for a period of 20 years; and I say to you that this International Mercantile Marine Co. is all-powerful, and is represented officially in the organization of the present Shipping Board. In saying that I lodge no charge against any member of that board. I know some of the members. We all know former Senator Chamberlain. I know at least one other member of that board. But, Mr. President, that board is surrounded by and is in the hands of an organization that has prevailed there since its creation.

I shall have to repeat just a few words here to get my connection.

In that same speech Senator JONES said that the International Mercantile Marine Co., which is one of the principal shipping concerns of the United States, had "entered into an agreement in 1903—now just pin that date down—whereby it bound itself for a period of 20 years to follow no policy that would injure British shipping or British trade," and the Senator quoted certain paragraphs from that contract and continued:

In brief the International Mercantile Marine Co., organized under American law and claiming to be an American company, obligates itself to pursue—

To pursue "no policy injurious to the interests of the British mercantile marine or of British trade"— and in case of any dispute arising out of the agreement, whether of law or of fact, the lord high chancellor of Great Britain is to decide such dispute, and his decision is final.

I will not take time to read further from this notable address, but it should be read in its entirety by every person interested in this subject.

Even more illuminating than the address itself is the series of events which followed its delivery and its insertion in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. I want to say that it stirred up something.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, the Lord High Chancellor of England seems to be popular in British disputes. He settles this dispute between the companies. He also settles the dispute between the unions and the companies.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes, sir.

Mr. MOSES. British interests will not lose anything in either case, I take it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. No. You can just rest assured that British legislation does not overlook a point in this game of controlling the commerce of the world, and making everybody contribute to tail it up and support it and appropriate money for it.

Even more illuminating than the address itself is the series of events which followed its delivery and its insertion in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. The president of the International Mercantile Marine Co., P. A. S. Franklin, at once took issue with some of the statements made by Senator JONES in the address from which I quoted. Thereafter, on January 25, 1921, the Senator from Washington placed in the RECORD three agreements of the International Mercantile Marine Co. with the British Government, dated, respectively, August 1, 1903, October 1, 1910, and September 2, 1919. These agreements will be found in the RECORD of January 25, 1921, pages 2041-2042.

INTERNATIONAL MERCANTILE MARINE CO. AND THE SHIPPING BOARD.

Two days after the above contracts were printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD—that is, on January 27, 1921—the United States Shipping Board held a meeting, at which, by invitation of the board, Mr. P. A. S. Franklin, president of the International Mercantile Marine Co., attended with his attorney, J. Parker Kirlin. And they were invited by the Shipping Board to explain the situation existing between the International Mercantile Marine Co. and foreign Governments. Something like 75 or 80 pages were devoted by Mr. Franklin and his attorney to that explanation. I will have more to say about that testimony a little later.

No action was taken in respect to the matter by the Shipping Board, however, until the 3d day of March following the hearing on the 27th of January, when the board, in response, I believe, to a resolution, sent to the Senate a copy of the testimony and a copy of the contracts to which I have referred. The Shipping Board on the same day that it sent this material to the Senate held a meeting and passed a resolution which declared that Mr. Franklin's explanation was not satisfactory. And a copy of that resolution was transmitted to the Senate with the other papers. Why it was necessary to wait from January 27 to March 3 before taking any action in the matter the Shipping Board has not explained.

The following is the resolution adopted by the United States Shipping Board at its meeting on March 3, 1921, a copy of which was transmitted to the Senate on the date of its passage:

Whereas a hearing was granted the International Mercantile Marine Co. by the United States Shipping Board with reference to a certain agreement dated August 1, 1903, between the Commissioners for Executing the Office of Lord High Admiral of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, the Board of Trade (for and on behalf of His Majesty's Government), the International Mercantile Marine Co. and certain British companies, which said agreement provides among other things:

(a) "The term 'the association' hereinafter used means the parties hereto of the second and third parts and also includes any other company, corporate or unincorporate, partnership body, or person, whether British, American, or other foreign, which by any arrangement is admitted to or brought under the control of the association or any of its constituent parts for the time being;"

(b) "PAR. 8. If at any time hereafter during the continuance of this agreement any other company, whether corporate or unincorporate, partnership body, or person, whether British, American, or other foreign, shall be admitted to or brought under the control of the association or any of its constituent parts for the time being the association shall give notice thereof to His Majesty's Government and shall furnish all such particulars with regard to terms, parties, or otherwise as the Government may reasonably require."

(c) PAR. 10. This agreement shall have effect for 20 years from the 27th of September, 1902, and shall continue in force thereafter subject to a notice of five years on either side (which may be given during the continuance of this agreement), provided that His Majesty's Government shall have the right to terminate this agreement at any time if the association pursue a policy injurious to the interests of the British mercantile marine or of British trade;

(d) PAR. 12. In case of any difference as to the intent and meaning of this agreement, or in case of any dispute arising out of this agreement, the same shall be referred to the lord high chancellor of Great Britain for the time being, whose decision, whether on law or fact, shall be final; and

Whereas it was developed at said hearing that although said International Mercantile Marine Co. is owned practically in its entirety by citizens of the United States, yet that certain contract and agreement, dated August 1, 1903, together with certain agreements supplementary thereto between the parties above stated, is regarded by the United States Shipping Board as inimical to and not in harmony with the policy of the United States of America with respect to the development of its trade and commerce and merchant marine and at variance with both the letter and spirit of the merchant marine act, 1920:

Resolved, That the International Mercantile Marine Co. be, and it is hereby, requested and directed by the United States Shipping Board to so amend the said agreement of August 1, 1903, together with agreements supplementary thereto, as to exclude therefrom any and all vessels documented under the laws of the United States, to the end that said agreement and supplements thereto shall not be allowed to affect or apply to the ships operated by said International Mercantile Marine Co. at any time under the flag of the United States of America; and be it further

Resolved, That said International Mercantile Marine Co. advise the United States Shipping Board of its conclusion with respect to this resolution.

They would like to know what they think about it.

Concerning these agreements Mr. Franklin testified, or, rather, stated, at the hearing to which I referred, for he was not under oath, as follows:

In March, 1917, we sent those agreements to Mr. Denman, then chairman of the Shipping Board.

He was defending himself, you see. He was claiming that the Shipping Board had acted all this time with a full knowledge of the fact that the International was a mere tool of the British Government. That is what these agreements make it. He said:

In March, 1917, we sent those agreements to Mr. Denman, then chairman of the Shipping Board, and we have his acknowledgment of the receipt of the agreements. That was shortly after the Shipping Board was established. In January, 1919—first, in November, 1919, the agreements were sent to Judge Payne, then chairman of the Shipping Board—

Keep that date in mind—

In January, 1919, they were sent to Mr. Colby, a member of the Shipping Board, and in 1920 we wrote a letter to Admiral Benson, stating that we had left all of our agreements and discussed them all.

Mr. MOSES. What is the date of that letter?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The last letter to Benson is in 1920. I repeat:

In 1920 we wrote a letter to Admiral Benson, stating that we had left all of our agreements and discussed them all.

Following this testimony by Franklin it is my recollection that John Barton Payne declared that the agreement had never been brought to his attention.

I am taking Mr. Franklin's testimony, however.

It appears, therefore, that these agreements had been in the possession of the board since March, 1917; that they had been thoroughly discussed before the members of the board; and it was not until March 3, 1921, that the board reached the conclusion that they were inimical to and not in harmony with the policy of the United States of America with respect to the development of its trade and commerce and merchant marine, and at variance both with the letter and the spirit of the merchant marine act of 1920. Whatever delay may have occurred prior to March 3, 1921, it was to be expected, of course, that the International Mercantile Marine Co. would yield prompt obedience to the resolution of that date, a copy of which was at once furnished to Mr. Franklin by the Shipping Board.

Mark you, the date of that resolution was the 3d of March, 1921. On July 18, 1921, I addressed a letter to the Shipping Board, in which I asked to be advised what action the International Mercantile Marine Co. had taken in response to the directions given by the Shipping Board in its resolution of March 3, 1921. Sufficient time had certainly elapsed for compliance with the resolution if compliance with it was intended. Under date of July 22, 1921, I received a reply from the chairman of the Shipping Board—that was only a few days ago. I quote from that letter, as follows:

Mr. P. A. S. Franklin, president of the company, replied to the resolution of the board, under date of March 9, 1921, to the effect that his company would give the matter their very serious attention with a view to meeting as nearly as possible the wishes of the Shipping Board.

As the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES] suggests, "Yours received and contents noted," and let it go at that. I still quote from the letter received from Mr. Lasker:

It is the understanding of the board that negotiations between the International Mercantile Marine and the British Government, resultant from the board's resolution, are practically concluded, and I have communicated with the International Mercantile Marine and have asked it to apprise me of the situation at the moment. I will advise you of their reply.

Yours, very truly,

A. D. LASKER, Chairman.

I have not yet heard. Last March this resolution was passed. March 3 Mr. Franklin was advised. March 9 he acknowledged receipt of the resolution. July 22, no change in the situation, contracts still in existence, and in the meantime the International Mercantile Marine is a big spoke in the wheel of the United States Shipping Board and prominent officials connected with it are in charge of the allocation of our ships and the direction of operations. I shall come to that a little later.

In this connection I call attention to the statement given to the public by Mr. Franklin on March 5, 1921, as found in the New York Times of that date, page 23, column 2, wherein, referring to the March 3 resolution of the Shipping Board, he said:

The decision of the Shipping Board does not in any way conflict with our present organization or method of conducting our business. It has been clearly understood for the last 19 years, since the first agreement was executed between ourselves and the British Board of Trade relating to our British flagships, that the agreements do not apply directly or indirectly to American flagships owned by the company or operated by it.

I am going to show just how near the truth that statement is which was given out to the public by this man Franklin.

Having thus politely informed the board that there was nothing in its decision or resolution which required any change in the structure or methods of his company, Mr. Franklin with a touch of humor adds:

I see no reason now why the company should not comply with the desires of the board, as reported.

The resolution of the Shipping Board referred to does not touch the real iniquity in the relationship between the International Mercantile Marine Co. and the British Government and British shipping interests, and shows but a very limited comprehension of the seriousness of the problem with which they were dealing. Either the Shipping Board purposely set up a man of straw for Mr. Franklin to demolish, or it had not the least conception of the manner in which British influences controlled the International Mercantile Marine Co. The mandate of the board to Mr. Franklin was that he so "amend" his agreements with the British authorities "as to exclude therefrom any and all vessels documented under the laws of the United States." Of course, these agreements do not include by their terms ships documented under the laws of the United States, and therefore to amend these agreements so as to "exclude" such ships leaves the agreements exactly where they were before. As the matter stands, Mr. Franklin has been given the opportunity by the Shipping Board, whether wittingly or unwittingly I do not know, to make a brave showing of complying with its orders without effecting the least change in the organization or methods of his company.

A little later in this discussion I will point out exactly how these contracts and the system of interlocking directors gives complete control of the business resources of the International Mercantile Marine Co. to the British Government and the masters of British shipping.

What I now wish to point out is that the Shipping Board almost from the time of its organization has known of these contracts and has known that the International Mercantile Marine Co., besides operating a few American ships, was merely a holding company for British shipping corporations. On the 27th of last January, when public attention was called to the matter, the so-called investigation was held by the Shipping Board, at which no one was heard but the president of the International Mercantile Marine Co. and his attorney.

A fine method, certainly, to arrive at the truth. Meanwhile that company continued to receive generous allocations of American ships on the theory that it was a real American company. I mean by that company the International Mercantile Marine Co.

A report of the Shipping Board under date of February 7, 1921, shows the International Mercantile Marine Co. in control of 27 Shipping Board ships by allocation; dead-weight tonnage, 247,893 tons; and that these ships included some of the best American vessels controlled by the Shipping Board. In the meantime the Shipping Board allowed the whole matter to slumber until the report to which I referred was made to the Senate at the very close of the last Congress on the 3d day of March, 1921. Is there a Senator here who can believe for a moment that the powerful influences of Great Britain were not at work in our official channels to hold that investigation back and to suppress the truth?

Then the resolution was sent to the Senate which required Mr. Franklin to amend his contracts so as to "exclude" something that was not in them, and there the matter has rested. Whether this is merely a record of incompetence or worse in this matter, I am not prepared to say. I am speaking of a committee of investigation that will determine this, and I am speaking of an investigation which I believe the Senate will feel constrained to demand before I get through. I am simply stating the facts. But if the British Board of Trade had directly controlled the affairs of our Shipping Board during the time, it could not have done worse for the American merchant marine than our Shipping Board has done.

I. M. M. BOUND TO THE BRITISH GOVERNMENT BY CONTRACT.

In order to appreciate the full significance of the part played by Great Britain in the affairs of the International Mercantile Marine Co., and through it the affairs of our merchant marine, it is necessary to examine somewhat critically the contracts already referred to and the organization and holdings of the International Mercantile Marine Co. I am not saying that that company is the only so-called American company dominated by British interests.

Now, mark you that. I have just taken a cross section of a portion of our shipping. I am studying other companies with very great interest, and find much to quicken and keep that interest alive. I am merely using it as an illustration—as a cross section of our merchant marine—to exhibit the manner in which British influence permeates the whole organization. There are other shipping concerns in this country claiming to be 100 per cent American which I believe are just as bad as the International Mercantile Marine Co. in the matter of British influence, or possibly worse.

Before taking up the contracts mentioned I call attention to the testimony and statements of Mr. Franklin, president of the International Mercantile Marine Co., in the hearing before the board on January 27 last.

Referring to the International Mercantile Marine Co., Mr. Franklin says, and I am quoting his testimony verbatim:

This is an American company—

That is, the International Mercantile Marine Co.—

This is an American company, owned by American shareholders, operated in the interests of American shipping and its stockholders, and its policy that it has pursued right straight through has been in advocating the upbuilding of the American merchant marine and conditions which we thought would assist materially in such upbuilding.

On page 2 of this testimony Mr. Franklin says:

During the last three years, or rather during 1916, 1917, 1918, 1919, and 1920, we have distributed to our shareholders in dividends, all American shareholders, as you will see, over $30,000,000. We have paid off during that period $31,000,000 of bonds, the great majority of which are held in the United States. Are the people of the United States any better off for owning this British property which earns a very big percentage of this or not? Is it an asset to the American merchant marine or not? We think it is.

That ends the quotation. Now, I want to comment on it a little bit. It is clearly Mr. Franklin's idea that so long as his company makes a handsome profit for the small group of American citizens who own its stocks and bonds it must be reckoned as an asset of the American merchant marine, although its every ship might sail according to the will of British directors and subject to the command of the British Admiralty. That is the fact about every one of its ships, as I shall show.

The International Mercantile Marine Co. owns outright, according to its late reports, the steamers St. Louis, St. Paul, New York, Philadelphia, Finland, and Kroonland. It also owns the stock of the Atlantic Transport Co., with six vessels, incorporated in West Virginia, and of the Belgium Red Star Co., with two vessels. (See Shipping Board Report No. 309, Feb. 7, 1921.) It has other holdings, consisting of stock held by it in the International Navigation Co. (Ltd.), incorporated under the laws of Great Britain. That company is indicated on the map underneath the other company and is inclosed by the red bracket, which in turn is a holding company for a large number of British shipping corporations controlling in the neighborhood of 1,000,000 tons of dead-weight tonnage. It is the ships of these latter subsidiary companies that Mr. Franklin claims are controlled through stock ownership by the International Mercantile Marine Co. and run in the interest of American shipping and constitute an asset of the American merchant marine.

I hope Senators will follow me and get that reasoning. But the fact is, as shown by these contracts, that these ships, nearly 100 in number, traversing every route of maritime commerce open to American ships, and enjoying the most profitable of the carrying trade from the United States, are just as completely British ships and subordinated to British interests as any ship which flies the British flag.

Now listen. The contract of 1903 between the British Government, the International Mercantile Marine Co., and the subsidiary British companies provides in its first paragraph that these ships shall be on an equality with all other British ships "in respect of any services—naval, military, or postal—which His Majesty's Government may desire to have rendered by the British merchant marine."

The second paragraph provides respecting these companies that "a majority at least of their directors shall be British subjects."

The third paragraph forbids the selling of any of these ships to other than British subjects without the consent of the British Board of Trade.

The fourth paragraph provides that the officers shall be British subjects, and such proportion of the crew as the British Government shall prescribe.

The fifth paragraph provides that these ships must be sold or let to the British Admiralty upon the Admiralty's demand.

The sixth paragraph provides for the building of ships for British companies.

The seventh paragraph deals with the manner in which other British subjects or corporations may become associated in the business.

The eighth and ninth paragraphs provide for the contingency of some one other than a British subject or corporation becoming connected with the enterprise, and subjects them to the terms of the agreement.

The tenth paragraph provides that the contract shall run for 20 years from September 27, 1902, and shall continue in force thereafter subject to a notice of five years on either side, "provided that His Majesty's Government shall have the right to terminate this agreement at any time if the association pursue a policy injurious to the interest of the British mercantile marine or of British trade."

The eleventh paragraph provides that the agreement shall take effect as a contract made in England and in accordance with the laws of England.

The twelfth paragraph provides that in the case of any difference as to the interpretation of the contract or any dispute arising out of it "the same shall be referred to the lord high chancellor of Great Britain for the time being, whose decision, whether on law or fact, shall be final."

I come now to the second agreement which controls the International Mercantile Marine Co. I have just given the Senate the first agreement, which was made in 1903; the second was made on October 1, 1910. The agreement of October 1, 1910, between the same parties increased the facility with which the Admiralty might obtain control of any of the ships of the subsidiary British companies, and provided that any such ships "which may be considered by the Admiralty suitable for the employment as armed cruisers or commissioned auxiliaries shall be sold or let on hire to the Admiralty" as therein provided. Great Britain saw something in 1910 from afar off.

A further agreement of September 2, 1919, is even more significant than the other two.

Paragraph 1 thereof provided respecting these subsidiary companies that—

No person shall henceforth be a director, managing director, managing agent, manager, or person to carry on or manage the business of any such companies unless his appointment shall be acceptable to the board of trade.

That means, of course, to the British Government.

Paragraph 2 places the entire management of the subsidiary companies under its English board of directors, and even assumes to extend the power and authority of such directors beyond that provided in their articles or by-laws.

Paragraph 4 provides that these subsidiary companies shall not be regarded "as a foreign-controlled company" as to the building, purchasing, and operating of vessels, and the acquisition of shares in other British steamship companies.

The succeeding paragraph provides that these subsidiary companies shall be on the same footing as all other British steamship companies which are free from foreign control as to any facilities or advantages for the development of the business, but if the British companies shall give notice for the termination of the principal agreement these advantages shall cease.

I. M. M. CONTROLLED BY ITS BRITISH SUBSIDIARIES.

It is evident from these contracts that the International Mercantile Marine Co. so far from controlling its so-called British subsidiaries is completely controlled by them. Think of that for a moment, if you want to know how completely the International Mercantile Marine Co. is controlled by Great Britain. It must vote the stock it holds for British directors, and, moreover, for British directors satisfactory to the British Government. The British directors in turn absolutely control the management of their companies. They route the ships, they fix the rates, they man and officer the ships with British subjects, and hold the ships at all times subject to the orders of the British Navy. They must pay to the British Government annually many millions of dollars, probably hundreds of millions, for taxes and excess-profits taxes. These British directors control their own program for new construction and for the purchase of additional ships. In short, they are British companies in every sense of the word. The only function left under these contracts to the International Mercantile Marine is to receive on its stock holdings such dividends as may be declared for its benefit by a British board of directors which is satisfactory to the British Government, and they can not receive a farthing more.

Now, since, as Mr. Franklin says, a very big percentage of all the income of the International Mercantile Marine comes from the British companies, its subsidiaries, it is inevitable that he and his associates should play the British game, and swell the profits of the British companies in every possible way. That they must do this is made doubly certain from the fact that by these contracts they are at all times at the mercy of the British Government and shipowners. At any time their ships may be taken over, their contracts terminated, and their profits stopped by the British authorities. They are really pensioners upon British bounty, and their income—speaking now of the American Mercantile Marine and its stockholders—may be decreased or stopped, or increased according to British will. No man could devise a more perfect scheme to subject to British wishes and purposes every resource of the International Mercantile Marine, whether British or American, than is provided in their contracts.

Nor is this all. Through a system of interlocking directorates these British subsidiaries of the International Mercantile Marine Co. are absolutely dominated by a few masters of British shipping and finance, and are thus fitted into the whole scheme of British imperialism. Just two or three great, powerful, outstanding figures in British finance dominate this whole thing. This is graphically shown on the map or chart to which I invite your attention.

I now ask Senators, if they care to follow me, to give their attention to the chart while I submit as careful an analysis and description of the operation of the forces which it represents as it is possible for me to do.

THE BRITISH OPERATING COMPANIES OF THE I. M. M.

This chart is intended to show in its right half the nationality and interrelations of the International Mercantile Marine Co. and its subsidiary companies, and in its left half the relation, through Lord Pirrie and Sir John R. Ellerman, with the five great British shipping combinations and other important British industrial enterprises. Red blocks indicate British companies and individuals. All solid red lines indicate British directors. Broken red lines indicate stock ownership, and the arrow on those lines points from the owner of the stock and toward the concern in which the stock is owned. The figures on the broken red lines indicate the amount of stock ownership.

I will say to Senators that a reduced copy of this diagram will be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD in connection with my remarks. I have the permission of the Joint Committee on Printing for that to be done.

The diagram is shown on page 4518 (facing page.)

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The International Mercantile Marine Co., incorporated in New Jersey, and shown in the black-bordered outline in the right-hand upper central portion of the chart, (1) owns outright five freight and passenger steamers—New York, Philadelphia, St. Paul, Finland, and Kroonland—of 55,005 tons, plying between New York and the United Kingdom. Aside from these steamers, its holdings consist entirely of shareholdings in other countries; (2) it owns the entire capital stock, £700,000, of the International Navigation Co. (Ltd.), shown in the red-bordered diagram immediately below it, which owns four freight and passenger steamers of 66,652 tons plying between Philadelphia and Liverpool; (3) it owns 13,845,000 francs, being the entire capital stock of the Red Star Line, a Belgian corporation, with two steamers, of 17,428 tons, plying between New York and Antwerp; and (4) it owns $5,000,000, being the entire capital stock of the Atlantic Transport Co. of West Virginia, shown on the extreme right, about the middle of the chart. The Atlantic Transport Co. owns four freight and passenger steamers and two freight steamers of a total tonnage of 80,642, plying between New York and London.

The International Navigation Co., in turn, owns the entire capital stock of the Atlantic Transport Co., the British & North Atlantic Steam Navigation Co., the Oceanic Steam Navigation Co., and practically the entire common stock of Frederick Leyland & Co., together with more than a third of its preferred stock.

The Atlantic Transport Co., shown near the right-hand corner of the chart, owns 1 freight and passenger steamer and 10 freight steamers, and carries on a passenger and cargo service between New York, Philadelphia, and Baltimore and London.

The British & North Atlantic Steam Navigation Co.—the Dominion Line—having three freight and passenger steamers and three freight steamers, carries on mail, passenger, and cargo service between Quebec, Montreal, and Portland, and Bristol and Liverpool. During the winter season its boats run to Portland.

The Oceanic Steam Navigation Co., the White Star Line, with a fleet of 19 freight and passenger vessels and 7 freight vessels, is the largest single company controlled by the International Mercantile Marine Co. Its services run from the principal Atlantic ports, including Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Portland, and Halifax, to Liverpool, London, Southampton, Cherbourg, and the Mediterranean, in addition to services from Liverpool to Australia and New Zealand.

Frederick Leyland & Co.—the Leyland Line—have 2 freight and passenger steamers and 26 freight steamers, a total tonnage of 171,177. They carry on a mail, passenger, cattle, and cargo service from Boston, New Orleans, Galveston, Savannah, Mobile, Brunswick, the West Indies, and the Spanish Main to Liverpool, London, and Manchester.

It will be noted that the International Mercantile Marine Co. owns all the stock of the International Navigation Co., and through that company the entire stock of the Atlantic Transport Co., the British & North Atlantic Steam Navigation Co., the Oceanic Steam Navigation Co., and the controlling interest in the Leyland Co.

The Oceanic Steam Navigation Co. owns £500 of the £195,375 preferred stock of Shaw, Savill & Albion, and £86,365 of the £195,375 ordinary stock. Another large block of stock is held by the Ellerman Lines, which, together with the Oceanic Steam Navigation Co., thus controls Shaw, Savill & Albion. The Oceanic Steam Navigation Co. and Shaw, Savill & Albion in turn jointly own £148,829 of the £150,000 preference stock of George Thompson & Co., all of the £50,000 ordinary stock, and all of the £50,000 management stock.

The Oceanic Steam Navigation Co. and the Atlantic Transport Co. of West Virginia jointly own 2,080,000 of the 20,000,000 guilders capital stock of the Holland-American Line. The Atlantic Transport Co. of West Virginia owns 32,971 shares of 200,000 shares of the New York Shipbuilding Corporation, and, together with the American International Corporation and W. R. Grace & Co., control that important shipbuilding concern.

In summary, out of a total of 113 vessels, of 1,077,728 gross tons of shipping controlled by the International Mercantile Marine Co., 5 vessels of 55,005 tons are controlled directly by the International Mercantile Marine Co. and 6 vessels of 86,642 tons by the Atlantic Transport Co. of West Virginia, making a total of 11 vessels of 135,647 tons under the American flag; 2 vessels of 17,428 tons under the Belgian flag; 99 vessels of 922,166 tons under the British flag; and 1 vessel of 2,487 tons of unknown flag.

Beneath the British and North Atlantic Steam Navigation Co. on the chart appears the Mississippi and Dominion Steamship Co. This company was included in the contract of 1903, but it has been liquidated and its assets have been taken over by the British and North Atlantic Steam Navigation Co.

Of the operating companies of the International Mercantile Marine Co., only the Atlantic Transport of West Virginia is an American company. The Red Star is organized under Belgian law and the International Navigation Co., the Atlantic Transport, the British and North Atlantic, the Oceanic Steam Navigation, Frederick Leyland & Co., Shaw, Savill & Albion, and George Thompson & Co. are wholly British. An examination of the routes and services given in connection with the different lines shows that practically all the important trade routes from the Atlantic coast to Great Britain are covered by these British subsidiaries of the International Mercantile Marine.

In addition to its own vessels, the International Mercantile Marine on January 1, 1921, was operating 27 Shipping Board vessels of a gross tonnage of 166,010 tons. Of these vessels 11 of 65,292 tons were allocated directly to the International Mercantile Marine, 6 vessels of 39,384 tons to the Atlantic Transport Co. of West Virginia, and 10 vessels of 61,334 tons to the Red Star Line. It is apparent that the International Mercantile Marine would seek cargoes for these vessels only in so far as there were surplus cargoes above what could be taken care of by its own ships, inasmuch as losses on the Shipping Board vessels are met by the Shipping Board itself.

The lines of stock ownership show holdings by J. P. Morgan & Co. and the American International Corporation in the International Mercantile Marine Co., and the lines of directorships indicate three members of the Morgan firm as directors of the International Mercantile Marine Co. and four members of the International Corporation. The block marked "Morgan, Grenfell & Co." in the upper right-hand corner, inclosed in red bars, and "J. P. Morgan & Co." in black, the dividing line between the two circles being one-half in black and one-half in red, indicates the International Banking House of Morgan, whose British company is Morgan, Grenfell & Co., and whose American company is J. P. Morgan & Co. The five lines running from Morgan, Grenfell & Co. to the Atlantic Transport Co., the Oceanic Steam Navigation Co., the International Navigation Co., George Thompson & Co., and Shaw, Savill & Albion represent E. C. Grenfell, one of the partners in the London Morgan firm, who is a director of the five companies named.

Mr. RANDELL. Has the Senator outlined the ownership of this International Mercantile Marine Co.? Has he named the persons who own the stock? Is it American capital or British capital?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It is American capital; but what the American capital can receive, as I have already stated, which the Senator will see if he will do me the honor of reading what I have said on that point, is entirely controlled by contract with the British Board of Trade.

Mr. RANDELL. Then, it is American money which is operating this company under the British flag?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That is all it means, and it is important to this British organization, as I shall show a little later on, because of the great power of Morgan in delivering freight through the railroads which he controls, transcontinental lines, directly and indirectly. I will show what that railroad control is. That is not only Morgan, but back of this International Mercantile Marine Co., as you will recall, as already stated, and as it will be set forth in detail, is the National City Bank, the Guaranty Trust Co., and the house of Morgan. When you combine those three great financial organizations behind any railroad scheme you have covered practically all the railroads of the country in the directorates which the various members of those banks control.

Mr. RANDELL. Can the Senator explain why it is that this vast sum of American capital continues to operate vessels under the British flag rather than under the flag of our own country?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, it is quite apparent that there is a partnership here, a deal, between the masters of the shipping of Great Britain and the masters of the railroads and finance of this country, and that that combination is drawing on the purse of this Government to build up what we in our blindness call an American merchant marine, but an investigation will show that that is fostering further the control of the shipping and transportation in the financial powers of this country and Great Britain, in combination, and you can not have any distinctly American merchant marine in partnership with the British merchant marine, through these interlocking combinations of great finance.

Mr. RANDELL. Does the Senator contend that this arrangement is continued because it enables the owners of that stock to make more money than if they put the ships under the American flag? Or is it because of some ancient combinations or arrangements which are still in existence; for instance, the 20-year arrangement the Senator spoke of, which has about two years to run?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes; that could be terminated by a notice by either of the parties.

Mr. RANDELL. I would like to have the Senator enlighten me—and I am intensely interested in his speech, I want him to know—as to why this great combination of American capital continues to operate under the British flag, instead of putting more of their vessels under our flag, or some of them under our flag.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It is quite apparent to me. I had hoped I had built up my argument so as to make it apparent to everybody. You have to recognize one thing to start with, that Great Britain has been master of the commerce of the world upon the seas for many years. I can see pretty plainly how, many years ago, it was easy to enlist the financial masters of our railroad transportation into an overseas combination with Great Britain, which would put money into the pockets of both of them more rapidly than the great financiers of this country could get returns upon their investments by building up some new shipping organization in this country to compete with Great Britain for this foreign trade.

In other words, you had a combination made here, going back nearly 20 years, which was discussed on this floor. I have been reading the old debates, which are very interesting. You had a combination made between the great railroads of this country and British overseas shipping, and the International Mercantile Marine Co. was a sort of medium, or link, through which this organization was built up.

I undertake to say that the great financial powers of this country consider first their financial interests, rather than any question of national advantage, in the building up of an American merchant marine.

I conceive that there can be but two objects in building up an American merchant marine. To the farmer in Wisconsin, or in Idaho, or in Oregon, or to the manufacturer in New England, what difference does it make who transports his products across the ocean in the carrying trade of the world? His financial interest is in having good rates and reasonably quick transportation.

Grant him a national interest as an American citizen. What is it? What is the second interest in having an American merchant marine? It is to build up an organization such that if we needed help in time of trouble with other nations we could call on them to man an auxiliary for our Navy.

The business man can have only those two ideas and those two motives for supporting an American merchant marine—one securing the best transportation facilities possible for his overseas commerce; the other, loyalty to his Government in time of need.

With regard to the first proposition, it can mean nothing to him to have his overseas products on their way to market transported by Mr. Morgan more than by Lord Pirrie, and it can be no advantage to him, surely, unless in building up an American merchant marine he can have some competition with Lord Pirrie or the British organization. So that that is a step we have been considering much in building up our American merchant marine.

There has been no suggestion anywhere, so far as I have heard, that we should exercise control of transportation charges. I prepared an address for delivery in the Senate a few years ago, when we had the first bill for the building up of shipping, along about 1914 or 1915. That bill was defeated by a filibuster, Senators will remember, and I never got an opportunity to deliver that speech. But I remember distinctly that my overhauling of all the testimony at that time showed that there were conventions, as they call them, or agreements, between all of the great shipping lines engaged in overseas traffic and all of the great shipping lines in our coastwise traffic and in our lake traffic by which they fixed absolutely what the American people must pay in the way of freight charges.

I just say this, that these financial interests in this country have gone into this thing years ago to make money; that they have not any regard and have never shown any regard in any field of that sort for national pride or national interest.

Mr. RANDELL. If the Senator will permit a suggestion right there, I can understand how originally these combinations were entered into, years ago, before the seamen's bill was passed, for instance, in the passage of which the Senator had such an active part, because in those days it always appeared that British shipping had a very decided advantage in many respects over American shipping. There was a chance to make more money in the British shipping business than in the American shipping business.

But since the passage of that law and since so much of the British capital which was formerly invested in this country has gone back, they have not the control—at least, I do not think they have the control—over our financial institutions and over our railroads that they formerly had.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. They had no control over our railroads. Their interest in our railroads was in the bonds, not in stock. They never bought stock in the railroads.

Mr. RANDELL. I understand that.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. They bought bonds.

Mr. RANDELL. But they were very much interested; and I can not understand, for the life of me, now that the situation is so materially changed—

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. If the Senator will pardon me, the situation with respect to the mastery of the sea is not changed. Great Britain controls the great commerce of the world.

Mr. RANDELL. She certainly does.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Beyond any question. We have but a pittance of it. A partnership with that great organization offers opportunities to American capital. The fact is there is the evidence of it. It is indisputable.

Mr. RANDELL. I am trying to get through my head why, when American capital owns all that stock, they do not put it under the American flag. We have passed laws which certainly give our American shipping just as much protection as Great Britain gives to her shipping. There is just as much chance to make money under the American flag in the shipping business as there is under the British flag.

Here the Senator has shown there is over 1,000,000 tons of shipping owned by Americans and operated by Americans, but it is under the British flag. That is the part that is so difficult for me to understand. If the Senator can make it clearer to me, I wish he would do so.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The Senator is confused because he has not followed me. The International Mercantile Marine is absolutely controlled by these British subsidiaries, through the contracts made between the International Mercantile Marine and the British subsidiaries, in 1902, 1910, and 1919. The International Mercantile Marine Co. found it more profitable to employ its capital under these contracts in conjunction with Great Britain with her control of world commerce than to attempt to establish an American merchant marine, and they made these contracts accordingly and are still operating under them. I think that answers the Senator's question.

Tuesday, August 2, 1921.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, when I concluded last evening I was directing the attention of Senators to the left-hand portion of the chart which hangs on the wall of the Senate. I had not quite completed my explanation of the chart. I, therefore, begin at the point where I yielded the floor, and bring to the attention of Senators the control exercised by the great masters of shipping and transportation in Great Britain over the subsidiaries of the International Mercantile Marine Co. To Senators who may not have been in the Chamber during the time when I was speaking yesterday afternoon I will say briefly that there are certain existing contracts between the International Mercantile Marine Co. and this group [indicating on the chart] of British shipping companies which subordinate all the ships and all the interests controlled by the International Mercantile Marine Co. through the terms of those contracts to British interests. No one can understand the power which Great Britain may exercise in American shipping and in our efforts to build up an American merchant marine without studying the terms of those three contracts, one of them made in 1902 for a term of 20 years; another made in 1910, and the last one made in 1919.

By the terms of those contracts the International Mercantile Marine Co., although it owns controlling interests in many of these British shipping companies, is bound so to conduct its business as not to interfere with British commerce or with the interests of the British Government. It is tied hand and foot with British interests, and whenever any question is raised as to the interpretation of the terms of those three contracts by the terms of the contracts themselves any such question is to be settled and determined by the Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain under British law both as to questions of fact and as to questions of law, and there is no appeal from his decision.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President—

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. MOSES. I wish to call the Senator's attention to the fact that in a speech on another phase of this same subject, which he delivered on the 25th of July, he inserted in the Record certain tables showing the earnings of shipping companies, and in Table 3, which appears on page 4243 of the Record, I find on their capital the percentage of income earned by the International Mercantile Marine Co. in 1920 to be 73.8 per cent. I assume that the Senator procured those figures from some official report of the company.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I did, Mr. President.

Mr. MOSES. I wish to ask the Senator in that connection if in making the investigations which gave him this result of 73.8 per cent profit he was able to separate the profits accruing to the various subsidiary and compository lines which make up the International Mercantile Marine Co. so as to show the percentage of profit earned by the ships which fly the American flag?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I did not make that computation.

Mr. MOSES. Would that be possible from the data which the Senator has?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I think that can be worked out from the data, because, taking the table as given there and the interests shown on the chart and the explanation of the chart which I have made and am making, I think it is possible to figure out the relative interest and the profits to which the Senator directs attention.

Mr. MOSES. I suggest to the Senator, Mr. President, that from a study of his chart it appears that the tonnage controlled directly by the International Mercantile Marine Co., namely, 55,000 tons, is not very different from the tonnage of certain of the other subsidiary companies which enter into that mass of lines, and if it should appear upon further investigation of the earnings that the earnings of 55,000 tons flying the American flag were grossly disproportionate to the earnings of the 66,000 tons, for example, owned by the International Navigation Co. or the 68,000 tons owned by the British North Atlantic Steam Navigation Co., it would greatly fortify the argument which the Senator is now setting forth.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes, Mr. President, I understand that, and I believe that it is possible to work out that detail of computation from the facts which I am submitting to the Senate; but, Mr. President, I do not want to be understood as being prepared here to state, on my feet, all of the facts, or a complete answer to the data which I am attempting in a very imperfect way to get before the Senate. The most I am hoping as a result—and I am hoping that, Mr. President—of the discussion which I am taking the time of the Senate to make is that we may have an investigation of this matter; that is all. That is all I am arguing for; and I am trying to get before the Senate of the United States facts enough to show that the vast expenditure of money being made through the appropriation voted here by the Senate is of such doubtful benefit to American shipping and of such certain benefit to British shipping, our great rival, that it behooves the Senate of the United States to go into this matter to the very taproot of the organization before another dollar of money is voted to the Shipping Board or is expended in this enterprise of attempting to build up an American merchant marine.

I will say again to Senators what I said yesterday, that they will find a transcript of this chart in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD in connection with what I am trying to say in explanation of it. As soon as the matter that I am now delivering to the Senate is printed in the Record, which I trust will be in a day or so, they will find an opportunity to study this chart, but they will get no understanding of this matter excepting they interpret the chart by the contracts; and I have taken up each of these three contracts and analyzed them. I submitted that analysis to the Senate yesterday. The contracts themselves were printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Commerce. When he discovered that those contracts were in existence some months ago, he had them printed in the Record. I assume that no Senator has seen those contracts, or has taken the time to read them, in the drive of business to which we are all subject; but we can not afford to vote another dollar to this enterprise without going to the very bottom of this whole business and knowing whether we are expending money in the interest of Great Britain, our principal rival, or whether we are actually fostering an American merchant marine.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STANFIELD in the chair). Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Yesterday I listened with deep interest while the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANDELL] was asking the Senator from Wisconsin why this shipping trust—for it virtually amounts to that—flies the British flag.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Instead of the American flag.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Instead of the American flag. Of course, it would occur to all of us that the navigation laws would have much to do with it; but I wondered at the time if it occurred to the Senator that the Morgan house established in London is as old as the Morgan house established in New York, and that it has perhaps as many interests under the British flag as it has under the American flag, and therefore it is a matter of utter indifference to the Morgan house which flag it uses.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That is the answer exactly; and this may be accepted as certain, I think: Although I was so much wearied after speaking two or three hours yesterday that I could hardly make a clear answer to the interrogatories of the Senator from Louisiana, I can understand, Mr. President, and I think Senators ought to be able to understand the answer to the question which the Senator from Louisiana asked, namely, Why does American capital invest its money in British shipping when it could just as well invest its money in the shipping of our own country under the American flag?

Mr. President, I submit to the Senate the fact that they do that thing; and if Morgan and the National City Bank, which is in this business, and the Guaranty Trust Co., of New York, three of the principal financial institutions of this country, do enter into these arrangements and do make those contracts, I think it is fair to assume that they find it to their interest to do so; and, while we may not here in the brief time of a short discussion of this matter be able to figure out just exactly what those interests are, it is fair to assume that those men who have built up their financial power in this country know what their interests are, and it is enough for us to know that they have their capital invested in these great British shipping lines, and that under the guise of calling this International Mercantile Marine a 100 per cent American company they make their arrangements with our Shipping Board and get the allocation of ships from our Shipping Board to this so-called 100 per cent American company and parcel out those ships in a way not to interfere with the upbuilding of the British lines in which they have their money invested and from which they get their profits.

Mr. ASHURST and Mr. REED addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES], who first rose, if the other Senators will pardon me for a second.

Mr. MOSES. I wish to ask the Senator, with reference to his declaration a few minutes ago in connection with the appropriations which are to be asked of Congress, whether he differentiates between appropriations which may be asked for future operations of the Shipping Board and appropriations which are being asked to care for deficits that have already arisen? My understanding is that the great sums of which the Senator has spoken and which seem to all of us so enormous are the result of operations which have already taken place; that they are obligations of the Government under contracts the validity of which I assume is not questioned, although the wisdom of them may properly be, but obligations which the Government should meet. Does the Senator differentiate between the two classes of appropriations?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I think that is a matter that should be investigated before we appropriate a dollar upon that branch of the claims. I understand that there have been in the hands of one of the assistants of the Department of Justice data showing violation of law in a multitude of cases—I do not know how many—which are involved in the amounts that Congress will be asked to appropriate for in order to liquidate, and that no steps have been taken to prosecute upon those claims for some mysterious reason. I am going to bring them to the attention of the Senate more in detail a little later, not in connection with what I am saying to-day, but, sir, I do not believe in accepting the statement that any of these expenditures bind us to make appropriations until we make investigations with regard to them.

I think the time has come to put on the brakes. The time has come to halt this awful outflow from the Treasury of the United States, which has to be met by taxation. In these days when we are borrowing money at five and a fraction per cent, whenever we are imposing tax burdens upon the people of this country, it is high time for those who are responsible under the Constitution for the appropriation and the expenditure of every dollar that this Government makes to look into, to scan with critical eye, the demands of executive officers and department officials.

Mr. President, Congress has condemned the contracts that are known as the cost-plus contracts, and yet we are to-day having expenditures made—now, this hour—by the Shipping Board under a system of contracts that Congress has repudiated. I do not want to hold to too strict accountability the men who have lately come into the control of the Shipping Board, but since they are surrounded by men who are going on with the same practices that were so reprehensible, admittedly so, before these new men came in, and since there is evidence, to which I shall call attention before I conclude, that they have called into their new organization some of the men who are potential in their connections and associations with British interests, I think it behooves Congress to scan with a good deal of care these requests for appropriations, and to arouse, if possible, upon this floor, by discussions and criticism, the interest of our new Shipping Board to look into all these affairs.

I am not ascribing, Mr. President—and I beg to be so understood—to the new Shipping Board any ulterior motives; but I am saying that they have taken steps, since they have had charge of this matter, which are directly in line with the actions of their predecessors, and I am willing to assume that what they are doing is a yielding to influences in the organization which they were obliged to take over.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, there is another form of contract in connection with the operation of these ships, with which I assume the Senator from Wisconsin is familiar—the form of contract known as the M. O. 4 contract.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That is the form to which I referred, which I say Congress has condemned and put the stamp of its disapproval upon. That is the cost-plus contract.

Mr. MOSES. It is even worse than that, Mr. President. It is a contract under which a ship is allocated to a shipping company, and every expense of operation is borne by the Government, and the operator gets 5 per cent of the gross receipts, regardless of whether the ship loses or makes money.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I know of no better way of describing it than "cost plus." I shall refer to it somewhat in detail, and I am going to call attention to it morning after morning here on this floor and to show how much we are losing by the day and by the hour and to show that we are still pursuing the making of contracts under what is known as the M. O. 4 form.

Mr. MOSES. I had understood that the M. O. 4 contract was no longer being made and that steps were being taken by the new members of the Shipping Board to abrogate contracts in that form which were already existent.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That is not my information, but the Senator may be better informed than I am. I am not setting myself up here as infallible by any means. I am just trying to bring to the attention of the Senate matters that I believe call for the most thoroughgoing and searching investigation that the Senate has ever made. You never have been confronted with such an expenditure of money. I do not believe even the railroads under the Esch-Cummins law bleed the Public Treasury more than does the organization known as the Shipping Board.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. In just a moment. If I do not make it clear to-day, I hope I will be able to impress Senators with it hereafter, that the responsibility for every dollar of money that goes out to the Shipping Board henceforth lies with the Appropriations Committee, lies with the Committee on Commerce, then with the Senators here, perhaps, in the order in which named. But I say to you, sir, that there will come a time, if we do not heed the warning now, when every appropriation will be examined by the people.

Now I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. I understand that that M. O. 4 contract has been abandoned, but if it has not been abandoned I think the Congress ought to take steps immediately, by a joint resolution, to make it unlawful for any department of the Government to continue contracts of that character. I thought we had had experience enough during the war with cost-plus contracts never to have them put in force again as long as we, who know what they resulted in, are Members of the Senate and House of Representatives.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. In just a moment. I think, Mr. President, an effort has been made on the part of the gentleman in charge, Commander Gatewood—

Mr. JONES of Washington. He is one of the subordinates.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I understand he is, but he is especially charged with the execution of contracts, and I understand that he is putting forth efforts to end this system, and has been since the disclosures made by the Walsh committee, some of which he himself made as late as January, only six months ago, which are just astounding.

If they read the testimony of Commander Gatewood, I think Senators would regard it almost as unbelievable that we have been doing the things we have been doing through this Shipping Board, and voting the money of the taxpayers of this country to meet the charges. I do not get this information directly from Commander Gatewood, though I hope to be able to have an opportunity to talk with him face to face about it, but I have been advised that he has made a few curtailments of the gross evils which were carried out under the M. O. 4 contract system. But I am also advised by what I believe to be competent authority that the evil of the M. O. 4 contract, aside from the few curtailments mentioned made by Commander Gatewood, is going on at this hour just as it has gone on heretofore.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President—

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. JONES of Washington. In connection with this particular matter which the Senator is discussing, I desire to say that Mr. Lasker, the chairman of the Shipping Board, appeared before the Appropriations Committee of the House a few days ago, and I had an opportunity to hear part of his testimony. I do not believe that the Senator from Wisconsin, with all of his ability, could denounce the M. O. 4 contract in any more vigorous terms than Mr. Lasker used to denounce it. I have not found all of his denunciation of it in the print of the testimony before me, but here is the first statement he made with reference to it. After referring to the operations, and so forth, when ships were making a great deal of money, he said:

The Shipping Board devised a plan of leasing the boats known in the Shipping Board and throughout the shipping world in America as the M. O. 4 contract.

Now, I do not know. Maybe if I had been on the board at that time, or if any of you gentlemen had been on the board at that time, you would have voted for that contract in the light of things as they were then. Maybe you would not have voted for it; maybe I would not have voted for it. Without comment, because I am not expert enough on whether at that time that contract should have been voted for or not, it has turned out to have been as vicious and incompetent a basis of doing business as the human mind could devise, and it was all that was needed to make this sick business infinitely sicker.

I remember in another place or two he denounced it in even more vigorous language than that, if possible; but I have not the time to find the testimony now. Then the committee asked him what he was doing to end it. He said that only about a week ago had he been able to get the men he desired to take charge of the operations of the ships, and that just as soon as they can possibly devise another method to operate the ships, it will be done.

My recollection is that he stated that this was such an enormous business that, even though these ships were being operated under such a vicious contract, to just uproot it and overturn it all at once, without anything to take its place, would be worse even than to operate under this contract which he denounced so vigorously. But he assured the committee that just as soon as they could possibly devise a proper contract they proposed to do it and to get rid of this contract, which, as I have said, he denounced even more vigorously at other places than in the language I have just quoted.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I am very glad, Mr. President, to have had interpolated into this debate at this point this statement from the chairman of the Shipping Board. I certainly do not wish to be understood as bringing the members of the present Shipping Board under any strictures of criticism that shall question their loyalty to the public; but I conceive that I am rendering some small service in bringing to their attention and to the public attention evils which possibly the members of the Shipping Board may not have had the time to uncover, and the disclosure of which may result in greater expedition upon their part.

But, Mr. President, I shall have spoken to no satisfaction to myself if I do not impress the Shipping Board and the country with the fact that the British control and the British enjoyment of all of our appropriations here, outside of those which common grafters in this country get the benefit of, are being insured and continued by policies adopted by the new Shipping Board; that they have called into managerial control members of the International Mercantile Marine Co., which is as British in its interests as anything which can possibly be conceived of, and that, as I shall show before I conclude, they have been put in charge of the operation and direction of the ships of the United States Shipping Board, which we are building at such enormous expenditure under this "M. O. 4" and other reprehensible systems of contracts.

Mr. STANLEY. Right at that point, though I do not wish to interrupt the Senator, as I am very much interested in the proposition, and attempted to follow the Senator as closely as I could yesterday in his very elaborate argument, may I ask this question? It appeared that the International Mercantile Marine is a holding company. Is that correct?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It is an owning company.

Mr. STANLEY. It holds stock?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It holds and owns the stock or portions of the stock, and is affiliated by interlocking directorates and by stockholdings with the companies I have named.

Mr. STANLEY. Millions of the stock?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes. I do not think the position of the International Mercantile Marine would be so glaringly bad for our interests, although I do not think we ought to permit any connection in any way with our rivals, our greatest rival on the seas, if we are going to try to build up an American merchant marine, but we must not lose sight for a minute, regardless of stockholdings and the position of this company with respect to directors and all that, of the contracts that have been entered into, because the contracts bind the International Mercantile Marine to the interests, first, of the British Government, and, second, to British commerce and British trade, and any issue that may be raised between the makers of the contracts the whole business has to be settled by the lord high chancellor of Great Britain.

Mr. STANLEY. What puzzles me is the fact that if it is a holding company and has control of this vast array of English shipping, it could just as well have used its tremendous powers to have fostered the American merchant marine, being an American company, as to have thwarted and throttled it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That is exactly the same question that was suggested last evening by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL].

Mr. STANLEY. I am not suggesting that.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. My answer to that is this: I lay before you the contracts. They have done this thing.

Mr. STANLEY. Admittedly.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. They are not fools. They are the wisest business men we have in this country. They must find it profitable to make this close alliance with British commerce in their own interests. I go a step further and I say that it comports with all they have been doing in this country with respect to the upbuilding of great trusts and combinations for their own advantage, in defiance of the interests of this country and in defiance of the statutes upon the statute books of the United States. I say that it comports with their whole history that wherever their interests lead them, without regard to loyalty to American institutions and the American flag, there they go.

Mr. STANLEY. As I started to add, it appears from what the Senator has said that while the citizenship of the incorporators of the International Mercantile Marine may be American their interests are English and their alliances are British. Is that correct?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Certainly.

Mr. STANLEY. Then the Shipping Board could hardly have entered into the allocating of ships with a strictly British concern or with these subsidiary corporations without causing criticism. Is it the Senator's idea or does it appear probable from his investigation that the International Mercantile Marine is sort of an American dummy?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I think it is an American dummy so far as American interests are concerned. I think it is a mighty active institution so far as profits are concerned. I think that it is hostile. I think it betrays the interests of this country. I think that it defies the purpose of the American Congress in making the appropriations. I think that they are snickering in their sleeves at the gullibility of Senators who will vote vast sums to the upbuilding of a so-called American merchant marine which in the end simply puts money into their pockets.

Mr. STANLEY. May I ask another question right at that point?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Certainly.

Mr. STANLEY. Has the Senator looked into the matter which I am about to suggest? I do not see how it is possible for a majority of the stockholders of this concern to be American citizens if they are the holders—and I assume they are—of the stock of all these subsidiary concerns.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Why not? I have stated exactly what their holding is as shown by their report.

Mr. STANLEY. That the majority of stock of the International Mercantile Marine is held by American citizens?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I am ready to assume that it is.

Mr. STANLEY. I should think, from what the Senator has said, that it must be an American directorate with English stockholders; otherwise we would have Americans holding the stock of these large subsidiary concerns through this parent company.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I think as I go forward in my argument and as I get into the Record and before the Senate the statement of Lord Pirrie, made at the time this arrangement was entered into, the Senator will find some explanation for that which I have not perhaps put into the Record already.

Mr. STANLEY. I merely wish to get the matter clear in my own mind.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I am not undertaking, Mr. President, to answer as to the motives of anybody connected with this organization, but I am undertaking to place before the Senate facts with respect to it; that is, the facts in so far as I have been able to discover them, which, I think, call for the sort of an investigation that I have provided for in the resolution which is now before the Senate and to which I am addressing myself in this time which the Senate has assigned to another bill.

I should like to make a résumé of what I said yesterday with respect to this chart, but I am not going to tax the patience of Senators to do that. I have described the holdings and connections upon the left half of the chart, and I have reached the point of stating the power and the authority that Lord Pirrie exercises in this combination, and when I shall have delineated that as best I may I am going to give reasons which he submitted away back in 1902 to the stockholders of all these British companies as to why they might put into the hands of the International Merchant Marine all their stock, always under the agreement that they have. It is very interesting. It was stated on the floor of the Senate, and his language was quoted in 1902. So I begin where I left off on yesterday in the notes that I have made.

THE INTERNATIONAL MERCANTILE MARINE AND THE BRITISH SHIPPING COMBINATIONS.

Turning to the left half of the chart, it will be noted that Lord Pirrie is a director of the Atlantic Transportation Co., the British North American Co., the Oceanic Steam Navigation Co., and the Frederick Leyland Co. He is thus one of the handful of men under the peculiar provisions of the contract, which must never be lost sight of, of the International Mercantile Marine able absolutely to direct the affairs of these subsidiaries, practically no rights whatever being reserved to the parent company, the International Mercantile Marine Co., except the right to reap the profits. Mark you that. While they have these great holdings, they entered into contracts that gave them no power over the control of these companies and no rights except to accept profits. They must have been assured of such profits to have been willing to put their money in on a contract of that size, because the contracts are here in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. I cited them. I quoted them.

Mr. STANLEY. In that case they can not vote the stock they hold?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I think their voting capacity is utterly manacled and restricted.

Mr. STANLEY. That would explain it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. In order to show the relations of the International Mercantile Marine with the great British shipping companies, the holdings and directorships of Lord Pirrie and Sir John Ellerman are indicated on the chart. The five blocks at the top of the chart give the names and tonnage of the five great combinations which make them control the bulk of British tonnage engaged in liner traffic. The tonnage figures are taken from the Shipping Board report of 1919, and their accuracy in all respects can not be vouched for, but they are stated on the chart, which will be found in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD in connection with my remarks.

Lord Pirrie, it will be noted, is a director of the African Steamship Co., the Elder Dempster Co., the Moss Co., the Laporte & Holt Co., and the Union Castle Steamship Co., being five immediate subsidiaries of the Royal Mail Steam Packet Co., doing business largely with Africa and South America. The Royal Mail, however, has just inaugurated a fortnightly service between New York and Great Britain and a service from New York to Pacific ports.

According to a report submitted by Mr. Bevin and printed in volume 2 of the report inquiring into the wages of transport workers, published by the British Government in 1920, Lord Pirrie held, individually or jointly, 402,276 shares of the Cunard Steamship Co. As active director of the four great subsidiaries of the International Mercantile Marine, he may therefore reasonably be supposed to exercise influence to bring their policy and that of the two great British combinations in harmony.

Lord Pirrie is also vice president of the great shipbuilding firm of Harland & Wolff and of the coal, iron, and shipbuilding firm of John Brown & Co. He is a director of the London & Southwestern Railway Co., the London City and Midland Bank, and the British Union Oil Co.

It may be, Mr. President, that as this thing unfolds itself and Senators see into what a large field of profitable shipping the International Mercantile Marine Co. was permitted to enter by making these financial arrangements and these contract arrangements regardless of the interest of American shipping, Senators may find their answer to the question as to why they entered into these agreements. Dollars! That is all. That is the answer. No consideration of the interests of this country of ours. No future for an American merchant marine. Dollars! There was a time when these great financiers were content to violate the statutes of this country against the formation of trusts and combinations and go ahead and build up their control of trade and of the markets of this country. They have grown bolder since that time and they are more daring now. They ask Congress to contribute through its taxing power to building up these organizations in their interest, and we, fools that we are, vote the money of the people of the United States to pay for our own undoing.

No less interesting are the connections of Sir John R. Ellerman. The Ellerman lines, together with the White Star, hold the controlling interest in Shaw, Savill & Albion, and Sir John Ellerman is a director in that company. That is shown by the unbroken red line [indicating] which includes it. He also holds a block of the outstanding stock in the Leyland Line, of which he was at one time chief owner and which he disposed of when the International Mercantile Marine was formed. He has 5,285 £10 shares. Sir John Ellerman is head of the Ellerman Lines, and they constitute one of the five great British shipping combinations controlling the bulk of English shipping. He owns 4,000 shares in the Royal Mail Steam Packet Co., 92,000 shares in the Cunard Steamship Co., 150,000 shares in the Peninsular & Oriental Steamship Co., and £9,400 in the Holder Line, a Furness Withy interest, as shown here on the chart. [Indicating.]

I shall show Senators presently our present Shipping Board, through one of its officials, lately put into a very important position in directing operations there a man of long service in that company. I am not saying that they did so consciously to betray our interests, but the fact is when they are looking about for men of splendid equipment to take charge of matters in connection with the American merchant marine, when all the shipping of the world, speaking not too definitely, has been in the hands of Great Britain, if they do not know what is under the cover here and have not had their attention called to it, they are liable to make some contracts with these very British representatives and put them in positions where those representatives will be able to trip us up and break our necks in the great big object which we are seeking to execute.

I am rather hoping that, by getting the Senators and the country interested, if I can, in this subject, and getting an investigation started here, we shall make more progress in reorganizing upon a right basis. We had better take men who have not had the experience but who are sound at heart, just as I think we had better take men of moderate ability in official positions, as Members of the Senate, than to take the ablest men in the country who are committed to and affiliated with interests that are hostile to the public interest. So with the Shipping Board, we want men who are 100 per cent right; who are imbued with no other idea than to bring about this great desideratum, the building up of an American merchant marine that shall be useful to the American public, not only in the hour of trouble but in all hours, so far as the commerce of this country and transporting the products of this country are concerned. They can not be in the service of the American public unless they are at heart thoroughly American; they can not be in the service of the American public if they are bound up in any way with British interests or if they enter into any agreement that destroys competition.

The primary object of our building up, so far as commercial enterprises are concerned, an American merchant marine is to get our hauling done for our overseas service at reasonable rates. We can not get that service at reasonable rates unless there may be competition between the American merchant marine and the other ocean overseas carriers. If we can not get it by the open and free play of the laws of competition, then the next step will be to try to get it by regulation of ocean-going freight rates. In that we shall probably fare no better than every State in the Union and the National Government have fared in trying to regulate interstate commerce rates on the railroads. We shall find that our State commissions and our Federal commissions will fall under the influence of the carriers. Then, we shall be thrown back to the only other thing that there is, and that is Government operation or Government ownership.

I know there has been built up in this country in the last three or four years a tremendous sentiment against that, because conditions have favored the making of sentiment against it. We shall fight that out later. However, step by step and year by year, the American people are being pressed back or led forward inevitably by the development of circumstances to that as the final solution.

Mr. President, I try to hold myself in restraint in making criticisms upon the new Shipping Board, and I think we have all got to realize that they have a tremendously big problem on their hands and we have got to be reasonably patient in giving them time to work it out. They have been in office about two months. When it comes to a matter of making particular rates I think that is probably or comparatively of so little importance that it might easily miss their attention. It is in the big things, it is in the management and the allocation of our ships, it is in the directing of the operation of those ships that I think they ought to get a right understanding of the relation of the American merchant marine, if we are ever to have one, to the interest of our great rival, Great Britain.

Now, I must hasten, Mr. President, because I feel that in a way I am trespassing upon the rights of those who desire to speak on the bill that is immediately before the Senate. I wish to say in justification, however, that I made the best canvass that I could of the Senators on both sides to ascertain whether any Senator was ready to take the floor this morning, and expressed myself, as I truly was, desirous of standing aside and allowing the debate to proceed upon the bill immediately before the Senate rather than upon the resolution which I ultimately hope to bring to a vote before the Senate; but I found no one who was not entirely willing that I should go ahead. I did say that I hoped to get through in an hour. I am not going to be able to do that unless I make greater speed. So I will hurry along as best I may. I want to get before the Senate this other [indicating] big center of British control represented by Sir John Ellerman, conclude what I have to say about the chart, and then make my deductions and yield the floor.

I think I have shown that Sir John Ellerman owns 4,000 shares of the Royal Mail Steam Packet Co. stock; 92,000 shares of the Cunard Steamship Co.; 150,000 shares of the Peninsular & Oriental Steamship Co.; and £9,400 in the Holder Line, a Furness Withy Co. interest. He is thus interested in every one of the big companies that control the great bulk of British shipping. Other of his important interests are indicated by the figures on the left of the chart. He has important stock holdings in two investment companies and is a director of four other such companies. He is a large stockholder in the International Tea Co. and four brewery companies. He is a stockholder in newspapers that have a wide and influential control of British thought, including the Sphere and Tatler and the Daily Mail.

Through Lord Pirrie and Sir John R. Ellerman, therefore, the International Mercantile Marine is tied not only with all the big British shipping combinations but with the most important British shipbuilding concerns, and with British banks, investment companies, with British railways, and other British enterprises.

To briefly sum up, it is apparent that the International Mercantile Marine draws its profits from the earnings of 99 British vessels of 922,166 dead-weight tonnage, as against 11 American vessels of 135,647 tons.

So far as I am aware, there is no report available showing separately the earnings of the British companies. They are not required to report to any department or authority in this country. They are not required to pay any taxes to our Government, but do pay many millions of dollars every year to the British Government out of the profits made in transporting our products. But by far the larger part of the income of the International Mercantile Marine is represented by the dividends which the British boards of directors permit under the contracts to be declared by these companies upon their stock. It is fair to assume, other things being equal, that this, the larger and more profitable part of the business of the International Mercantile Marine, will be built up and extended wherever possible. These British vessels, the stock of which is held largely by the International Mercantile Marine, come into direct competition with the American vessels of the International Mercantile Marine, as well as with those of its two American subsidiaries. Which class of vessels in this situation will be favored in this struggle for business? Where lies the greater profit for the International Mercantile Marine? Suppose that Lord Pirrie, who dominates the Atlantic Transport Co., as he does the other British subsidiaries, decides that his company must have some of the business done by the Atlantic Transport Co. of West Virginia. He decides to cut rates to put additional ships on the routes of the Atlantic Transport of West Virginia, and by other means seeks to drive this competitor from the field. Then, suppose that the International Mercantile Marine was in earnest about protecting American shipping interests, and through its stockholdings in the International Navigation Co. was successful in getting that British company, through its stockholdings in the Atlantic Transport Co., to interfere with Lord Pirrie's game, and to assist the American company in resisting the attack upon its business thus made by British interests. Now the contracts come into play. Immediately it would be claimed that a policy injurious to the British mercantile marine or "to British trade," to use the language of the contracts, was being pursued and the contract between the International Mercantile Marine was therefore being violated. And why is it for the interest of the International Mercantile Marine to submit, and not to call the contract at an end, as they can, by giving a certain notice? It is for their interest because they have more interest in the tail than they have in the dog itself. The tail is the big end of the business. It wags the dog.

If there were any doubt about it, or if any question arose as to the rights of these companies under this contract, remember that the contract must be interpreted according to the English law, and that it must be left to the lord high chancellor of Great Britain to decide not only the meaning of the contract but every question of law or fact that may arise under it.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President—

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I am very much interested to learn from the Senator, if he can give us the information, whether or not the independent steamship lines have been entirely eliminated. For instance, there used to be a great many of what they called tramp steamers that were apparently going from port to port at their own pleasure, picking up cargoes, buying, and selling, and not controlled by any trust. Have they been closed out?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I do not think that they have entirely. I think they are still in existence. I do think that under the Machiavellian management of men who have been put in office by the present Shipping Board, one or more of whom were potential with the previous Shipping Board, in the interest of foreign shipping, action has been taken to throttle independently owned American vessels. Senators, I am going to bring to your attention in a little while the proceedings started to dispossess the United States Mail Steamship Co. of certain vessels. Your attention must have been called to it in the press reports—an action started by the Shipping Board—and when I reach that point it will help to make an answer, I think, to the Senator's question.

I say that any differences that arise as to the interpretation of contracts are not to be settled in American courts. Perhaps before the debate upon this resolution is concluded you will hear the changes rung on the fact that we have a "100 per cent American company" here, and that upon that you ought to rely. My answer to that is that you have an arrangement here with the shipping interests that represent the major part of Great Britain's commerce to let the International Mercantile Marine for profits into that business, and for those profits they surrender their loyalty to the upbuilding of an American merchant marine.

I say that if there were any doubt about a question of competition between the Atlantic Transport Co. of West Virginia, for instance, and the desire of Lord Pirrie to cut away from it its tonnage, or if any question arose as to the rights of the British companies under this contract, remember that the contract must be interpreted according to English law and that it must be left to the lord high chancellor of Great Britain to decide not only the meaning of the contract but every question of law or fact that may arise under it. Always there hangs over the International Mercantile Marine the possibility that the contract may be terminated at any time by the British Government for any cause that the lord high chancellor of Great Britain may assign. It is, moreover, ever faced with the possibility that the profits of its subsidiaries may be decreased or entirely absorbed by construction and other expenses authorized by the British board of directors. The result is that it would be folly for the International Mercantile Marine to protest against or attempt to retaliate any use made of the British ships to the detriment of American shipping, even if it had the desire—which it never would have, because its profits would not lead it in that direction—or the power to do so.

In this situation it is ludicrous to expect the American ships to compete with the British ships. If by any possibility the American ships could by competitive methods obtain any portion of the business theretofore done by the British ships, this would forthwith be declared by the lord high chancellor of England to be a policy "injurious to the interest of the British mercantile marine or of British trade," and an end put to it at once.

MAKING THE I. M. M. 100 PER CENT AMERICAN.

Look for a moment at the board of directors of the International Mercantile Marine Co.

According to the 1917 report of the International Mercantile Marine Co., which is the last report I was able to get from the Congressional Library, the directors of that company were as follows:

Directors.

Harold A. Sanderson, chairman	Lord Pirrie (British).
(British).	John W. Platten.
Otto T. Bannard.	Albert Rathbone.
Harry Bronner.	Charles H. Sabin.
George W. Davison.	Frederic W. Scott.
P. A. S. Franklin.	Charles Steele.
Donald G. Geddes.	Charles A. Stone.
Edward C. Grenfell (British).	Frank A. Vanderlip.
J. P. Morgan.

According to the Shipping Board report of 1919, the directors were the same at that time, except that John W. Perry was substituted for Albert Rathbone. I understand that since the recent criticism of this company—I refer to the attacks made by the Senator from Washington [Mr. Jones] upon the British arrangement—the English directors have retired from the board but keep their places of real power on the subsidiaries.

The Shipping Board report does not give the finance committee or the British committee, but, according to the report of the International Mercantile Marine Co., from which I have quoted, the finance and the British committees, with the officers, were as follows:

Finance committee.

P. A. S. Franklin, chairman.	Harold A. Sanderson, ex officio.
J. P. Morgan.	Edward C. Grenfell, ex officio.
Charles Steele.	John W. Platten.
Charles A. Stone.	Harry Bronner.
Frederic W. Scott.	Frank A. Vanderlip.

British committee.

Edward C. Grenfell, chairman.	P. A. S. Franklin, ex officio.
Lord Pirrie.	Harold A. Sanderson.

Officers.

PRESIDENT.

P. A. S. Franklin.

VICE PRESIDENTS.

Edward C. Grenfell.	Frederick Toppin.
John H. Thomas.

TREASURER.

Horace G. Phillips.

SECRETARY.

Emerson E. Parvin.

COMPTROLLER.

Monroe W. Tingley.

ASSISTANT TO THE PRESIDENT.

John J. McGlone.

ASSISTANT TREASURERS.

E. Edgar Heston.	Alfred P. Palmer.
------------------	-------------------

ASSISTANT SECRETARIES.

John J. McGlone.	Charles R. Jeeves.
------------------	--------------------

TRANSFER AGENTS.

J. P. Morgan & Co., 23 Wall Street, New York.

Of the three English directors, Lord Pirrie, Harold A. Sanderson, and Edward C. Grenfell, I have spoken briefly and of some of the connections of Lord Pirrie, though I have not by any means exhausted them.

Harold A. Sanderson was the second president of the International Mercantile Marine Co. He is a British subject, and a director of the Liverpool & London Steamship Protective Association, as well as of the subsidiaries of the International Mercantile Marine and various other British companies. Edward C. Grenfell is the partner of J. P. Morgan, and a British subject, and up at least to 1919 was vice president of the International Mercantile Marine, and while I believe, owing to criticism, has recently retired from that position, he remains, like his English associates, a director of the International Navigation Co., the Atlantic Transport Co., the Oceanic Steam Navigation Co., George Thompson & Co., Shaw, Savill & Albion.

It is significant to note, Senators, in this connection that through Savill and Torrey, directors of these subsidiary companies, they are brought into the "Shipping Federation (Ltd.)," and Senators will notice that I am using the title of a new corporation now. They are brought into the "Shipping Federation (Ltd.)." I hope at another time to make the Senate and the country acquainted with the "Shipping Federation (Ltd.)," organized in London, with powers to influence legislation in the Capital of this Nation and in every other country of any shipping pretensions, having unlimited power to expend the money to attain its objects. It is a most interesting organization for men devoted to the interests of this country to study. You may see before long in legislation presented to the Senate the influence of this great power, with its home office in Great Britain, moving in the direction of the purposes for which it is chartered to control legislation here, if in any way we are legislating for our own interests and those interests conflict with British interests.

INTERLOCKING DIRECTORATES OF THE INTERNATIONAL MERCANTILE MARINE AND AMERICAN RAILROADS.

Turn to the American members on the board of the International Mercantile Marine Corporation and note for a moment the significance of their railroad connections.

The J. P. Morgan interests, which have always been dominant in the affairs of the International Mercantile Marine and are now represented on the board by J. P. Morgan and Charles Steele, hold directorates in the following railroads. I give only those in which Mr. Morgan is a director.

You will see the significance of these railroad connections and how Morgan's railroad connections induced Lord Pirrie to enter into this scheme back in 1902, for I will quote to you the language of Lord Pirrie, used on the floor of the Senate 19 years ago in debates here, when information as to this organization came before the Senate. Here are Mr. Morgan's connections with railroads. He is on the board of directors of the Central Railroad of New Jersey; Lehigh Valley; Lehigh & Hudson; Erie; Northern Pacific; Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway; Southern; Chicago Great Northern; New York, Susquehanna & Western; Pere Marquette; Philadelphia & Reading, 11 in all.

The Guaranty Trust, represented on the directorate of the International Mercantile Marine by Charles H. Sabin, president of that company, holds directorates in the following roads:

Michigan Central; Pittsburgh & Lake Erie; Lake Erie & Western; Toledo & Ohio Central; Kanawha & Michigan Railway; Cincinnati & Northern; Monongahela Railway; Rutland Railroad; New York Central; Wabash; Southern Pacific; Illinois Central; Texas & Pacific; St. Louis Southwestern; Missouri Pacific; New York, Susquehanna & Western; Gulf, Colorado & Santa Fe; Santa Fe, Prescott & Phoenix; Toledo, St. Louis & Western; Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe; Erie; St. Louis & San Francisco; Seaboard Air Line; Union Pacific; St. Joseph & Grand Island; Oregon-Washington Railroad & Navigation Co.; Baltimore & Ohio; Illinois Central; Alabama Great Southern; Nevada Northern; Copper River & Northwestern; Chicago Great Western; Pennsylvania; Long Island; New York, New Haven & Hartford; New York, Ontario & Western; Pittsburgh, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis; New York, Westchester & Boston; Western Maryland; Delaware & Hudson; Illinois Central; Yazoo & Mississippi Valley; Central of Georgia, 43 in all.

Mr. F. A. Vanderlip, until recently president of the National City Bank, is on the board of the International Mercantile Marine, and Mr. Franklin, the president of the International Mercantile Marine, is on the board of the National City Bank. Directors of the National City Bank are to be found on the boards of the following roads:

El Paso & Southwestern; Southern; Chicago, Indiana & St. Louis; Mobile & Ohio; Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul; Oregon Short Line; Oregon-Washington Railroad & Navigation Co.; Rutland; New York Central; Union Pacific; Delaware, Lackawanna & Western; Michigan Central; Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis; Pittsburgh & Lake Erie; Lake Erie & Western; St. Joseph & Grand Island; Chicago & Alton; Yazoo & Mississippi Valley; Illinois Central; Central of Georgia; Los Angeles & Salt Lake; Galveston, Harrisburg & San Antonio; Houston & Texas Central; Morgan's Louisiana & Texas R. R.; Texas & New Orleans; Arizona Eastern; Southern Pacific; Louisiana Western; Houston East & West Texas Co.; Chicago & North Western; Cincinnati, New Orleans & Texas Pacific, 31 in all.

The roads that bring the products of the country to the coast for shipment, of course, largely control those shipments overseas. Here you see how skillfully the masters of transportation by land and water of Great Britain and the United States are combined in interest and associated together to control our maritime commerce in the interest of British shipping corporations and the British Government, so that a few financiers may be enabled to reap the profits of the business. And the profits of the business, mind you, arise from transporting our goods abroad, and arise almost solely from transporting our goods abroad.

When the project of selling the stock of these British companies to Americans was broached by the elder Morgan to Lord Ellerman some years ago, the latter, who was the president of the Leyland Co., addressed his stockholders and advised them to make the sale. He said:

But we must look at this matter all around, and I am bound to tell you that there are two factors in regard to the shipping trade which, while on the one hand it would be quite possible to exaggerate their importance and take too serious a view of their importance, it would, on the other hand, be exceedingly foolish to ignore and not give due consideration to. You may accept that offer or you may decline it, as seems best to you in your wisdom, but of one thing be sure, American capital is coming into the Atlantic trade, and is coming into the Atlantic trade to stay. The Atlantic trade is a peculiar trade in this respect, that it is almost entirely an eastbound trade. Your vessels going out to the United States take practically nothing. They do not pay their way, or anything like it. The profit is wholly made upon the return cargo.

Now, an eastbound trade means the carriage of produce from the United States to Great Britain and the Continent. Well, the relations of Messrs. Morgan to the great railway systems of the United States are known to everybody, and you can judge for yourselves, without my enlarging upon the matter, whether Messrs. Morgan and their friends coming into the Atlantic trade would or would not come into that trade under very favorable conditions so far as they were concerned and very unfavorable conditions as far as many of their competitors were concerned. (See CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Mar. 15, 1902, p. 2847.)

Why, how simple it all was. If you would study the great lines of railroad that traverse your country, and see how they center in New York, and then study the directorates of those railroads and the directorates of the great financial institutions of New York, you would see how completely it is possible for the masters of those transportation systems to deliver the products of this country to any shipping concerns in which they are interested, so far as overseas trade is concerned. Lord Pirrie saw that. His long experience in the transportation service, his mastery of the large portion of it which Great Britain dominates made him at once open-minded to this proposition of an alliance with these American financiers who control the railroads of this country, whose affiliations with British shipping interests would be of tremendous mutual benefit and profit if any proper arrangement could be effected. So this arrangement was effected and these contracts were entered into.

But the British Government, ever with an eye single to British interests, saw to it that those affiliations were dominated by contract provisions that would protect British interests ever. Ever in the forefront of British international relations sits the great purpose of protecting British interests and British commerce, which is the basis of British wealth. So these contracts were made.

Mr. Ellerman saw that American capital coming into this business, owning or controlling the terminal facilities here and the railroads which carry the products to the ships, could build and operate their own ships to the exclusion of British competitors. Then, apparently, was devised the scheme I have but imperfectly outlined to you, whereby a few rulers of railroads and financial magnates combined to ship our goods in British ships under the British flag for the upbuilding of the British merchant marine and the destruction of our own for the dollars they could get out of it.

I have said a number of times that I would bring to the attention of Senators the recent appointments made by the present Shipping Board, which I think, Mr. President, call for some comment, and I believe that here is perhaps the best place to introduce that information.

Of course, I take it that Senators know that when the Shipping Control Committee was established in 1918, English domination was very pronounced. Indeed all of the earlier operations were largely under British control. When the Shipping Control Committee was established in 1918 Sir Guthrie was made a member of it, representing British interests. The other two members were P. A. S. Franklin, president of the International Mercantile Marine, the associations and business connections of which I have spent much time upon, and H. H. Raymond, president of the Clyde Line and now president of the American Steamship Owners' Association, an intimate of Franklin.

W. J. Love, American manager for Francis Withy & Co., shown in the upper left-hand corner of the chart which hangs upon the wall, with its British connections, served as a director at that time of trades and allocations. I ask Senators to keep that name in mind.

The chartering committee of the Shipping Board at the same time consisted of three members, the first of whom was J. Barstow Smull. He is now at the head of the division of operations. He was in an important position under the old Shipping Board. He is in a very important position under the present Shipping Board as the director of the division of operations.

The other members were A. J. Fetterlock, vice president of the International Mercantile Marine, and Welding Ring, of the United States and Australian Steamship Co., which I believe operated only British lines, although I am not absolutely certain that there may not have been some other lines within their control.

The manner in which this indirect British control continues at the present time is suggested by the personnel of the three new directors of operations in the present Shipping Board—Smull, Love, and Frey—comment upon whose appointment taken from the New York Journal of Commerce of July 14, just last month, I now place before Senators showing how entirely satisfactory to foreign interests is the appointment of these three men by the present Shipping Board. Mark you, J. Barstow Smull and William J. Love were in important positions under the old Shipping Board in connection with the direction of operations and the chartering of vessels.

The Journal of Commerce said on July 14, 1921:

There was genuine delight in shipping circles yesterday over the appointment of William J. Love, J. Barstow Smull, and A. J. Frey as members of the new operating committee for the Shipping Board. Not only were American interests pleased by the action taken, but the directors of foreign lines expressed great satisfaction.

And so forth.

Mr. President, I know that many Senators upon this floor have received letters of severest complaint and stricture upon those appointments, from owners of independent lines who have suffered the destruction of their business and the discrimination of the Shipping Board through these same men when they were in official positions before, and who know their connection and their affiliation with British shipping organizations.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KING in the chair). Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. STANLEY. In that connection has the Senator from Wisconsin looked into the question of rates, say, on coal from Cardiff and from American ports to South American ports? For instance, the points consuming coal on the eastern coast of Brazil and Argentina are practically the same distance from American ports, from Savannah and New York, as from Cardiff. We produce coal at a much less cost on account of superior productiveness of the American mine and on account of the greater economies in production, because our coal is taken out of mines nearer the surface, while they have to go down two or three thousand feet. Notwithstanding the fact that their costs of production are very much greater, until very recently we have not been able to deliver coal to South American ports because the cost of transporting the coal the same distance from American ports as from Cardiff was more than sufficient to absorb all the economies in production.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I have had my attention called to that matter.

Mr. STANLEY. It is an immense question.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes; it is a question of tremendous importance. It goes to the very heart of the problem of our getting our products from this country into foreign markets.

Mr. STANLEY. I do not wish to interrupt the Senator, but I wish to get this idea in at this time, because it will be interesting to the country generally. I took the matter up with the Shipping Board and with the Geological Survey. The best coals of this country, Pocahontas coal and coal from West Virginia and eastern Kentucky fields, are superior, if anything, measured by the British thermal unit, to the Cardiff coal. They are not any more liable to spontaneous combustion or any of the defects that affect so many coals, the black coals of the Saar Valley and a good many of the coals of our section and the Central and Middle West.

I have never been able to understand just why, if the British shipping is maintaining the same rate for eastbound and westbound traffic, it seems to have been impossible until very recently to compete with British coals. As an instance, we consumed during the war over 500,000,000 tons of Chilean nitrate, and yet we were unable to furnish coal on the return trips of those ships sufficient to transport that nitrate from the mines to the seacoast. Our entire shipment of coal to South American ports is negligible at this time.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I am obliged to the Senator for contributing to the discussion the observations which he has just made. As we proceed with consideration of the subject we shall be constantly developing facts of tremendous national interest which require immediate attention. I have not gone into the matter of rates. I simply took this survey of national and international interests so far as affected by corporate relations and interrelations and contracts, and have not taken up the extent or touched the way in which the commercial interests of the United States are suffering through this sort of arrangement. That will all come as a part of our further consideration of this great subject. I am glad, however, to have had the Senator from Kentucky touch upon it.

Mr. STANLEY. I should like to observe, although I do not wish to take further time of the Senator, that a differential in the rates of ocean carriers against American commerce at this time would entail a greater hardship and a greater loss upon American producers than the enormous losses afforded by the shipowners in an effort to obtain the American merchant marine in the face of the handicap that the Senator has mentioned.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I have little doubt of that, although as I said, I have not up to the present time undertaken an investigation of that great subject. I have had my attention called to it by various industrial organizations of the country and independent shipping companies suffering from this situation.

Mr. President, in connection with the appointment of these three men by the new Shipping Board to these positions of great power, really the directors of operations, the men who were in charge of all the movements of the shipping facilities that we have been expending these vast amounts of money to create, I wish to say this: The connection of Mr. Smull with the firm of J. H. Winchester & Co., steamship agents and ship brokers, established in 1856, which has direct connection and affiliation with British interests, the connection of Mr. Love with the International Mercantile Marine, which has the tie-ups to which I have directed the attention of the Senate through the contracts, and the connection for many years of Mr. A. J. Frey, who has received appointment by the new Shipping Board, with the Pacific Mail Steamship Co., which is one of the large British shipping companies, are all important, and I mention them now in connection with a proceeding that was started about a week or 10 days ago by the Shipping Board, evidently with these very men behind it and pushing it forward, to dispossess of its Shipping Board vessels what appears from newspaper statements to be a purely American shipping company, the United States Mail Steamship Co., a company that had taken over from the old Shipping Board a number of vessels under contracts which provided that they should be overhauled and that certain allowances were to be made for them.

Senators may have noticed that the United States Shipping Board just a few days ago, under court proceedings through the United States marshal, took possession of those vessels that were under the contracts made between the old Shipping Board and the United States Mail Steamship Co., and gave out that they had violated their contract; that they were behind in their rentals; and that the Shipping Board was starting in to make a clean-up for the new order of things.

What happened? The shipping company made a public statement that every dollar of the money which was invested in their business was the money of American citizens; that they were trying to build up a truly American line; that they owned some ships of their own; that they had taken those ships of the American Shipping Board under the contract made with the old Shipping Board; that they were proceeding as best they could under the circumstances to recondition those ships for overseas service; that during the time that they were engaged in reconditioning them the shipping conditions underwent a great depression; that, however, they were within their contract rights, because it was provided that if any occasion arose for differences with respect to contract rights there should be arbitration; and that they were not going to surrender to this movement on the part of the new Shipping Board. Their charges are openly made in the press reports.

Mr. President, it is charged openly in the press of this country and other countries that this movement on the part of the Shipping Board was instigated by foreign interests, represented through their officials, who had the old-time affiliations with British shipping; that they were reaching out, through the power of the Federal Government, to throttle a real American organization, which wanted to put the American flag on the high seas, and that was doing it very successfully; that had its lines operating and breaking in for the first time in history on the great ocean-carrying trade of foreign Governments in the passenger service, as was shown by the figures which they gave.

Mr. President, I repeat, they stated that they were within their contract rights, and that they would fight the Shipping Board to the last ditch to hold on to those vessels. I observe that an injunction, which was temporarily granted to restrain the United States Mail Steamship Co. from operating those ships, was dissolved and that they are in possession of the ships.

If the Shipping Board does not back down completely, as it has been backed off the boards in their first attempt to secure out of hand control of those vessels, the matter will have to be fought out at length. I trust that some of the facts which are stated in the newspaper accounts will be developed in court, in order that we may have that aid in ascertaining just how much our new Shipping Board is being imposed upon by British and other foreign interests.

THE PROBLEM THAT CONFRONTS US.

The question which is confronting the country to-day respecting our merchant marine is much larger than any question of graft or incompetence on the part of any officials who have been connected with the Shipping Board. British influence and British power could not keep us from our rightful place upon the seas if she had not cleverly made it for the interest of our own shipping concerns and financial institutions to continue British supremacy upon the seas. British propaganda and British intrigue can do no harm when we know it and recognize it for what it is. But when it comes to us from our own people, through our own press, and even through our own public officials, then, indeed, it does harm.

You may ask, What are we going to do about it? My answer is that the first thing we should do about it is to find out the facts. I believe that the conditions existing in the International Mercantile Marine Co. are typical of those existing mainly in all our great shipping companies, upon the patriotism and loyalty of which we are counting to build up an American merchant marine. The first thing to do is to conduct a searching investigation into the whole subject and see what the relations are between the shipping and transportation interests of this country and Great Britain. If the conditions are such as I have shown to exist in the case of this one company, then we should do what we ought to do in the case of this company—we should compel it to divorce itself absolutely from British shipping interests if it wishes to continue in business as an American shipping company. It can not serve two masters. It can not be bound by contracts or by self-interest to serve and promote British shipping and at the same time serve and promote our own shipping, which is in direct competition with that of Great Britain. You may say the remedy is drastic. I answer that the disease calls for a drastic remedy. If we are to build up an American merchant marine, we must have the absolute loyalty of every person engaged in that enterprise from seaman to shipowner. There must be no divided allegiance. The crews must be American seamen, the officers must be American officers, and the ships must be American owned and free to meet the competition of Great Britain and all other countries in a legitimate struggle for our portion of the maritime commerce of the world.

EXPORTATION OF FARM PRODUCTS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1915) to provide for the purchase of farm products in the United States, to sell the same in foreign countries, and for other purposes.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I do not think any measure has been proposed to this body which is of more importance than the present proposed legislation. Of course it is practically impossible for Members of this body to know intimately the real condition that exists in the agricultural districts. Most of us come from the urban communities, and what we hear we hear indirectly, and what we see does not give us a good basis of judgment. It is only those who are intimately associated with those who have to bear the burden that is now placed upon agriculture who know the distressful conditions under which the agricultural districts are laboring. I congratulate this body and those who were instrumental in formulating the present substitute for the so-called Norris bill upon providing, in my judgment, the best solution that has been presented to this Congress for the immediate distressing conditions that confront agriculture.

I wish I had the time to go into some of the causes that have brought about this condition, but it would take too long, and I am therefore going to devote myself to the substitute offered by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] as amended by the subcommittee that was appointed to take that matter in charge.

As I said a moment ago, the present amended form of the finance corporation act promises more for the immediate relief of the farmers of this country than any other measure or suggestion that has been presented to Congress. The deflation of currency and restriction of credits that became so rampant during the last year or more of course fell upon the farmer with more terrible effect than upon any other class, the reason being that as a class he has practically no reserve capital to fall back upon in times like these, and must therefore secure aid in financing his crop until market conditions improve or become bankrupt and penniless. It was hoped that with the revival of the War Finance Corporation it would be able to open a way to foreign markets that would bring tolerable relief. Its original functions being restricted entirely to export, it has become apparent that the volume of exports and the prices are wholly inadequate to meet the situation. It is therefore necessary to provide a means by which the farm products can be financed during the time of market stagnation.

The financial institutions in the agricultural districts find it impossible to finance the crops as is now required and meet their other obligations without additional substantial aid. To meet this situation the present amendment to the War Finance Corporation act is offered.

In a word, Mr. President, when the War Finance Corporation was rehabilitated by Congress and put into operation it was done in the belief that this organization could find a way to open the foreign markets to such an extent as to relieve the pressure at home and bring the relief desired. Upon investigation, however, it was found that the conditions in the foreign markets were such, or were alleged to be such, that the surplus accumulations in this country could not find a market there. Therefore it became necessary for us to find a means to enable the producers of our staple crops so to finance them as not to bankrupt them and ruin them while the process of rehabilitation was going on abroad and at home. Therefore it became necessary to amend the War Finance Corporation act and give them powers in addition to those that they now have. Therefore I invite the attention of Senators to the first amended section—22—which provides as follows:

Whenever the board of directors of the corporation shall be of the opinion that conditions arising out of the war or out of the disruption of foreign trade created by the war have resulted in or may result in an abnormal surplus accumulation of any staple agricultural product of the United States, and that the ordinary banking facilities are inadequate to enable producers of or dealers in such products to carry them until they can be exported or sold for export in an orderly manner the corporation shall thereupon be empowered to make advances for periods not exceeding one year from the respective dates of such advances upon such terms not inconsistent with this act, as it may determine: (a) To any person engaged in the United States in producing, dealing in, or marketing any such products for the purpose of assisting such person to carry such products until they can be exported or sold for export in an orderly manner. Any such advance shall bear interest—

And so forth. Now, we are amending it so that those who are producing stuff for export can hold it until such time as the export market would justify the shipment and sale of these articles.

I have read only a part of section 22, but it is evident, all of us know, that the export price of any farm product is reflected in the domestic price. Therefore if the export price is so low as to spell bankruptcy the domestic price is the same. Therefore it became imperative to provide means to take care of this feature of the case.

Section 24 therefore provides that—

Whenever in the opinion of the board of directors of the corporation the public interest may require it, the corporation shall be authorized and empowered to make advances upon such terms not inconsistent with this act as it may determine to any bank, banker, or trust company in the United States which may have made advances for agricultural purposes, including the breeding, raising, fattening, and marketing of live stock. Such advance or advances may be made upon the promissory note or notes or other instrument or instruments in such form as to impose on the borrowing bank, banker, or trust company a primary and unconditional obligation to repay the advance at maturity with interest as stipulated therein, and shall be fully and adequately secured in each instance by indorsement, guaranty, pledge, or otherwise. Such advances may be made for a period not exceeding one year, and the corporation may from time to time extend the time of payment of any such advance through renewals, substitution of new obligations, or otherwise, but the time for the payment of any such advance shall not be extended beyond two years from the date upon which such advance was originally made.

The corporation may, in exceptional cases, upon such terms not inconsistent with this act as it may determine, purchase from domestic banks, bankers, or trust companies notes, drafts, bills of exchange, or other instruments of indebtedness secured by chattel mortgages, warehouse receipts, bills of lading, or other instruments in writing conveying or securing marketable title to staple agricultural products, including live stock. The corporation may from time to time, upon like security, extend the time of payment of any note, draft, bill of exchange, or other instrument acquired under this section, but the time for the payment of any such note, draft, bill of exchange, or other instrument shall not be extended beyond two years from the date upon which such note, draft, bill of exchange, or other instrument was acquired by the corporation. The corporation is further authorized, upon such terms as it may prescribe, to purchase, sell, or otherwise deal in debentures, promissory notes, or other obligations, adequately secured, issued by banking corporations organized under section 25(a) of the Federal reserve act. No such promissory notes, debentures, or other obligations shall be purchased which have a maturity at the time of such purchase of more than five years.

Advances or purchases may be made under this section at any time prior to July 1, 1922.

Therefore it renders aid not only for the purpose of holding export articles, but also for the purpose of helping finance those who would be bankrupt under the present domestic market conditions, to enable them to carry their products until such time as they may find a market for them.

The second paragraph of section 24 provides for aid to State banks where the laws of the State limit the lending power of such banks to a per cent of their capital and surplus. It authorizes the Finance Corporation in such cases to buy the farm securities held by such banks, thus enabling such banks to use the purchase money thus obtained to extend further aid to their customers. The power to do the things above set forth is extended to 1927—five years.

To sum up the purpose and intent of the bill, it is to extend immediate credit, financial aid, to farmers through local banking institutions, farm organizations, export companies, and banking associations organized under the Edge Act to enable them to meet the stagnated condition of the markets.

Section 6 amends paragraph 1, section 13, of the War Finance Corporation act so that notes as well as bonds of the corporation may be taken by member banks and be discounted by Federal reserve banks. In this connection it is important to note the financial condition of the Federal reserve system. I invite the particular attention of Senators who are doing me the honor to listen to what I have to say in reference to this bill to this particular feature:

On last Saturday, July 30, I asked the Comptroller of the Currency to give me an official statement of the reserve of the Federal reserve banks, and I received the following:

Referring to your request to be advised as to the reserves of Federal reserve banks, I beg to advise you as follows:

Actual reserves—

I asked him in this communication to give me the actual reserves of each reserve bank in the 12 reserve districts of this country, and these are the facts as set forth—

Boston, 77.6 per cent—

Senators will bear in mind that the legal requirement against outstanding circulation—all the regional banks have the circulating privilege—is 40 per cent of gold, while 35 per cent is required against deposits.

The letter reads:

Actual reserves:
Boston	77.6
New York	72.3
Philadelphia	63.7
Cleveland	66.4
Richmond	43.8
Atlanta	40.9
Chicago	59.9
St. Louis	53.9
Minneapolis	39.2
Kansas City	51.8
Dallas	42.4
San Francisco	62.1
Total average	63.5

Your attention is called to the fact that Richmond, Minneapolis, Atlanta, and Dallas are borrowing $61,427,000 from Boston, New York, and Cleveland.

The adjusted percentage for Atlanta is 39 per cent; for Minneapolis, 25.6 per cent; and for Dallas, 16.6 per cent. You will note, therefore, Dallas, without borrowing to keep up its reserve, only has 16.6 per cent.

There is attached a memorandum giving figures as to the gold reserves.

Senators will bear in mind that when we passed the Federal reserve act, we passed it creating 12 regions, and making each reserve bank in these regions a central bank, to accommodate the member banks in that district, and we had hoped that the whole system would operate automatically; that is, if there was a plethora of funds in a given district, and a lack of funds in another, that there would be almost an automatic flow from the high to the low to bring the average. It has not so operated.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. WARREN. When we provided for this distribution of 12 regional banks, instead of having one general Federal bank, the argument was exactly as the Senator has stated what its purpose should be; that is, that the member banks should be branches of one whole, and that the whole should operate for the whole of the United States, or wherever its territory extended, and it was expected that one would perhaps borrow from the other, or make some arrangements whereby the flow would be as if it were from one single bank.

Mr. SMITH. I recall, as the Senator has suggested, that under the so-called Aldrich plan the proposition was that we have one great central bank, and all the others subsidiary, and that the needs of any one would be met by the great parent institution, in accordance with the reserves and capital which the central bank held. But the other system prevailed, and now consists of 12 regional banks with a governing board here. The members of that board are bankers.

We have a condition in which four of the banks of the system are borrowers, three of them below the reserve, but borrowing from the balance of the system, while the whole system has what? This memorandum says:

There is attached a memorandum giving figures as to the gold reserve, as follows:

Figures as of Wednesday, July 27, 1921.

Federal reserve notes in circulation	$2,537,617,000
Reserve required, 40 per cent		$1,015,047,000
Total deposits	1,695,274,000
Reserve required, 35 per cent		593,346,000
Total required reserves		1,608,393,000
Reserves held:
Gold	2,531,231,000
Legal tender	154,065,000
Total		2,685,296,000
Excess reserves (free gold)		1,076,903,000

The amount of gold held by the 12 regional banks against which there are no outstanding reserve notes and no circulation, against which there is no kind of obligation, gold held in the vaults of these banks, is $1,076,000,000. Taking the 40 per cent that is required to secure outstanding circulation, there could be issued in the form of currency $2,300,000,000, in addition to what is already in circulation.

By this bill we are providing the machinery by which this enormous credit held in the entire system may be made available for the agricultural interests of the entire country, regardless of the condition of the regional bank of any particular district. We have provided in this legislation that the Federal reserve banks are authorized to accept the notes and bonds of this corporation as collateral and discount their paper, and they in turn can extend the necessary credit to the farmers of the different districts.

Richmond, Dallas, Minneapolis, and Atlanta, and the different banks which are now borrowers and which have exhausted their reserves, need not necessarily go to any of the Federal reserve banks. This corporation is authorized to take their paper and to finance them for a period of two years, with the privilege of renewal.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an inquiry?

Mr. SMITH. I will.

Mr. KING. The fact that there is so large a gold reserve, just adverted to by the Senator, does not have any particular relation, however, to the power to loan which is given by this bill to the War Finance Corporation, does it?

Mr. SMITH. Not at all.

Mr. KING. In other words, the gold supply controlled by the reserve is not essential to enable the War Finance Corporation to function, and function to the full extent contemplated by the bill?

Mr. SMITH. Not at all. But I was citing this to show that we have sufficient gold to increase our present circulation, within safety, to an amount in excess of $2,000,000,000, and still possess the legal requirement of 40 per cent. That is the point I was making.

Mr. President, I said a moment ago, in starting my remarks on this bill, that when this question of deflation and contraction of credit first arose the natural law asserted itself; that everything moves along the line of least resistance, and the man who was hit first and hit most disastrously was the man who could offer no resistance, the farmer of this country. I am not going to stand here and deal in generalities. I sent to the Department of Commerce and had them send me their monthly summary of foreign commerce in the United States for the month of June in order to get the official information in reference to what effect this disastrous condition had had upon commodities in the raw state and in the manufactured state. I want Senators to hear what has occurred.

From the monthly summary of foreign commerce for June may be gained an idea of the effect of the present condition on farm products as compared with articles manufactured from these products. On page 36 of this document is found the number of pounds of hides exported and the amount received for the fiscal years 1920 and 1921, and the number of boots and shoes exported for the same time; the prices received in 1920 for hides and the prices received in 1921 for hides, the prices for boots and shoes in 1920, and the prices for boots and shoes in 1921. These are the figures:

In 1921 we exported 24,000,000 pounds of hides, valued at $10,500,000, equal to 43 cents per pound.

In 1921 we exported 15,300,000 pounds, with a value of $2,800,000, equal to 20 cents per pound, a little less than half, a shrinkage on the part of hides of about one-half.

On page 45 of the same document it is stated that the total number of boots and shoes, expressed in pairs, in 1920 were 20,000,000, with a value of $78,000,000, equal to $3.90 per pair.

In 1921 there were 12,000,000 pair, valued at $44,000,000, equal to $3.60 per pair, the reduction in value being 30 cents per pair, $3.90 in the one case, $3.60 in the other, while raw hides had shrunk a little more than half.

On page 32 of the same document it is stated that the total amount of cotton exported in 1920 was 6,378,000 bales, valued at $1,378,000,000, equal to 20 cents per pound.

In 1921 we exported 5,357,000 bales of cotton, valued at $599,000,000, equal to 11 cents per pound, just a little more than half the value of the previous year.

Now, I will give the prices on the manufactured cloth: In 1920 we exported 867,000,000 yards of cloth, and I am quoting these figures from the same source, with a total value of $212,000,000, equal to 24 cents a yard, all cotton cloth.

In 1921 we exported 556,000,000 yards of cloth of the same kind, at a value of $141,000,000, or 24 cents per yard; so that in 1921 the price of our exported cloth was exactly the same as in 1920, according to the figures of the Department of Commerce, while the raw cotton had shrunk about 50 per cent.

I use hides and cotton, as they seem to be the most prominent, to show that those who were organized and had the reserves could protect themselves in the midst of this cataclysm, while men who were producing raw material and who did not have the reserves suffered to the full extent of the contraction and the deflation.

As I said, these commodities in their raw and manufactured form and the prices obtained give an idea of the condition in which the farmer finds himself. Other staple manufactured articles in this summary show that the prices have not materially declined during this period of depression, though there is evidence of some decline in the volume of exports. In reference to the amount of cotton exported this year and the probable amount to be carried into the next fiscal year, I asked the Department of Commerce, through the Bureau of the Census, to give me the official figures.

We are attempting by this legislation to relieve the situation in which the producers find themselves. What I have to say about cotton is because perhaps I am more intimately associated with and have a better knowledge of that product than I have of other farm products and the methods of their marketing. There has been a widespread discussion as to the probable supply of cotton. We are trying to open the markets. I asked the Department of Commerce to give me the probable supply of ordinary staple cotton, and the reply was as follows:

MY DEAR SENATOR: In compliance with your telephonic request, I take pleasure in furnishing the attached statement on the supply of cotton in the United States, exclusive of linters and foreign cotton, for the 11 months ending June 30, 1921; also statement showing the export of cotton, by countries to which exported, for the 11 months ending June 30, 1921.

Trusting that you may find these statements of service, I am,
Very truly, yours,

W. M. STEWART.

I wish now to give some figures as to the supply and distribution of cotton in the United States, exclusive of linters and foreign cotton for the 11 months ending June 30, 1921, in running bales:

Stocks held Aug. 1, 1920	3,280,000
Gained from crop of 1920	13,271,000
Total supply	16,551,000
Consumed during 11 months ending June 30	4,283,000
Exported during 11 months ending June 30	5,149,000
Total consumption and exports	9,432,000
Indicated stocks June 30, 1921	7,119,000
Estimated consumption and exports July (same as June)	930,000
Indicated stocks July 31	6,189,000

I pause here long enough to call attention to this very important fact in our efforts to help the farmer. In conjunction with our efforts to relieve him he is entitled to accurate statistics as to the condition of the supply and demand. All sorts of rumors have gone abroad as to the probable supply of American cotton for the fiscal year for cotton beginning August 1, 1921. Here is an official statement to the effect that if the consumption for July, which has already taken place and we need but to investigate the figures, shall be equal to that for June, there will be carried into the incoming crop not to exceed 6,000,000 bales. In that 6,000,000 bales are such grades of cotton as can not be used in ordinary commerce, ginned cotton, water-pack, and cotton that can not be used in commerce.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to his colleague?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. DIAL. May I ask my colleague if he has any information as to how much of that is tenderable cotton under contracts?

Mr. SMITH. I can state to my colleague that efforts are being made now to ascertain just how much of the present stock of American cotton is of a grade which can be used by the spindle, and it is an almost insuperable task to get the data for reasons that are very convincing when understood.

Mr. DIAL. Is it not true that by reason of the war certain countries could not import cotton from this country as they formerly did, and is it not a fact that a great deal of that cotton not exported is supposed to be off-grade cotton?

Mr. SMITH. That is true. There were certain countries that used this low-grade cotton and on account of the war they were unable to import it from this country, resulting in an alleged oversupply of an undesirable grade of cotton here; but there is not, according to these figures, in excess of 6,000,000 bales of available merchantable, spinable cotton in America to be carried into the next crop.

Only yesterday the Department of Agriculture sent out its report as to the growing crop condition, and gave it as 64.4, the lowest condition reported in the last 25 years, and with that is coupled a reduction of 28 per cent in acreage, and with the advent of the boll weevil over almost now the entire cotton belt, having covered my State this year for the first time in its history, and North Carolina being the only remaining State not affected. They estimate that the incoming cotton will not exceed 8,300,000 bales, so that the world supply of American cotton for 1921-22 will not exceed in its entirety 14,000,000 bales of cotton, when the normal consumption is between 13,500,000 and 14,000,000 bales.

Mr. DIAL. And the worst month has not yet come to pass.

Mr. SMITH. That is true.

Mr. FERNALD. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. SMITH. Certainly.

Mr. FERNALD. I wish to ask the Senator if he has observed the trend of the market to-day in cotton on the strength of the census report?

Mr. SMITH. I have not.

Mr. FERNALD. I am sure the Senator would be very much interested in that.

Mr. SMITH. They reported yesterday and the market responded, but it is doubtful whether there is more than the world can absorb within a reasonable time. It holds out the hope of a reviving market and we encourage them by the financial support we are giving them. What I am attempting to show is that the market is now far below the cost of production, while manufactured articles have remained about where they were during war times and the two or three years subsequent. I am trying to show that the condition of the law of supply and demand justifies the cotton producer in availing himself of all the opportunities we are extending through the War Finance Corporation to hold it himself until the law of supply and demand, governed by such help as we are giving now, will enable him to recoup some of the disasters that have been confronting him.

In connection with the exportation of only 5,000,000 bales as compared with 6,000,000 bales a year ago, though we are short a million bales, in round numbers, in the exports of this year, it is extremely interesting to note the countries to which we have exported and the volume they have taken. For instance, in 1920 we exported to Germany only 417,000 bales of cotton, while in 1921 we exported 1,084,000 bales of cotton. But that gain to Germany was lost in our exportation to the United Kingdom. We shipped to Great Britain or to the United Kingdom in 1920 3,000,000 bales, while in 1921 we shipped only 1,500,000 bales. But there is every reason to believe that the crisis in the world's condition has been reached and passed and that from now on the conditions will be more or less normal, and that those who are seeking the solution may from now on confidently expect a return to a normal condition.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. RANSDELL. I should like to have the Senator tell us whether he knows anything about the report published in the papers a few weeks ago to the effect that the carry over of cotton would be something like 10,500,000 bales instead of a fraction over 6,000,000 bales, as indicated in the actual figures furnished him by the Census Bureau.

Mr. SMITH. I made inquiry to know from what source emanated the report that there would be probably 10,000,000 bales of American cotton carried over, yesterday being the beginning of the cotton fiscal year, and they were unable to give me any information whatever. The papers had it, as the Senator from Louisiana will recall, that it emanated from one of the bureaus of the Government. This is the only bureau of the Government charged with the duty of giving out statistics as to the supply and distribution of cotton, and the figures which I have given are the official figures over the signature of the Director of the Census.

Mr. RANSDELL. Has the Senator made any effort to ascertain whether any other Government bureaus have given out any such figures as 10,500,000 bales, the giving out of which information I believe affected the market and brought the price down?

Mr. SMITH. I do not recall any other bureau. It was alleged that one bureau earlier in the year, or perhaps some time last year, had made an estimate of the probable carry over, but these are the official figures and are the only ones that have any right to go out from the Government.

Mr. RANSDELL. The figures which the Senator presents are the actual stocks up to the 30th of June of this year—June 30, 1921?

Mr. SMITH. Yes.

Mr. RANSDELL. The only estimate whatsoever is for the month of July past, and for that month they made it just the same as for June?

Mr. SMITH. Yes.

Mr. RANSDELL. So this must be very nearly correct?

Mr. SMITH. On the 14th of August the actual figures will be given out, and I was informed that this was not very far out of line.

Mr. President, I have certain amendments to the bill that I intend to offer when we come to the question of considering amendments to the bill. I have studied the bill in all its different sections. I look upon it as being the best aid that has been offered to the farmers of the country since we have been in session and since this crisis has been upon us. The only question that remains is, Will the War Finance Corporation meet faithfully the obligations imposed by the pending bill?

We give them first the power to open up foreign markets, and if an amendment that is now pending shall be incorporated in the bill, we give them the power to deal directly with foreign corporations. We do not think it wise under the present political condition existing in Europe to authorize and empower them to deal with governments and subdivisions of governments because there might arise complications that might embarrass us, and certainly would lead to no good if by the elimination of them and the substitution of corporations we can avoid that difficulty and serve the same purpose.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FERNALD in the chair). Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. SMITH. Certainly.

Mr. KELLOGG. The Senator knows, I believe, that even at the present time if any foreign Government desires to guarantee the purchase of cotton or any products, that guaranty is accepted by the War Finance Corporation, and can be so accepted.

Mr. SMITH. It can be accepted on the indorsement of private corporations. It was the judgment of the committee that we need not have the intervention under certain conditions of a domestic corporation to indorse this paper. We thought that the War Finance Corporation would have sufficient judgment to deal directly with the proper foreign corporation or individual, who might put up collateral sufficient to guarantee the repayment of whatever might be purchased. We not only have clothed them with the power to finance products for export and to deal directly with foreign corporations but we have empowered them to lend assistance to every legitimate organization in the country that is now assisting in solving the agricultural problem that confronts us.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. SMITH. Certainly.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Did it not have that power under the amendment adopted in March, 1919, and reenacted about six months ago when we passed a joint resolution reviving the War Finance Corporation?

Mr. SMITH. It has all the powers that it then had, save one, as to export. Under the law, not as it is proposed to be amended in the substitute, it had no power whatever to help finance the holding of purely domestic products, but they will have under the proposed amendment.

Mr. KELLOGG. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. KELLOGG. Under the original War Finance Corporation law aid could only be given in the case of exports, but this permits the corporation to aid in carrying products until they can be exported, which, of course, is just as necessary. That is why the bill was enlarged.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I desire to go on with the enumeration of the powers which we propose to confer upon the corporation. It may not only extend aid to all organizations in this country which are engaged in exporting, but it may also extend aid to those which are financing agricultural products in this country under the present stagnant condition of the market. We—and when I say “we” I mean the members of the subcommittee to whom were submitted the so-called Norris bill and the Kellogg substitute—did not think it wise, after going carefully over the matter, to authorize the War Finance Corporation to deal directly with persons, for the reason that anyone at a glance will see that the organization, composed of five or seven members, which is proposed to be invested with the power to meet a financial situation which is acute and distressing, would be required to have an army of employees to examine and pass on applications for individual credit from all the farmers of the country. Therefore, we thought we would best serve the farmers if we should restrict the power to those institutions which the farmers are already using, and which, under the present order of deflation and contraction, have been paralyzed in their efforts to help the farmer. So we propose to offer to amend the original committee amendment by substituting for persons or individual producers farm organizations, in addition to aiding exports assisting farmers to carry their products until the export trade may be rehabilitated.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. For what length of time is that permitted?

Mr. SMITH. For from two to five years.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I find a limitation of one year in section 22.

Mr. KELLOGG. That is as to the original credit, but the credit may be extended, I will say to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. SMITH. Yes.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The credit is for one year.

Mr. KELLOGG. I repeat, that is the original credit.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. In the original War Finance Corporation act, or at least in the amended act of last March credit may be extended for five years.

Mr. KELLOGG. That relates to issues of bonds.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. No.

Mr. SMITH. The Senator has reference to the issue of notes and bonds.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think not. It is provided in the act to which I have referred:

That the corporation shall be empowered and authorized, in order to promote commerce with foreign nations through the extension of credits, to make advances upon such terms, not inconsistent with the provisions of this section, as it may prescribe for periods not exceeding five years from the respective dates of such advances.

Mr. KELLOGG. That has not been changed at all, I will say to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Therefore this provision is less liberal than was the law as amended in 1919. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that cotton has been already carried for a year in this country and is almost at its lowest market price at this time, and here provision is made for carrying it only one year. I myself think it is a delusion and a snare. We have given the War Finance Corporation power and extended its power on several occasions, and yet nothing has happened.

Mr. SMITH. We now propose to give it the power to renew these obligations at its discretion.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think they have that power now. I think, furthermore, that the section to which the Senator referred a few moments ago, by which the corporation could use the agencies of the Federal reserve banks to extend credit, is another delusion and a snare.

Mr. SMITH. I call the attention of the Senator to page 4, section 23, of the committee substitute, which reads:

SEC. 23. Notwithstanding the limitation of section 1, the advances provided for by section 21 and section 22 of this act may be made until July 1, 1922. The corporation may from time to time extend the time of payment of any such advance or advances through renewals, substitution of new obligations, or otherwise, but the time for the payment of any advance made under authority of section 21 shall not be extended beyond five years from the date upon which such advance was originally made, and the time for the payment of any advance made under authority of section 22 shall not be extended beyond two years from the date upon which such advance was originally made.

So that ample provision is there made. We have given the authority to the War Finance Corporation to do the things which I have up to the present time enumerated. It remains to be seen whether or not they will discharge their duty as we have empowered them to do. We may rest assured that the farmers of the country—East, West, North, and South—will test this proposed law to the fullest, and we shall then know whether or not the War Finance Corporation has met the obligations which we have imposed upon them in this bill.

In addition to what I have called attention to we have empowered the corporation not only to aid through the member banks of the Federal reserve system, but we have authorized and empowered them to purchase paper from State banks where the State itself restricts the bank in its loaning power to a certain per cent of its capital and surplus. It is very evident that a State institution which is aiding farmers and has accepted farm paper up to the limitation that the law allows must stop, for even if the War Finance Corporation shall be willing to lend it still further money under the limitation of the State law it can not avail itself of a dollar; but if the War Finance Corporation will step in and purchase the paper outright it is then not a loan to the bank holding it, and the State bank can take the money that is derived from the sale of the paper for the purpose of further helping its customers.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President—

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. The Senator from South Carolina has stated that Congress is about to impose certain duties upon the War Finance Corporation. I call his attention to that part of the bill which seems to leave everything discretionary with the War Finance Corporation. There is nothing mandatory or compulsory about it so far as I can see. I shall be glad to hear from the Senator on that point.

Mr. SMITH. I am very glad to answer that question. The nature and kind of paper that might be offered, the condition of those offering it, the source from which it may come involve such considerations that it would be almost impossible for the Senate to be dogmatic about it. It is imperative that we should indicate what we want the War Finance Corporation to do and that they should do it as we want them to do it, but it is also essential that they should use their proper discretion as to the kind of security that may be offered. That is the reason why the measure has been framed as it appears in printed form.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Carolina yield to me for a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. KELLOGG. If the Senator from Georgia will permit me, the Norris bill simply authorized the corporation to take certain action. I think on close examination the Senator from Georgia will come to the conclusion that it would be an impossibility for Congress to designate exactly what advances shall be made and make it obligatory upon the corporation to make such advances. Somebody must decide the various questions involved, and about all that can be done is to empower the corporation to carry out the objects of the act. The Senator from South Carolina knows the personnel and the history of the War Finance Corporation, I think, perhaps as well as any Senator on this floor, and he knows what they have succeeded in doing. It seemed to me that Congress must simply authorize the corporation to act along the lines indicated, writing an authorization into the law, but could not possibly direct what they must do.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I appreciate fully what the Senator from Georgia feels and has reason to feel. We gave certain discretionary power to another source of relief; but, not intending to be harsh, in my opinion they did not use that discretionary power wisely. So far as my knowledge of the War Finance Corporation is concerned, I believe that, with the power reposed in them, they have already done more for the relief of the distressed condition of the agriculture interests of the country than any other organization we have had.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield further to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. If the Senator will allow me to be a little more explicit, I think perhaps he did not quite get my idea. Of course, the selection of the securities would necessarily be left to whoever advanced the money upon those securities; but the point I had in mind was this: The War Finance Corporation must decide, first, whether abnormal conditions exist that grow out of the war; and, second, whether or not the present banking facilities are sufficient to cope with the difficulties of that situation. Therefore there is one discretion heaped upon another. They would have to decide both of these questions in favor of those who desire loans, and there is not one word in the act that is compelling, so far as I can see.

Mr. SMITH. I recognize, Mr. President, that there is possibly some ground for criticism where we leave it discretionary with them to determine the conditions prevailing in the country, whether or not the assistance of the corporation is justified and whether or not the condition of the banks is such that relief should be afforded; but—

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. While on that subject will the Senator give me his views about the first sentence in section 24 as it occurs both in the Kellogg substitute and the McNary substitute? It reads as follows:

Whenever in the opinion of the board of directors of the corporation the public interest may require it, the corporation shall be authorized and empowered to make advances upon such terms not inconsistent with this act as it may determine to any bank, banker, or trust company in the United States which may have made advances for agricultural purposes, including the breeding, raising, fattening, and marketing of live stock.

Why limit that to banks which may have already made advances? Why should not banks that otherwise would not be able to make such advances and would make them in the future be included? What was the purpose of the author or of the committee in limiting that provision to banks which may have made advances already?

Mr. SMITH. Section 23, I think, covers that.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am not making a statement about the matter. I am just asking for information.

Mr. SMITH. I think it is very obvious that a bank that has not made any advances for agricultural purposes up until the present time either is not located in a district where they are required or is a bank that will not under any circumstances make advances. I think, and, in fact, I know, that the purpose and object of this is to aid those banks that are already loaded up with farm paper not for export, for you may notice that that section is not for export. It refers to things that are being held on account of the stagnated condition of the domestic market—that is, if they have made advances, and the market does not justify a sale, they can aid those banks—and I should like to say in this connection that I think that section might properly be amended by adding the words that we have added to the other section, "such associations."

Mr. KELLOGG rose.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I notice that the Senator from Minnesota is on his feet. Would the Senator object to his stating what was in his mind when this provision was drawn? I believe he was the author of it.

Mr. KELLOGG. If the Senator will yield—

Mr. SMITH. I shall be delighted.

Mr. KELLOGG. The original object of the War Finance Corporation act was to make new advances to people who wished to export. Then that was enlarged by a section providing for the making of new advances to people who were carrying products before they were exported; but it was represented to the committee, as I understand—and certainly the officers of the War Finance Corporation represented to me—that there was another condition in the country that was very burdensome. In many parts of the country the country banks are loaded up with paper, advances already made, on which they are unable to realize, and it restricts the business of that community; and it was thought wise that this corporation might aid in some cases in relieving those local banks of a situation of that kind, so that they would have what is called liquid capital or cash to make further advances and to carry on business in the ordinary way. In order to add to these powers, we thought it was wise to give them the added power of relieving banking institutions in the country which are now loaning to farmers and give them more credit or more money to use for that very purpose. That was the object.

Mr. McKELLAR. It seems to me that was excellent; but I was wondering why, in the discretion of the board, this credit might not be extended to other banks that had not made such advances, but that might well make them with this credit extended to them.

Mr. SMITH. I think it is obvious to the Senator that the purpose as set forth by the Senator from Minnesota covers the ground and the necessities of the case.

I want to state, Mr. President, that the subcommittee has certain amendments, which I am going to state now, so that they may be clearly understood.

On page 3, line 2, of the committee print, strike out the word "producing," and on the same line, after the word "products," insert "or to any association composed of persons engaged in producing such products."

So that we substitute, for the accommodation of the individual, farm organizations. We do not believe it is practicable, and I do not think Senators believe it is practicable, for the War Finance Corporation to finance the individual. He can utilize all of the already organized institutions of finance throughout his country and his organizations and have the situation relieved in that way.

Mr. RANDELL. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator if the words "to any person * * * dealing in or marketing any such products" would not include commission merchants, the people to whom the farmers usually send their cotton to be sold?

Mr. SMITH. Oh, to be sure.

Mr. RANDELL. They would be included in that term?

Mr. SMITH. They would be included in that term. This will include those who are now engaged in dealing in and marketing in any form these products.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Moses in the chair). Does the Chair understand that the Senator from South Carolina formally offers that as an amendment?

Mr. SMITH. No; I am just stating the amendments that I propose to offer when we come to consider the bill for amendment.

On page 3, line 3, after the word "person," insert "or association."

On page 3, line 6, after the words "not exceeding," insert the words "1½ per cent in excess of."

It becomes necessary, as a matter of course, without any further explanation, when we attempt to encourage bankers to take this paper to allow them a margin of profit in the rate of interest in order to induce them to take it.

The last amendment that I propose to offer when this bill shall come up for amendment is the one to which I have already adverted. On page 3, lines 10 and 11, after the words "any person," strike out the comma and the words "Government, or subdivision of Government," so that we will restrict it to the organizations.

Mr. RANDELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. RANDELL. The Senator seems to have explained this bill pretty fully and very clearly, I must say. I wish to ask him now if the committee amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNary], together with the suggested changes which he has just described to us, does not embody all the really essential features of the original Norris bill, and also the essential features of the Kellogg substitute, with some additions prepared by the committee?

Mr. SMITH. In answer to that question, of course, I can speak only for myself. I can let other members of the subcommittee speak for themselves. I think a careful study of the provisions of this proposed substitute, which is fundamentally the Kellogg substitute for the Norris bill, will show that it not only does the thing that the Norris bill attempted to do, but it infinitely widens the scope of what it was proposed to do in that bill, and provides more efficient machinery with which to do it. A critical study of the Norris bill will show that it was entirely too restricted and contracted to relieve the distressed condition in which agriculture found itself. This substitute proposes to meet the situation with an already going concern by enlarging its powers, and I believe with due modesty I may say that the subcommittee to which these two measures were referred has added some additional desirable features; so that this proposed substitute as now amended represents the very best in the Kellogg substitute and all and more than was asked in the Norris bill, with the splendid finishing touches of the subcommittee.

Mr. RANDELL. May I ask the Senator if the essential feature of the Norris bill was not to provide for the direct export of agricultural products to foreign countries, and if that is not in substance fully provided for by paragraph (b) of section 22 of the McNary amendment?

Mr. SMITH. We took from the Norris bill subdivision (b), which was the heart of the Norris bill, and we have modified that so that in its present form it contains all the excellences without the dangers of the Norris bill.

Mr. RANDELL. May I ask the Senator, further, if the weakness of the Norris bill—which, I want to say, I supported vigorously, with all the power there was in me—was not that it did not provide for any loans to those in this country who felt it absolutely necessary to hold their products until they could be marketed in a more orderly manner? It did provide for exporting the goods, but in case you could not export them there was no provision made for lending money on them; and that is the heart, and a mighty good heart, I will say, of the Kellogg substitute.

Mr. SMITH. As I have said—and it is necessary to repeat it to answer the Senator's question—this not only takes care of exports but it enables those who are producing stuff for export to market it in an orderly manner and to hold it until such an orderly manner can prevail and to render assistance to those who do not even export, namely, those who are engaged in live-stock production. That is an essential feature of our production and commerce, and it is suffering as acutely as, or perhaps more acutely than, any other form of our agricultural production in this country. Those who have taken the time to investigate the matter will find that the live-stock people have suffered as acutely as any other class. Their condition is more precarious than even the condition of the producers of certain staple agricultural products. Live stock is a perishable commodity, and those that are ready for market must be marketed or a loss is entailed at once. They can not be stored indefinitely or kept indefinitely, so that the relief to the live-stock producers must come at once, like the relief to the producers of certain perishable field products.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. SMITH. I do.

Mr. STANLEY. I note that the Senator from South Carolina says that he proposes to strike out, after the word "person," in line 10, page 3, the words "Government, or subdivision of Government." I am hopeful that that provision as written is sufficiently safeguarded by the further proviso that "in no case shall any of the money so advanced be expended without the United States," so as to render unnecessary the striking out of those words on account of this condition of affairs.

Certain products in this country are purchased only by Governments. There are 500,000,000 pounds of tobacco that can be purchased only by Governments. No individual purchases tobacco for Japan, or Spain, or Portugal, or Italy, or France; and if the Governments that are in the business of buying farm products under those regie contracts will give the proper collateral in this country, just as an individual would put up the proper collateral and insure the payment in this country so that you will not have to look to the Government but will look to the collateral, I see no reason why an advance should not be made to a government under those circumstances as well as to an individual or a bank.

Mr. SMITH. There is no reason to doubt that in the case of the regie contracts to which the Senator refers, where certain foreign Governments have assumed a monopoly of the purchase and distribution of tobacco, they, through their proper agents, can avail themselves of this clause just the same as they have heretofore.

Mr. STANLEY. They have not availed themselves of it heretofore.

Mr. McKELLAR and Mr. KELLOGG addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. SMITH. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the trouble is that those nations which the Senator from Kentucky has mentioned deal with tobacco only through their Governments. It is a government-controlled article, and the government makes money out of it. Unless some such provision is put in the bill, the greatest market we have for tobacco in Europe will be taken away from us to a large extent. If those Governments will put up the security necessary to repay the loan, what earthly objection can there be? I can understand why we would not want to look to the Government itself for the payment of claims, because we have a great many claims against those Governments now. But if those Governments put up the collateral to repay the debt, and all that is to be expended in this country, it seems to me that this could well be done without any danger of loss.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, there is nothing to prohibit a government from dealing with an American corporation if it desires to purchase the product and gets the O. K. of this corporation. It can deal just as they have been doing in the years past.

Mr. STANLEY. What I am driving at is this: I see no reason or force in this Government making a fictitious contract, a John Doe arrangement, where a government is the consignee, the purchaser, where the government is a tobacco merchant. No individual in those countries can buy or sell tobacco, and in some of them they can not raise it. The Government itself is the high contracting party. It acts as broker.

Mr. SMITH. There is nothing in this bill, even in the section under consideration, which prohibits that.

Mr. STANLEY. But the Senator from South Carolina said that they propose to strike out the words "Government or subdivision thereof."

Mr. SMITH. Yes.

Mr. STANLEY. I see no necessity for striking that language out.

Mr. SMITH. The reason why it was thought wise to do it was because it was brought to our attention that there are certain political conditions in Europe that make it essential for us to take those words out, because there are certain Governments we can not deal with, and if they come as Governments and offer certain securities, and we turn them down because we have reason to believe that it is not a safe loan, we will discriminate against one in favor of another, and we will have complications right away.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I would like to answer the Senator from Kentucky. There is nothing in the proposed law which prohibits any person or corporation in this country from dealing with any foreign Government and selling it anything, and taking any credit from any foreign Government it sees fit to take. I realize that in certain foreign countries tobacco is a Government monopoly, notably, in France; but there is nothing that will prohibit a tobacco dealer, whoever he may be, from selling to France, and if he wishes to take French bonds, or French credits, he can do it, as he always has done.

This simply provides that this Government corporation shall not, any more than the United States directly would, without the authority of Congress, extend further credit to foreign Governments. I do not believe we ought to extend credit to foreign Governments without the approval of Congress. It is a fact that with the exception of where foreign Governments have a monopoly, like the tobacco monopoly, as in France, where all the tobacco is bought by the Government, they do buy from our sellers, but, so far as anybody knows, the Government of France has never, and no Government has ever, asked American institutions to take Government bonds or Government credits. They pay cash, and, so far as we know, there is no necessity for them asking credit now. As I stated the other day, if the Senator will permit me—I do not want to take too much of his time—

Mr. SMITH. I am glad to have the Senator interrupt me.

Mr. KELLOGG. Outside of Poland, Austria, Hungary, and Germany, there is not a Government in the world to-day that is buying anything on credit as a Government, or has asked credit during the last year, and there is no probability that they will ask credit in buying anything. In fact, the Government buying in most of these countries has now been dispensed with, and Government restriction upon individual buying has been removed. Eighty-five per cent of our products go to countries other than the four I have named.

The question is whether the Congress—and it is for the Senate to decide—is to give a corporation of the Government a blanket power to extend credit to any Government in the world. Personally I am not in favor of it. I may be wrong. I do not believe we ought to do it. We have extended between ten and eleven billion dollars of credit now, and I have heard many Senators on this floor insisting that we should collect at once and collect our past-due interest. Why extend further credit?

It is also my opinion, from all I have been able to find out from the experts of the War Finance Corporation and the Treasury, that that provision authorizing the President, or, rather, this corporation—and I assume the corporation would not attempt to deal with foreign countries without the authority of the President—is unnecessary, and will add nothing whatever to our sales of American products. That is the opinion of the men I have talked with, and I value their judgment a good deal more than my own.

Another thing: It is a question whether we ought to authorize the President to extend credit to foreign Governments in view of the enormous credits owing us now from those same Governments. If it would accomplish anything I would be willing to waive my view on that subject; but personally I do not think it would amount to anything.

Mr. SMITH. I would just like to state to the Senator from Kentucky that this is one case in which there happens to be a government monopoly, but even that section, with the language "the government or subdivision thereof" stricken out, does not restrict them from using the ordinary methods now employed by the War Finance Corporation to finance exporters.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, I thoroughly understand that. I thoroughly understand that there is no disposition on the part of the Senator from South Carolina or the Senator from Minnesota to deprive tobacco growers of the right and of the opportunity, without reference to this bill, to sell their tobacco. In fact, they could not do it, because they could not pass a law impairing the obligation of contracts.

Mr. SMITH. I meant that the Governments themselves, of France, for instance, and those other Governments which have what are known as Government monopolies, can avail themselves of the credit of this corporation now, with those words stricken out, because the corporation now is taking Government securities as collateral, when indorsed by an American company.

Mr. STANLEY. The Government, through some agent, might go out and secure some sort of collateral in the form of merchantable paper that would do instead of its own obligations.

Mr. SMITH. They are authorized to take the Government obligations if they are indorsed by an American concern. They do it now. But that is if an American concern indorses them. They are still accepting the obligations of foreign Governments where they come through and are safeguarded by an American corporation which indorses them. In order to avoid this Government authorizing blanket trading with foreign Governments, we restrict the corporation itself to dealing with the individuals of foreign Governments, but we allow American individuals here, who will indorse foreign paper, to accept it, and we in turn accept that paper.

Mr. KELLOGG. I want to say another thing, if the Senator will permit me—

Mr. SMITH. Certainly.

Mr. KELLOGG. I wish to say to the Senator from Kentucky that this purchasing of food products and cotton and other products solely by foreign Governments, which quite likely was necessary during the war—we never questioned it, probably could not, but did not—which was extended for a long period after the war, is one of the worst things for the American producer and the American seller that has happened, because the purchasing power was placed in the Governments, and the Governments had one buyer, one interest, that came over here, where we had thousands of sellers, and those purchasing committees of foreign Governments have done more to hammer down the prices of wheat and cotton and other things than any other one thing, and I am glad the foreign Governments have at last abandoned that system.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, we received higher prices for cotton and wheat at that time than we are getting now.

Mr. KELLOGG. We received them, of course, during the war, when the demand was unlimited, and when we could get almost any price. But after the war, and within the last two years, and especially during the last year, there is not any question, from the information I have received, but that the purchases by foreign Governments have not been in the interests of the American producer.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, I am entirely inclined to agree with the Senator from Minnesota in this, that the purchase of American produce by a Government rather than by competing individuals is, under ordinary conditions, prejudicial to the American producer, for the reason that competition is practically eliminated by simple understandings between these Governments. But it does not matter, as far as this proposition is concerned, whether these Governments abstain from purchasing the coal or cotton or foodstuffs, or anything of that sort. Those things were handled during the war on account of war conditions. This product is handled at all times, on account of the enormous profit that the Government can make out of the use of a luxury like tobacco. It is just as if this Government, instead of prohibiting the manufacture and sale of alcoholic liquor, had provided that the Government should manufacture and sell all such alcoholic liquor—

Mr. SMITH. As South Carolina tried to do.

Mr. STANLEY. As South Carolina tried to do, and as some people hope she is still doing; and you could take 40 cents worth of grain and make 5 gallons of alcohol, and sell it for $10 a gallon.

At present you could take a dollar's worth of grain and make 5 gallons of alcohol, and if you had a tax of $10 a gallon you would get $50 worth of taxes to $1 expended.

I have not investigated this question lately, but at one time one-fifth of the French Government's revenue was derived from a tobacco monopoly, and they bought tobacco through combinations with the American Tobacco Co., the Imperial Tobacco Co., of Great Britain, and other contractors, for about 3 cents, and they were making about $3 a pound off the ultimate consumers. These Governments are bound to have this tobacco if they can raise the money, and they can give every character of security. A simple lien upon the tobacco, or an agreement to pay when the tobacco is turned into revenue, would insure the payment.

I have understood that the purchases of tobacco within the last year by the Italian Government have been limited on account of the necessities of that Government. I would not have tobacco turned over to the Italian Government or the French Government or any other Government upon inadequate security, but a Government can give just as good security as anyone else. There are none of the Balkan States that have a tobacco monopoly or that are going to be considered. Germany is an open market; all the Scandinavian States are open markets; the new Government of Czechoslovakia and other similar States are open markets.

We are not going to have trouble with reference to the tobacco situation, and I hope that upon mature consideration the Senator will leave the door wide open to the most distressed people in this country, with the possible exception of the cotton growers. Until very recently they have had that tobacco left for a year. In a colloquy with the Senator from North Carolina some months ago I found that three-fourths of this export tobacco had not been sold, and four-fifths of all the tobacco raised in western Tennessee and western Kentucky is export tobacco. I have been looking into the matter somewhat, and I believe it will be possible, by offering some encouragement to those Governments, to get them to increase their purchases now of a commodity that they can immediately turn into money.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Kentucky, if I may be permitted, whether he thinks that with the amount of money Italy owes the United States this Government should extend her additional credit and take her bonds in order to sell them anything?

Mr. STANLEY. Certainly not.

Mr. KELLOGG. That is all they can do. The Government of Italy has bonds and that is all, and we hold those now to the extent of several hundred million dollars.

Mr. STANLEY. I expect the Italian Government through its agents to put into the hands of the proper representatives of this Government adequate security.

Mr. KELLOGG. They can do that now.

Mr. SMITH. The very point I wish to call to the attention of the Senator from Kentucky is that the War Finance Corporation can now, through an American organization, accept the obligation of France if in their judgment it is good collateral. They can do it now.

Mr. STANLEY. They can get some bank to underwrite it.

Mr. SMITH. We have stricken out the word "Government." There might be an exception where the Governments have a monopoly, but they are unquestionably Governments whose security we do not care to authorize anyone to take just ad libitum to extend their credits. So we provided that in lieu of Governments and subdivisions of Governments, this corporation might treat directly with organizations within those Governments if the collateral in their judgment was good. There is nothing in it that prohibits them from continuing to do as they are now doing, accepting as collateral the obligations of foreign Governments.

Mr. STANLEY. May I put this proposition to the Senator? I talked with the head of the War Finance Corporation, who was in doubt whether it could be done. Suppose the Italian Government needs so many million pounds of tobacco. Three-fourths of that tobacco might be left in this country and one-fourth of it sold now, the rest of it to go out at a certain time, with the understanding that as the tobacco was sold the proceeds should be used in paying the rest of the obligation. There are many ways in which this could be done without advancing money to the foreign Government.

I believe we can secure liens upon the tobacco itself, and upon the obligations based upon the sale of the property that will render us amply secure. I would certainly leave the hands of the War Finance Corporation free in that respect. Nobody expects that the War Finance Corporation, organized as it is, with its predisposition in favor of doing business through the banks, is going to take Government bonds or other securities of that kind as the sole security for a debt, or that it is going to make any advance to that Government for the purpose of facilitating the sale.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me just a moment?

Mr. SMITH. Certainly.

Mr. WADSWORTH. My attention was attracted by a suggestion made by the Senator from Kentucky. I believe he suggested that in the event we authorized the War Finance Corporation to deal with foreign Governments and subdivisions of Governments and to make advances to them, we might take as security a lien on the tobacco which they purchased. I wonder if it has occurred to the Senator that that tobacco will have left the United States and will be distributed in Italy, for example, and sold to consumers there. How are we going to collect on a lien against that Government?

Mr. STANLEY. That is exactly what I was speaking about. I called attention to the fact that we could not follow the tobacco into the Italian Government; but those Governments make these purchases, say, of 25,000, 30,000, or 40,000 hogsheads at a time of a certain kind of tobacco. At one time the Italian Government was so anxious to get the tobacco that it gave a bond to purchase it at not less than 12 cents a pound, and the man who made the deal here purchased the tobacco for 3½ cents a pound. If a purchase of 30,000 hogsheads of tobacco were made by the Italian Government and three-fourths of it or four-fifths of it were kept within the jurisdiction of this Government until the greater part or a good part of the money was paid, and we could give them time to pay it, the tobacco in the course of a year could be converted as it was used, and they would not sell more than one-third of the tobacco before we would have our money back.

Mr. WADSWORTH. If they could not sell more than one-third of the tobacco and two-thirds of it were left in this country, where are they going to get the money to pay for all of it?

Mr. STANLEY. Because one-tenth of the tobacco when sold would bring under the Government monopoly enough to pay for the entire raw material. One dollar's worth of tobacco after it is manufactured and sold by a Government monopoly brings ten times or twenty times as much as tobacco does here.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Gross?

Mr. STANLEY. Yes.

Mr. SMITH. I am quite sure that the—

Mr. STANLEY. Right at that point let me interrupt again. What I mean is that they would not risk the loss of the tobacco in the warehouses here, and they would welcome any opportunity for any character of time in the purchase of it whatsoever, so I understand.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I am sure the Senator from Kentucky when he studies the provision thoroughly will see that the proposed amendment is an aid rather than a hindrance to the very object he has in view. But in passing, without comment, I wish to call the Senator's attention to a report of this summary of foreign exports which surprised me very greatly in reference to tobacco.

I happen to be in the very midst of the bright-leaf producing section of the Carolinas, where the market opened on the 19th of July. What are popularly known as sand lugs, the first leaves taken from the stalk and cured in the flue barn, which brought from 8 to 15 or 20 cents a pound a year ago, this year were thrown away. The producers were informed by the tobacco purchasers that they need not bring that quality of tobacco to market. Seconds brought such a price as to not pay for what they called the stringing, where the tobacco is tied to a little stick and hung up in the barns for curing under artificial heat.

I was informed that one producer right in the heart of this section, who produced perhaps the finest crop that he has ever produced, both in quality of the tobacco and in the matter of the curing, had something like 2,500 pounds which the year previous and the year before that had brought something in the neighborhood of 75 cents to $1 a pound, but this year he got $125 for the 2,500 pounds. My home papers are full of protests about the present price of tobacco and the indifference of the purchasers. I have in my desk in my office telegrams now from certain warehouses and auction houses, where the farmers bring their tobacco to have it sold, asking if I can not induce certain great tobacco dealers, such as Liggett & Myers and the Imperial Co., to send their buyers down to help out the distressing situation. I was informed upon investigation that the world has perhaps a two years' stock of tobacco on hand, and that therefore what was purchased would be purchased with that knowledge, and with the further knowledge that it must be carried over, and that the price therefore did not justify them in going into the market.

I picked up this summary of exports to see just to what disastrous depths leaf tobacco or unmanufactured tobacco had fallen by virtue of this alleged surplus on the market. That leaf tobacco is bought by exporters in the warehouses and auction houses in Kentucky just as it is in the Carolinas, I have no doubt. I desire to read these figures.

Unmanufactured tobacco in the leaf, in 1920, a year ago, was exported to the extent of 632,000,000 pounds, in round numbers, for which we received $271,000,000. Last year we exported 496,000,000 pounds and received $237,000,000. We got more per pound for the leaf tobacco which we exported up to June 1 of this year than we got for that which was exported in 1920.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, there is a confusion of ideas about tobacco. People generally have the impression that tobacco is like corn or wheat or wool; that leaf tobacco is leaf tobacco.

There is no more relation between the market conditions that control and prevail in the sale of Sumatra leaf and cigar wrapper, in the sale of the light Carolina tobacco that is used for cigarettes and for plug tobacco and white Burley, and the sale of the dark export tobacco than there is between the sale of rye or corn or wheat. One may be high and the other may be low. They are purchased in different markets; they serve a different purpose; and they are governed by entirely different industrial and financial conditions.

The price of Sumatra leaf will depend on the conditions that prevail in Connecticut, where the leaf is grown under cover, and upon conditions in Cuba and Sumatra. The light cigarette tobaccos and the Carolina tobaccos and the Burley tobaccos depend for their price upon the demands of the American Tobacco Co. and upon the local trade. For instance, take the dark, thick, porous leaf that is produced in western Tennessee and western Kentucky, and it is comparatively worthless as a cover for plug tobacco. The minute it is put under pressure it turns perfectly black. It is necessary to use a light Burley or Carolina tobacco for covers.

On the other hand, the same Burley tobacco, which usually brings a much higher price than the Pryor or green wrapper or English strip, would find no market abroad, for the reason that there is an initial duty, or there formerly was, of about 65 cents a pound on all tobacco that went into the King's warehouse, and the tobacco has to go in there with about 12 per cent of moisture. The tobacco which we raise will absorb 50 or 60 per cent of moisture. It is a porous tobacco and will absorb great quantities of licorice and water. The purchasers of such tobacco, after they purchase it, allow it to absorb, in many instances, the maximum of moisture where that matter is not regulated by law. The same power, to absorb moisture affects the value of the regie tobaccos.

The tobacco which the Italian uses, the tobacco which the Austrian uses, the tobacco which the Frenchman uses, and the snuff tobacco are produced in certain sections, and can not be produced in other sections. As articles of commerce they are just as different from the Carolina tobacco as silk is different from wool. The conditions which prevail in one market are not indicative of the conditions that prevail in another market. The price of export tobacco is dependent absolutely upon the foreign market. I have known such tobaccos to sell for 3½ cents a pound when the Burley tobaccos were selling for 8 cents a pound and the Carolina tobacco was selling for 10 or 12 cents.

It may easily happen if the foreign demand should increase that the Pryor, the dark export tobaccos, might bring a handsome price, while the light tobaccos might be a drug on the market, in the event the American Tobacco Co. had more than it needed or pretended that it had more than it needed, for it is the buyer in this country.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I have occupied the floor for a longer time than I had expected. I do not think there is a Member of the Senate but believes there is a possibility of relief to the distressed condition of agriculture in the provisions of the pending bill. I wish to say in closing—and with this I am going to leave the subject and have no more to say until we come to the question of the passage of the measure—that I do not believe that the enlargement of the powers of the War Finance Corporation would have been necessary had it not been for the very unfortunate attitude of those in charge of our Federal reserve system. I believe had they met the situation as the law intended it should be met, had they fully realized the disaster that would come from their unfortunate attitude toward contraction and deflation, had they realized that being on the peak, we had to come down gradually rather than to be precipitated to the foot of the peak, this condition would not have existed. In my opinion, the responsibility originally lies there; but the responsibility also lies with us to remedy the situation as effectually and as soon as we may. I believe that a study of the bulletin which I hold in my hand will convince every Senator of the contention that I have heretofore made, that the manufacturers are in a position where, in any event, they can more or less take care of themselves when there comes a disaster so sweeping and terrible as that which at present confronts the Nation; but as to the farmers, who are practically without resources—with a greater percentage of our population now being urban, not producing, and unfortunately not seeming to care as to the condition of the producer—it is more than ever our duty to see to it that those who support this Government by supplying its food and its clothing shall be our first consideration, and that they shall not be allowed to become the victims of unfortunate conditions. It is for that reason that I am standing here pleading for this additional aid to them. I trust that every Senator on the floor will support the committee substitute.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I desire to offer two amendments to the so-called McNary substitute, and I should like to have them read, printed, and lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendments.

The READING CLERK. On page 3, in line 23, it is proposed to strike out the period after the words "set forth" and insert:

Also for advances made to any producer for the purpose set forth in paragraph (a) upon notes, drafts, bills of exchange, or other instruments of indebtedness secured by chattel mortgages, warehouse receipts, bills of lading, or other instruments in writing conveying or securing marketable title to staple agricultural products, including live stock.

Also, on page 5, in line 22, it is proposed to strike out the words "in exceptional cases."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments will be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. TRAMMELL addressed the Senate, and after having spoken for three-quarters of an hour said:

Mr. President, it is getting rather late, and if there is a desire to take a recess or adjourn and I can have the floor upon convening to-morrow I shall be glad to yield for that purpose or to have an executive session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No guaranty of that sort can be made, the Chair will state to the Senator, but he can undoubtedly obtain the floor to resume his speech upon reassembling to-morrow.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Of course, I realize that no guaranty can be given, but I have observed that in a great many instances Senators have yielded the floor for the purpose of recessing or adjourning and obtained the floor the next morning.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I suggest that we recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow, so that we shall have ample time for speeches to-morrow.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I will finish my remarks in 15 or 20 minutes to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the agreement yesterday afternoon the Chair asks unanimous consent to lay before the Senate sundry bills and a concurrent resolution from the House of Representatives. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

JOINT COMMISSION OF AGRICULTURAL INQUIRY.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 26) of the House of Representatives, which was read:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring). That the time for the completion of the investigation by the Joint Commission of Agricultural Inquiry, created by Senate concurrent resolution No. 4, of the present session, and the filing of the report to Congress therein directed to be made, be, and the same is hereby, extended to a date not later than the first Monday in January, 1922.

Mr. McNARY. I move that the Senate concur in the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senate give its consent to concurring in the resolution just laid before the Senate from the House of Representatives?

Mr. KENYON. Does it require unanimous consent?

Mr. CURTIS. I do not think under the agreement it can be done without unanimous consent. I hope the Senator from Oregon will let it lie on the table until to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. KENYON. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made, and the concurrent resolution will lie on the table.

RECESS.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 3 minutes p. m.), the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Wednesday, August 3, 1921, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, August 2, 1921.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon and was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore, Mr. TOWNER.

The chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, continue to fit us for the world in which we dwell. Redeem our lives from that which is menial and give larger freedom to our best gifts. Quicken us for the labors that await us and make our mornings and our evenings bring to us a satisfaction of work well done. Raise us to a plane where the losses and the crosses of life are exalted and where the beatitude of our Heavenly Father rests upon us. Through Christ. Amen.

THE JOURNAL.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to correct the Journal. Roll call No. 107, as disclosed by the Record of yesterday, August 1, 1921, on page 4503, shows—yeas 160, nays 59. On the first column of the next page the Record discloses that the Speaker pro tempore announced that the yeas were 150 and the nays 54. At the top of the next page the Speaker in finally stating the vote stated that the yeas were 159 and the nays 58. By which one of these contradictory assertions is the Journal going? All three of them are different, and the Record and the Journal should state the correct one.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas called a similar instance to the attention of the present occupant of the chair once before. The explanation is that the Chair states viva voce the announcement as given to him at the time by the clerks. Afterwards in a recapitulation of the vote the clerks sometimes modify that statement. Of course, it is immaterial unless it changes the result. The Chair thinks it is unnecessary to go any further.

Mr. BLANTON. I call the Chair's attention to the fact that in this particular instance the vote ought to be easily ascertained correctly, because the Chair will remember that we waited a long time until Member after Member came in, who separately were added to the count, until we finally succeeded in getting a quorum. Just as soon as we did get a quorum the vote was announced. The correct number voting should be easily ascertained with respect to this vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In this particular instance after the Chair had announced the vote, certain Members appeared and their names were recorded. Without objection the Journal as read will be approved.

There was no objection.

THE PACKERS' BILL—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I submit a conference report upon the bill H. R. 6320, to regulate interstate and foreign commerce in live stock, live-stock products, dairy products, poultry, poultry products, and eggs, and for other purposes, for printing under the rules.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Iowa yield?

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Is that a complete report?

Mr. HAUGEN. It is.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. A unanimous report?

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes. It was signed by all except one Senator, who is indisposed.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Can the gentleman inform the House when it is his purpose to call the matter up for consideration?

Mr. HAUGEN. Whenever it suits the convenience of the House, probably on Thursday.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Does the House act upon it first, or the Senate?

Mr. HAUGEN. The Senate acts first.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6611) to establish in the Treasury Department a veterans' bureau and to improve the facilities and service of such bureau and further to amend and modify the war risk insurance act.

CORRECTION.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, yesterday the House passed a bill changing the period for doing assessment work on mining claims, being the bill H. R. 4813, the title reading to change the period for doing annual assessment work on unpatented mineral land claims from the calendar year to the fiscal year ending June 30, each year. In the House the bill was amended to make the period begin at noon of July 1, and I ask unanimous consent that the enrolling and engrossing clerk be authorized to amend the title to conform to the text of the bill, the bill not having yet been printed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arizona. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none and it is so ordered.

AMENDING THE FEDERAL FARM LOAN ACT.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I submit a privileged report from the Committee on Rules which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 166.

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of S. 1811, being a bill to amend the Federal farm loan act as amended. There shall be two hours of general debate, to be divided equally between those for and those opposing the bill. At the conclusion of general debate the bill shall be read for amendment under the five-minute rule, whereupon the bill shall be reported to the House with the amendments, if any, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and all amendments to final passage, without intervening motions, except one motion to recommit.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, before the gentleman from Kansas begins, will he permit me to ask the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SWEET] a question?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Certainly.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. What has become of the conference report upon the disabled soldiers bill?

Mr. SWEET. It is pending a message from the Senate.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, the effect of this rule is to bring before the House for consideration the bill reported by the Committee on Banking and Currency, providing that bonds of the farm loan banks and the joint-stock banks may be placed on the market at 5½ per cent instead of 5 per cent, this without increasing the rate of interest to the borrower. The banks are permitted to-day to take 6 per cent from the borrower, and they give 5 per cent to the lender. This bill will effect a 6 per cent loan to the borrower and 5½ per cent to the lender, giving the banks who are the agents between the borrower and the lender one-half of 1 per cent instead of 1 per cent provided in the act as it is.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. Do I understand the gentleman to say that the bill limits the power of the lender to 6 per cent but authorizes him to issue his bonds at 5½ per cent, while under the present law he is authorized to issue them at 5 per cent and still would limit him to 6 per cent?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. So that the money to the farmer will come to him at the same price it comes now?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Exactly.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. KINCHELOE. The effect of this amendment and the only effect of it is that instead of giving 1 per cent profit to the banks, it will provide one-half of 1 per cent profit to the banks, and the farmer will not have to pay any more.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The farmer will have to pay no more under this amendment than he pays at the present time. Six per cent is the amount fixed in the act to the borrower, and this does not change that provision.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I will yield.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Is it understood that this half per cent margin will take care of all the overhead expense?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. With the volume of business now done by these banks one-half of 1 per cent should be more than ample to take care of the expenses.

Mr. TREADWAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. TREADWAY. What effect is this likely to have on the outstanding bonds? Will it not have the effect of depreciating the value of those in the hands of the holders at the present time?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. No; it is not thought that that will be the effect of it. The Secretary of the Treasury, in favoring the bill, does not believe that that will be the effect of it. At the present time, if the rate of interest is calculated on the average bonds at their market price to-day, together with the rate of 5½ per cent on these, it will be ascertained this will bring up the average of the farm-loan banks and the joint-stock banks to about the average rate of interest to the holder of the Government bonds that are now outstanding. They sell below par. These bonds are not sold except at par, as I understand the practice of the banks.

Mr. TREADWAY. So the gentleman does not think this will have any effect on the market value of the present outstanding farm-loan bonds?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. It is not thought it will. The Treasury Department is now putting out certificates at 5½ per cent for three years, and this bill limits the sale of these bonds at 5½ per cent to a two-year period.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman permit a suggestion on that very point?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. These bonds are not out in very large volume. They are very closely held, and for that reason they will not be affected. The United States Treasury holds one hundred and eighty and odd million, and the syndicate that has been taking them holds them very closely; so, as a matter of fact, there is no big supply on the market like other great bond issues.

Mr. TREADWAY. Is not that because they are such desirable bonds? They are exempt from all taxation and carry 5 and 6 per cent interest, and you are trying to raise them a half per cent more to make them still more desirable. I see the report states—

It is strongly represented to your committee that under existing conditions said bonds are not easily marketed.

May I ask if there are any bonds easily marketed to-day?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. May I state—

Mr. WINGO. I may get some time, and I will try to give my idea of it.

Mr. LAZARO. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Not just now. The condition confronting these banks now is this: They can not market these bonds at all. They can not get money from the lender for the borrower; so it is necessary to raise the rate of interest to the lender in order to get anything for the borrower at all. The borrower gets it at the same rate as though the lender only got 5 per cent instead of 5½ per cent, and the amount of business transacted in these bonds is very inconsequential in comparison with the volume of the outstanding bonds of the Treasury and the certificates that are now being issued by the Treasury, and it will have no appreciable effect at all upon this matter, but will enable these banks to give relief in certain places where it is impossible to float bonds and get money at all. Now I will yield to the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. LAZARO. I want to ask the gentleman this question for information: In view of the fact business is unsettled, why not give them authority to fix a rate not higher than 5½ per cent and leave it to those who have these bonds in charge to do the best they can for the Government?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. This is not a Government transaction.

Mr. LAZARO. I mean for the banks.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Those who had the matter in charge thought it wise to bring the matter in in this way. We have dealt within rigid limitations with these banks, and it was not thought proper to give them that leeway.

Mr. TINCHER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I will.

Mr. TINCHER. The bill does not place any limitation that they shall be 5½ per cent?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. No; they may be 5 per cent or they may be 5½ per cent, or 4½ per cent, if they can find a market at that price.

Mr. TINCHER. Or they can sell at 4 per cent. Another point I wanted to ask of my colleague. I notice in the gentleman's statement he said the joint-stock banks, and this, of course, applies to the farm loan banks?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. It applies to both.

Mr. TINCHER. There is no use in trying to give power to the joint-stock banks and not give it to the Federal farm loan banks, because that would be a discrimination.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Of course, that is true, but this applies to both the joint-stock and the farm-loan banks.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I will.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Is it the hope of the committee that in the passage of this bill it will add impetus to farm loan banks so that they may loan to a greater number of farmers and thereby a bigger volume of business be done in that way?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. It is hoped this may be done. It is true all over the country, as everybody knows, there is much financial distress among the farmers. That is true as to the cotton planter, true as to the stock raiser, and true as to the wheat grower.

They have been subjected to great losses; they have been unable to get money at rates of interest that will not be absolutely ruinous to them even if they had the disposition to pay them. And it is thought that this will afford an avenue of relief that is absolutely necessary in many parts of the country.

Mr. ROSE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I yield.

Mr. ROSE. What effect would this amendment have upon the sale of municipal or industrial bonds?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Oh, no effect at all, because they are so small an amount in comparison with the municipal bonds, and the purchasers upon the market for municipal bonds will not bother about them. This is to apply in an emergency that will afford the relief in certain parts of the country.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the remainder of my time and yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU].

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, the rule should be adopted without division, because amendment to existing law is necessary in order that the farm loan act should carry out the purpose for which it was enacted. A curious condition exists, namely, that while commodities of almost every kind are declining in value interest rates to the farmers have been increasing. I believe it was Lord Coke who said that the ingenuity of man had never devised a way whereby the usury law could be successfully evaded. If that eminent jurist were living in this day and time, he would probably decide to modify that statement, if it were he who made it, because numerous and sundry ways have been devised whereby the farmer in order to get money must pay more than the legal rate of interest.

Now, Mr. Speaker, so far as the minority on the Rules Committee is concerned, we are heartily in favor of the adoption of this rule and also of the bill.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I believe that one of the chief causes for the high rates of money to the farmer is the high existing rates of income tax, and I hope that the Ways and Means Committee will have the courage to reduce the income-tax rates all down the line. It is not in harmony with the spirit of this Republic of ours to take 60 per cent of any man's income. Such tax rate can only be defended as a war emergency measure—and the war ended nearly three years ago. The result is money has been driven out of its natural channels into investments which are nontaxable. The result is also to kill individual initiative. Even during these hot days of August the country is anxiously awaiting the action by the Ways and Means Committee. Of course, this amendment to the Federal farm loan act is going to help some, but the eye of the country is focused upon the Ways and Means Committee in the hope that something may be done to relieve conditions which are far more distressing than some of us realize. Money is not scarce in America. The per capita amount of money in circulation has not very materially decreased. There is in existence plenty of money for every legitimate purpose, and yet men are leaving the farm because interest rates are so high. In some States men engaged in the great noble occupation of producing food have been driven to desperation, and yet we have just passed through the most prosperous period in the history of this Nation.

Here is opportunity for courageous, speedy action. The taking of so large a part of the income of the citizen during time of peace is near socialistic, to say the least. Let me conclude by saying this: While the Ways and Means Committee is preparing your tax bill, for goodness' sake do not forget to simplify the making out of the income-tax return.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote on the resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill S. 1811 under the rule.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering a bill which has been reported.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield pending that motion?

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. May I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania if he is in favor of or against the bill?

Mr. McFADDEN. I voted against the bill in committee.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Then the gentleman will take the time in opposition to the bill?

Mr. McFADDEN. I will.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. And the gentleman from Arkansas will be entitled to time in favor of the bill?

Mr. WINGO. I do not know whether or not that is the assurance we have. The agreement we had seems to have fallen down. What is the gentleman's intention in reference to that?

Mr. KING. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. Yes, sir.

Mr. KING. I think, while there was no special arrangement, Mr. Speaker, it was tentatively understood that the chairman should allot the time for and against, although it was the intention on the part of the gentleman from Arkansas and one or two other gentlemen to ask the Rules Committee to modify the rule. I was never asked in regard to that, and it seemed to me it was proper that the chairman could assign the time for and against.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is the gentleman from Illinois opposed to the bill?

Mr. KING. No, sir.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, if the chairman will permit me, the agreement was that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KING] should control one-half of the time and I should control one-half, under the gentleman's agreement we had with the gentleman from Pennsylvania that he would see that those opposed would be given half of the time. That agreement was not presented to the Rules Committee. I am not criticizing anybody—

Mr. McFADDEN. I will say to the gentleman that it was entirely agreeable to the chairman to make that agreement, or some other gentleman may do that.

Mr. WINGO. I am not complaining, but he referred to the agreement, and I should not have raised the question—

Mr. McFADDEN. In view of that I ask unanimous consent that the time be controlled one-half by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KING], who is in favor of the bill, and the balance of the time be controlled by some gentleman in opposition to the bill.

Mr. WINGO. That is exactly where the rule is; that is the rule.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. If the gentleman will permit me, I will make a unanimous-consent request. Will the gentleman permit me to make such a request as to control of the time?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that debate in favor of the bill be controlled one-half by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KING] and one-half by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO], and the time in opposition to the bill be controlled by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McFADDEN].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asks unanimous consent that the time be divided between the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KING] and the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO], each to control one-half of the time. Is there objection?

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, that is not the request.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do not want to be put in that light. The gentleman from Tennessee will bear me out that he made the suggestion without any suggestion from me. If the original agreement is not carried out, I personally would prefer to stand on the rule. I am not complaining myself.

Mr. MANN. That would give the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KING] control of the time in favor of the bill and the gentleman from Pennsylvania control of the time in opposition to the bill. It does not seem to me that that is fair to the other side.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman from Illinois does not understand the agreement, that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KING] and I should control half of the time. Under the assurance of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, all that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KING] and myself had to do was to see that those who were opposed should be given an equal division of time. In other words, we were going to divide the time on party lines, with the understanding that it should be actually used half for and half against. But I am not insisting upon it. I do not, myself, care at all about it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. I do not think the Chair stated the unanimous-consent proposal properly, perhaps, as it was stated by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. Will the gentleman from Illinois submit his unanimous-consent request again?

Mr. MANN. That the time in favor of the bill be controlled one half by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KING] and the other half by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO], and the time in opposition to the bill be controlled by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McFADDEN].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SANDERS] will please take the Chair.

Thereupon, the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (S. 1811) to amend the Federal farm loan act, as amended, with Mr. SANDERS of Indiana in the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union has under consideration the Senate bill, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the first paragraph of section 20 of the Federal farm loan act, as amended, be, and hereby is, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 20. That bonds provided for in this act shall be issued in denominations of $40, $100, $500, $1,000, and such larger denominations as the Federal Farm Loan Board may authorize; they shall run for specified minimum and maximum periods, subject to payment and retirement, at the option of the land bank, at any time after the minimum period specified in the bonds, which shall not be longer than 10 years from the date of their issue. They shall have interest coupons attached, payable semiannually, and shall be issued in series of not less than $50,000, the amount and terms to be fixed by the Federal Farm Loan Board. They shall bear a rate of interest not to exceed 5½ per cent per annum."

With a committee amendment, as follows:

Page 2, line 6, after the word "annum" insert "but no bonds issued or sold after June 30, 1923, shall bear a rate of interest to exceed 5 per cent per annum."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KING] is recognized.

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to take up any great amount of time, not more than four or five minutes, in explaining in a general way the purposes of this bill.

The present section of the farm loan act, which is amended by this bill now under consideration, provides for the issuance of bonds both by the Federal farm loan banks and by the joint-stock land banks. This bill passed the Senate about the 9th of June, with the following amendment:

They shall bear a rate of interest not to exceed 5½ per cent per annum.

The bonds heretofore have been drawing 5 per cent, but it has been found—and it is the statement found in the evidence submitted to the committee—that it is practically an impossibility for these banks, especially the joint-stock land banks, to sell their bonds at 5 per cent.

You will understand that they do a business on a margin of 1 per cent, the difference between 5 per cent and 6 per cent, the amount of interest which they receive from the borrower. These banks are willing, and have stated before the committee and to members of the committee privately that they are willing, to get along on one-half per cent for the good of the country at the present time and for the purpose of assisting in putting agriculture upon its feet and for the further purpose of helping the banks—the small banks, particularly—of the West, the Northwest, and the South and other sections of the country, helping them out of a very embarrassing situation.

The House committee will present an amendment to this bill providing that no bonds issued or sold after June 30, 1923, shall bear a rate of interest to exceed 5 per cent per annum. That shows the temporary character of the legislation, and it is an amendment which was suggested by Mr. Mellon, the Secretary of the Treasury, in connection with the chairman of your committee, and it was adopted by the committee, and, of course, will be presented to the House.

There are two branches of the farm loan system; one of them, the joint-stock land banks, I have just discussed. The other branch of the system consists of 12 Federal land banks and about 4,000 local national farm loan associations. These constitute the cooperative features of the system and up to this time represent the larger activities of the system.

The bill under discussion, while more directly concerning the activities of the joint-stock land banks, may have an important bearing upon the operations of the Federal land banks. The sale of farm loan bonds constitutes the process by which money is obtained with which to make loans to the farmers. The rate which the farm loan bonds bear is an important factor in their sale. The last issue of farm loan bonds bore a 5 per cent rate. These were offered in April of this year in an amount of $40,000,000 and the entire offering has been absorbed.

Representatives of the Farm Loan Board, in favoring the passage of the pending measure, made it very plain that the passage of the bill was not sought because the board did not believe it possible within the next 60 days to sell a 5 per cent farm loan bond, but favored the passage of the bill upon the ground that bond-market conditions for the past 12 months or more had been so erratic and uncertain as that it was impossible for human intelligence to foresee what the market conditions might be 60 days ahead, and it was to be prepared to meet any undue dullness in the market when the next issue of bonds is offered that the board favored this measure.

The fact that we are increasing the permissive rate these bonds may bear from 5 to 5½ per cent must not be taken to mean that the next issue of bonds will bear the maximum permissive rate, or even a higher rate than is now permitted—that is, 5 per cent. This was clearly and very emphatically brought to the attention of the committee by our former colleague from South Carolina, Mr. Lever, now a member of the Farm Loan Board, who pointed out that a 4½ per cent farm loan bond was sold a few years ago, when conditions were more normal than now, with a 5 per cent permissible existing rate, and that it did not follow that because there was an increase in the rate any future issue of bonds should bear a higher rate than the present permissible rate. He made it very distinct, and others of his colleagues did so, that the rate upon the bonds in the future would be determined by the market conditions at the time of the issue of bonds. Mr. Lever did emphasize, properly I think, that it was the duty of the system to function, especially in these times of agricultural stress, and that to make sure it would function was the only reason for his advocacy of this measure. In other words, the import of Mr. Lever's statement was that he favored the passage of this bill not because he felt it absolutely necessary to insure the functioning of the Federal land banks, but because he was unwilling to be unprepared to meet the contingencies of an erratic and uncertain bond market.

Now, I do not want to dwell at any great length on the unfortunate position which the farmer and the producer in this country occupy at the present time. Something has happened to the farmer. Something has happened to the value of his crop and of his horses and his cattle. I have an idea—I may be wrong—that I know what it is, but for fear that some one would suggest that I was going to attack the Federal Reserve Board again I will say nothing about it. But there has been a deflation of the farmer's credit and the value of his crop has been reduced, and thousands of banks in the Middle West and banks farther to the West and North and South are to-day holding the notes of farmers that are perfectly good, but they can not realize upon them because the farmer has not the crop upon which he can realize enough money to pay his notes at the bank.

Now, the purpose of this legislation is that if this power is given to the joint-stock land banks they will be able to function and sell to the country at least $20,000,000 worth of those bonds, which can be in turn loaned to farmers. That will be only a drop in the bucket relatively, but it will do that much to aid the situation.

It has been stated that these bonds, on account of their tax-exemption feature, are sold to rich men for the purpose of dodging taxes, but the fact is that they are sold chiefly to small investors, and the last $40,000,000 worth of Federal land bank bonds, sold about two months ago, were sold to small investors, making a fine and gilt-edged investment for anyone who has a small amount of money to put away.

There are a number of very distressing cases existing, and if this relief is not granted, so that these banks can operate, you will see, in the next 30 days, a number of banks in the Middle West—I am afraid to say this, but I believe it is true—going to the wall; so that while you are extending this relief to the agricultural interests and making it possible for these banks to function, and making it possible for the farmer to get the money, you are at the same time helping out not only the farmers but the banks.

Now, another thing: The evidence before the committee shows that there are thousands of cases where insurance companies and institutions that have been formerly loaning money upon farm land are failing to renew their loans to the farmers, and the consequence is that the farmer has got to get his money somewhere else. If he can not get his money somewhere else his mortgage is foreclosed and he loses his farm. What does he do? When he can he goes to his neighbors and gets from one and another here and there enough money until he gets $10,000, or whatever it is. What do his neighbors do? They go to this and that and the other little bank and draw out their savings. The result of that is that it depletes the deposits in the banks, so that the banks are unable to accommodate their regular customers. So the whole thing is all dovetailed together, and by enabling these banks to function and to turn loose this amount of money, I am satisfied it will be one of the best things that Congress can do. I congratulate the Committee on Rules and the Democratic Members and the Republican Members for having cast aside all political advantage for the moment, and for helping to bring this legislation out in the interest of the general good of the country.

Mr. CHALMERS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KING. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. CHALMERS. Do I understand that these are tax-exempt bonds?

Mr. KING. Yes; they are tax-exempt bonds.

Mr. CHALMERS. At 5½ per cent?

Mr. KING. At 5½ per cent; and I am here to say that unless they were tax exempt I doubt if they could be sold at 5½ per cent. The evidence is here before the committee that the farm-loan banks would not have been able to sell their 5 per cent bonds, amounting to $40,000,000, without that feature.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. SANDERS of Indiana). The gentleman from Illinois reserves the remainder of his time.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I voted in the committee in opposition to this measure, because I did not feel that we were justified in increasing the rate of interest on the bonds of a semi-Government institution when the great demand from the country at this time is for a general lowering of the rates of interest to all borrowers. It would seem to me that in raising the rate of interest on these bonds, which are semi-Government bonds, to 5½ per cent, we are unquestionably pegging the interest rate and helping to continue the present high rate for money to all borrowers.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. In a moment. The demand for this legislation was first presented to the committee as coming from the joint-stock land banks. It was not argued in the first instance that we were to raise the rate of interest on all the farm loan bonds, but this was to be for the special help of the joint-stock land banks, their claim being that under the present law they could not sell the bonds which had already been issued. The statement was made—which is a fact to-day—that the joint stock land banks have gone into the market and borrowed on their own obligations, secured by their bonds, principally from banks, some $13,000,000 or $14,000,000, they—the joint-stock land banks—finding themselves unable to sell their bonds to the investing public, and having had commitments to the borrowers which they had to fulfill. Now, they are paying a higher rate of interest to these banks than their bonds carry. Therefore they are doing business at a considerable loss, and the banks that are carrying their loans are desirous of having those loans liquidated. That, as I say, was the original argument for this legislation. No member of the committee really understood until quite recently that there was to be a general increase in the rate of interest on all farm loan bonds. I may say to the Members of the House that the Farm Loan Board were not entirely in accord on this proposition. I believe a great many men who are favoring it to-day are favoring it against their better judgment, and there is a serious question in my mind as to the effect that this action if taken may have upon the borrowings of the Government from time to time in the big re-funding operations which must soon take place. We all understand that during the next year the temporary part of the public debt must be refunded. That announcement has been made by the Secretary of the Treasury. It is of interest to the taxpayers of the country that these continuous borrowings on the part of the Government should be made at as low a rate of interest as possible. It is to the interest also of the commercial borrowers, and to the States and municipalities which have occasion to borrow money from time to time, that the interest rates be let down as low as possible.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. I yield to the gentleman from Vermont.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. These bonds are tax-exempt securities, are they not?

Mr. McFADDEN. They are.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. And it is now proposed to increase the rate of interest on them so as to make them more desirable to purchase, and therefore easier to sell?

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes; that is the purpose of the legislation.

Mr. TINCHER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. McFADDEN. I will.

Mr. TINCHER. The farm loan bonds and the joint-stock land bonds bearing 5½ per cent interest, which can not be sold below par, can not be sold in the market in competition with municipal bonds at 5½ per cent that can be sold as low as 90?

Mr. McFADDEN. They can not be sold by the joint-stock land banks, but the market on the joint-stock land bank bonds is only 94 cents on the dollar.

Mr. TINCHER. If the banker could sell these bonds for 5 per cent, he would make 1 per cent.

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes.

Mr. TINCHER. If he sells at 5½ per cent, he only makes one-half of 1 per cent. Now, it stands to reason that he would not sell a 5½ per cent bond except for the fact that other tax-free bonds, such as municipal bonds, are being sold at such a rate that the man who depends on the joint-stock land bank or the farm loan bank can not borrow unless we enable him to raise the rate of interest.

Mr. McFADDEN. That is another reason why we should dispose of the tax-exempt security right. The market on the joint-stock land bank bonds is 92 to-day. If the joint-stock land banks were to sell their $14,000,000 or $15,000,000 of bonds which they have on hand already, they would suffer a loss of 8 per cent. If they sold their bonds at 92, the present market quotation, or if they carried them in their financial statements at their present market value, they would show an impairment of capital. So I say, here are these joint-stock land banks which are given the right to make loans in unlimited amounts, practically, some loans having been made as high as $75,000 on a single farm, and I understand in some instances as high as $150,000, and they are permitted to issue semi-Government bonds bearing a special privilege in the way of tax exemption, at a high rate of interest, 5½ per cent.

I think there is a serious question whether or not Congress is at this time justified in giving this additional interest which they are asking for.

Mr. CHALMERS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes.

Mr. CHALMERS. What is the limit of the issue of these bonds?

Mr. McFADDEN. As to the limit of issuance of the bonds, I tried to get that in committee from the men representing both classes, and I could not get a definite answer as to how much they proposed to issue. Mr. Powell, representing the joint-stock land banks, did inform the committee that the first issue would be $20,000,000, but there is nothing to limit the amount of bonds that they may issue. I will say further that last January or February a gentleman before our committee, who was conversant with the situation, told the committee that there were demands upon the farm loan system amounting to $250,000,000 worth of applications for loans from farmers.

Mr. REAVIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes.

Mr. REAVIS. The economical and industrial conditions would place a limit on the issue of the bonds which the Nation will absorb.

Mr. McFADDEN. That is correct; there is a limit to the funds for investment in the country, and a demand such as this upon the investment pool will absorb so much capital from the pool that it hinders the operation of other operations, and the consequence is higher interest rates to all borrowers, because they are competitors for money.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. It is true that there is a limit to capital which may be available for investment of this character, but will not the natural tendency be to go to tax-exempt securities if it can be done, even with a limited amount of capital?

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Now comes this new proposition; not only shall they be tax exempt when we are going to tax everything from window glass to automobiles—not only are they tax exempt, but this bill gives them a higher rate of interest.

Mr. McFADDEN. The other day in connection with revenue legislation I appeared before the Ways and Means Committee, and one of the members of the Ways and Means Committee criticized me because our committee was reporting out bills providing for the issuance of tax-exempt securities. I will say what I said to the committee, that an expert appeared before the Ways and Means Committee and said that Col. Green, of New York, who is a son of the famous Hetty Green, the millionaire, was cashing in all of his securities, selling real estate to the extent of $15,000,000, and putting it into tax-exempt securities for the purpose of evading the payment of taxes. That same situation is true all over the country. It is of particular advantage to the man of large means to invest his money in this class of securities. The time is going to come when Congress must act on that proposition. I believe it is estimated by experienced men that the loss to the Government is between two and three hundred million dollars on account of these tax-exempt securities. It is estimated that there are fourteen or fifteen billion dollars of tax-exempt securities outstanding now.

Mr. REAVIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes.

Mr. REAVIS. The gentleman would not advocate taking away from the farm-loan bonds the tax-exempt features and leaving the same privilege open to other securities that enjoy it?

Mr. McFADDEN. No; it would be an unfair discrimination in that respect, but Congress should pass at once House joint resolution 102, which I introduced on May 3, 1921, which would repeal all tax-exemption rights from now on.

Mr. TINCER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes.

Mr. TINCER. Any limitation on the farm-loan security that makes it undesirable, by reason of a limitation that does not exist on municipal bonds, is a discrimination in favor of the municipal bonds. The gentleman would not advocate that?

Mr. McFADDEN. It is unfortunate that the Government, in view of the situation presented, has such a great loss in revenue, and that we still continue to pass laws to increase the issuance of these securities.

Mr. KING. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes.

Mr. KING. The gentleman has stated that there are $14,000,000,000 of tax-exempt securities in this country. Will the gentleman state what part of those are issued by the United States?

Mr. McFADDEN. As I recollect, about 50 per cent.

Mr. KING. Is it not true that there is only $2,300,000,000 out of $10,000,000,000 issued?

Mr. McFADDEN. I believe there is a report from the Treasury that there is $10,000,000,000, and $2,300,000,000 are United States bonds. I will say that there is no accurate account, as I understand, of the amount of tax-exempt securities outstanding at the present time.

Mr. STEAGALL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. I will.

Mr. STEAGALL. Is it not true that the tax-exempt securities by which the farmers are directly benefited amount to only four or five hundred million dollars?

Mr. McFADDEN. The gentleman is speaking of the issuance of farm-loan bonds?

Mr. STEAGALL. Yes.

Mr. McFADDEN. The farmers are interested in drainage bonds and municipal bonds issued for public improvement of roads and improvement of county roads; indirectly they are interested in those. The debt is not confined entirely to the cities.

Mr. STEAGALL. In that connection is it not true that the city of New York has four or five billion dollars in tax-exempt bonds?

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes. I presume the gentleman is correct; they have lots of tax-exempt bonds out.

Mr. STEAGALL. Does the gentleman think that the farmer in my district is interested in that? My question is, If the bonds of the joint-stock land banks do amount to only four or five hundred million dollars, is not that true?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I would like to ask the gentleman from Alabama a question, with the permission of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. McFADDEN. Very well.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Is not this true, that it does not make any difference with results what class of securities has been made tax exempt if by that amount they reduce the amount of money that goes to support the Government, so that other classes have to make it up? It seems to me that that is true mathematically as well as logically.

Mr. STEAGALL. That may be very true, but as a matter of fact the whole question of tax exemption discussion has no proper part in connection with the bill now under consideration. There is no proposal here that these banks be not allowed to continue to float tax-exempt bonds. Nobody has proposed any legislation cutting off that right. The way to deal with that evil, if it is an evil, is not in connection with this bill. I object to it from a different standpoint—from that of the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GREENE]—because there are some fourteen or fifteen billion dollars of tax-exempted securities in this country floated by other interests than the farmers, who have only four or five hundred million dollars. But the way to remedy that is by other legislation than this. It is not proposed in this bill to deal with that question at all.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. When you get down to brass tacks, while the fact that securities are tax exempt is an admitted evil, the point is that we are still going to put another thing on top of it to make them even more attractive. That certainly brings the first evil into the discussion. It now turns out that the tax-exempt provision was not enough to sell them, and here we must increase the rate of interest. Where are you going to stop? I think that properly brings into issue the first thing, which was to make them tax exempt.

Mr. STEAGALL. This does not arbitrarily raise the interest rate. It simply gives the Federal Farm Loan Board an opportunity to pay more to the investing public, and the loss falls upon the farm loan banks and the joint stock banks and will be taken out of their earnings, because the bill specifically provides that the rates can not be increased to the farmer.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. The gentleman and I alone, somewhere by ourselves, would agree that it was poor business for the Government to exempt any securities from taxation, and I dare say that the gentleman and I alone would agree to many other phases of the matter altogether in opposition to this general principle. The gentleman now, however, is viewing it from the standpoint that it is special legislation for the farmer, but I have never been able to recognize why the farmer, the blacksmith, the lawyer, the merchant, or anybody else has any special interest in the Government. I thought the Government was for all of us.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. But why should the banks serve any particular class of people?

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, in answer further I would say that the Undersecretary of the Treasury states that State, county, and minor civil divisions have issued securities which are tax exempt to the amount of $5,800,000,000, and cities, towns, and villages to the amount of $1,500,000,000. Gentlemen who have just spoken have touched on the proposition that this bill does not increase the rate of interest to the borrower. This is a limitation as to the amount of interest that can be paid on these bonds. The law provides that the farmer shall be charged not to exceed 6 per cent, and gives the right to the Federal Farm Loan Board to fix the rate of interest on the bonds. If the Farm Loan Board can sell their bonds or the joint-stock land banks can sell their bonds at 4½ per cent, it means that the farmer is going to get his interest at 5½ per cent. There is serious question in my mind, and it was evidenced by the testimony before the committee, as to whether or not this farm loan system can operate on one-half of 1 per cent without a loss. Mr. A. F. Lever, of the Farm Loan Board, the other day in appearing before our committee stated that he did not believe the joint-stock land banks could function without a loss on one-half of 1 per cent. I think these are things that we should take into consideration in passing legislation of this kind.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, is it not a fact that they are claiming that they can operate on one-half of 1 per cent?

Mr. McFADDEN. It was stated before the committee by one of the presidents of the joint-stock land banks that he thought they could temporarily get along on one-half of 1 per cent, but he was not optimistic about it. There is further serious question as to whether or not if they get this right they can then sell these bonds. I have here in my hand a communication from one of the largest financial institutions of the Middle West, in which the writer wrote to me in regard to the matter, and I want to read the letter to the committee at this time. The letter is dated July 14, 1921. This is one of the institutions that I believe carries one of the large loans for the joint-stock land banks and has their bonds as collateral security. The purpose of the inquiry to me was to ascertain whether or not Congress was going to pass this legislation to enable the joint-stock land banks to sell their bonds. This letter is signed by a banker who is well versed in the market conditions and especially in the sale of bonds, particularly this class of bonds.

The letter is as follows:

JULY 14, 1921.

The bill I referred to in my last letter was that which referred to raising the farm loan bond rate from 5 per cent to 5½ per cent. As I understand it, the original farm loan law prohibits the sale of either the farm land bank bonds or joint stock land bank bonds below par. My understanding also is that if the last $40,000,000 of bonds issued by the Federal land banks were sold and any commission paid for such sale, the law was violated and the bonds in reality sold below par. I understand that the syndicate handling the bonds were paid from some source a commission of one-half of 1 per cent. If that was legal, then any price paid for the selling of bonds at par would be legal for the joint stock land banks, and I take it that the discount which would be required to sell a 5½ per cent coupon joint stock land bank bond would not be as great as a bond bearing a coupon rate of 5 per cent.

Any statement that is made by proponents of this bill to the effect that it would increase the loanable funds to the farmer through joint stock land bank operations is making, in my judgment, one of pure bunk. The purport of all efforts to raise the coupon rate to 5½ per cent is to facilitate the sale of bonds now on hand in the portfolios of the joint stock land banks and any joint stock land bank that would make a statement that they could continue business selling a coupon 5½ per cent bond at par and loan at a limitation of 6 per cent to the borrower and pay out of the difference from 1 per cent to 1½ per cent for production purposes, ought to have his sanity questioned, because if he believes he can do it, he is certainly crazy. I am of the opinion that a 5½ per cent coupon rate will not sell the joint stock land bank bonds at par in this market or any near future market.

I refer back to my statement that if it was legal to sell Federal land bank bonds below par or at 99½ per cent, upon the same logic it would be legal for joint stock land banks to sell their bonds at a discount which would be very much less if the bonds were on a 5½ per cent coupon basis than would be if they were on a 5 per cent basis. To that extent, it would help the joint stock land banks materially if the 5½ per cent bond rate were established for a sufficient time to enable the joint stock land banks to accomplish their purposes, which, believe me, is simply to get rid of the bonds they have on hand at the present time and not with any intention of creating new mortgages and new bonds for distribution.

Very truly, yours,

Mr. DOWELL. By whom is the document signed?

Mr. McFADDEN. The letter is from the Merchants' Loan & Trust Co., of Chicago, and it is signed by Mr. F. W. Thompson, the vice president.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. CLAGUE].

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman five minutes.

Mr. CLAGUE. Mr. Chairman, there are 23 joint-stock land banks in the United States. Those banks have already loaned about $75,000,000. The Federal land banks have at this time altogether loaned $374,000,000, making a total of $450,000,000 that have been loaned by the Federal land bank system. It is true that the bonds issued by these land banks are tax exempt, but there has been at this time issued altogether, as near as I can get from statistics—and I called up the Federal reserve bank and the Federal land bank—from sixteen to twenty billion dollars tax-exempt securities. Therefore of the tax-exempt securities issued only $450,000,000, or one thirty-second part of the total of exempt securities, are farm mortgages. The State of New York alone has issued over a billion dollars of tax-exempt securities for municipal purposes. The city alone has issued nearly a billion dollars. The State of Pennsylvania has issued the same. This being true, why should we hear all this cry about a few millions of dollars which have been issued on farm mortgages?

I want to say that in principle I am opposed to the tax-exemption feature. We have got this at this time. These joint-stock land banks were created some four or five years ago. At present they can not function. This bill was really introduced at the request of the joint-stock land banks, and I want to say at this time the Federal Land Bank Board has been very fair about this bill. Mr. Lever, who served in this House many years, came before our committee and stated that at this time this bill should pass, that the joint-stock land banks at this time are unable to sell their bonds at 5 per cent, that if the rate is put up to 5½ per cent they can be sold and the banks function. But no bank selling bonds at a discount can sell them as well as if selling at par. If these bonds can be offered for sale at a fair rate of interest, it is thought by the joint-stock land banks that they can sell their bonds, and I believe they can at a rate of 5½ per cent. Now, the Federal farm land bonds are Government bonds in a way. They can be sold a little cheaper than those of the joint-stock land banks. We have in the United States 12 Federal farm land banks. They have issued about $374,000,000 of bonds, and they are going to issue within 60 days a new quota of bonds, possibly of $30,000,000 or $40,000,000 more. Whether they can sell them at 5 per cent is a question, and if they can not this bill will give them the privilege of selling up to a 5½ rate. The Federal farm law provides that no farmer can be charged a rate exceeding 6 per cent for his farm loan, and the law provides that the bonds can not be sold at a rate exceeding 5 per cent. Now, by raising this rate of interest it is believed that there can be some twenty or thirty millions of dollars of bonds sold at once. Somebody said, How many bonds are going to be sold? We do not know how much the market will absorb. No man can tell. The Federal farm land banks put out $40,000,000 and it took nearly three months to sell them at 5 per cent, and possibly they would have to raise the rate a little at this time, but no one knows. If they can sell at 5 per cent, they are going to do it. Now, my friends, this is a time when the farmers have never been so hard pressed in the world to get money. This bill is approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, by the Federal Reserve Board, and by the Federal Land Bank Board.

Mr. DUNBAR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLAGUE. Yes, sir.

Mr. DUNBAR. Why does the gentleman state that one of the reasons it should pass is because it is recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury?

Mr. CLAGUE. The Secretary of the Treasury possibly knows the financial condition of this country as well as any other man in this country.

Mr. DUNBAR. I will state the Secretary of the Treasury a few weeks before the expiration of the fiscal year made an estimate—

Mr. CLAGUE. I can not yield further unless I have more time. Mr. John R. Mitchell, a member of the Federal Reserve Board, a man who personally knows the financial conditions, came before the Banking and Currency Committee and recommended this bill. This bill needs to be passed in order to take care of the farmers at the present time. In the Northwest, and particularly in Iowa and northern Illinois, Wisconsin, and Minnesota, the farm mortgages are being foreclosed at a rate absolutely unprecedented. More of them have been foreclosed, I dare say, than has taken place within the last 25 years. I know of my own knowledge that exorbitant rates are being charged by many of these loaning companies. I know farm mortgage companies have been and are now doing everything they can to defeat this particular bill, because they are receiving exorbitant interest and securing big commissions. I know of one particular instance, an instance that was brought to the attention of the committee, relating to a farm mortgage in my county owned by a large insurance company. One of our best farmers wanted a note for $360 extended for 60 or 90 days, and that insurance company asked him $560 for granting him that extension of 90 days. That is what is being done throughout this country; banks are charging 2, 3, 4, 5, and as high as 15 per cent as commissions. I do not claim that this bill will bring about the millennium, but it will do something, my friends. If these joint stock banks can sell their bonds and be allowed to properly function, it will do something to help the financial conditions at this time, and the farmers need it as they never needed it before. The tax-exemption feature has grown to be a very large question. Now is the wrong time to shut the same off. The farmer needs help at this time. His products are selling for less than they cost. Corn which a year and a half ago was selling for $1.60 and $1.80 a bushel is now down to 32 and 33 cents a bushel. Oats which were selling at 75 cents are down to 23 cents a bushel, and the machinery that the farmer has got to buy is as high as during war time. Manufactured products have not come down, and the farmer is entitled, if there ever was a time, to something at your hands. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota yields back two minutes.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LANKFORD] such time as he desires.

Mr. LANKFORD. Mr. Chairman, the greatest question before the Congress to-day is how to relieve the present financial depression. Many remedies have been suggested. Some say this and some say that will help the situation. Some say tax revision. Some say help export corporations. Some said emergency tariff; some said Porter peace resolution; and yet, Mr. Chairman, I am not sure any of these have or will help the situation of the common people. I fear we have done more damage than good thus far.

The farmers of all sections, and especially of the South, are in an awful condition financially, and I fear worse is yet to come. I pray to God that we may help them, and that speedily. I have supported and will support every measure which to my mind is in their favor.

I introduced yesterday a bill which I honestly believe will mean the financial salvation of the farmers of the Nation if it is enacted into law. The bill is as follows:

A bill to amend the War Finance Corporation act as amended, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That the War Finance Corporation act as amended is further amended by adding at the end thereof a new section to read as follows:

"Sec. 22. (a) The corporation is authorized and directed to purchase from banks, either national or State, farmers' notes maturing within three years from the passage of this act and secured by either first or second trust deeds or liens against real estate owned by farmers or secured by indorsement.

"There shall not be purchased and held by said corporation at any one time more than $500,000,000 worth of such notes, but said corporation is authorized to resell, from time to time, any amount or all of such notes so held by the corporation and reinvest in similar notes the funds obtained from the sale.

"(b) Whenever in the opinion of the board of directors of the corporation market conditions justify, any such notes acquired under this section may from time to time be sold, marketed, or disposed of by the corporation at not less than the original cost thereof to the corporation.

"(c) That the corporation shall not demand nor collect interest at a rate greater than 4 per cent per annum on the notes purchased under this act, regardless of the rate specified in the notes, if the corporation demands and secures the indorsement of said notes or the guaranty of the payment of the said notes by the bank or its directors. In no event shall either the bank selling said notes nor the corporation demand or collect more than 6 per cent per annum as interest on said notes regardless of the rate specified in said notes. The corporation may collect 6 per cent per annum as interest if it buys them without guaranty or indorsement and the selling bank may collect 2 per cent per annum for guaranty or indorsement if it sells them under guaranty or with an indorsement of the bank.

"(d) That the corporation in purchasing the notes authorized to be bought in this paragraph shall give special preference to and shall buy notes from banks handling the notes of farmers living in those sections of the Nation which have suffered most and are now suffering most severely as a result of the recent great decline in the price of farm products.

"(e) The corporation may employ for the purpose of this section such agents or agencies as it deems necessary."

We have loaned billions of dollars to the foreign nations of Europe. Why not loan some to our people at home? The President suggests that $500,000,000 be loaned to the railroads, and some of the Senators urge that millions now be loaned to Russia. Why not loan $500,000,000 on farmers' paper here at home?

The farmers produced to their fullest capacity during the war to furnish food for all. They loaned money to the Government in its time of need by buying Liberty bonds and gave their sons to die for this Nation. Why not help them in their time of dire distress? I honestly believe the Government could better afford to give to the farmers the $500,000,000 as a present in order to relieve them rather than make some other appropriations which have been made since I came to Congress.

But it is not asked that the money be given; it is urged that it be loaned on safe paper. How will the law operate, if enacted? The country banks can sell their notes of farmers and thus make the bank's burden lighter and enable the bank to help others that the bank can not help now. The farmer can get his money for three years at a low rate of interest, and will not have to worry about renewals every 90 days.

As soon as the bill is passed the banks can let farmers doing business renew old paper for three years or less and can make new loans and can get the money for the farmers without so much red tape. Farmers whose farms are already in a loan company can get a small emergency loan on a second paper or a good indorsement. This will put millions of dollars in the hands of the farmers at once. The farmers can then pay those they owe. The money will at once flow into the hands of retail merchants, the farmers' supply man, the man who sells mules, the retail grocery man, the wholesale man, and in fact everybody will feel the good effect. The doctor, the teacher, and all humanity will be helped. The local banks will receive better deposits. They will be able to pay the amounts due by them to larger banks. The big banks will make settlement with the regional banks and thus the money that goes from the Government will return after having saved a distressed but most deserving people. [Applause.]

This is not a donation; it is only a loan, every dollar of which will be repaid with interest.

Mr. Chairman, our Nation owes its all to the farmers. They made and saved our country. They have never refused their country's call in the hour of her need and we can not afford to fail them now.

I beg of you, do not let them plead longer for help, without response. [Applause.]

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to myself. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I am compelled if I am candid with the committee to say that I was not at first for the bill. I opposed this bill for a good many months for reasons which I thought were sound, and my consent to report the bill was only obtained reluctantly, and I am going to be, as I try to be always in discussing matters, candid with the House.

I shall vote for the bill, and I think it ought to pass. But I think those who believe it will help the farmer materially will be badly deceived. The bill ought to be entitled "A bill for the relief of the New England investor." One gentleman from New England practically said that he was for it for that reason. I opposed the bill for a good many months. We sat on the lid and said that we did not think it was wise, and I finally yielded reluctantly, while the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McFADDEN] stood hitched and never did yield. I am not going to criticize him, because I can appreciate his position. Certain reasons and facts made me withdraw opposition to the bill, and I think we ought to pass it notwithstanding the fact it is not going to do any great good to the farmer. Whenever a man undertakes to contend that whenever Government bonds are issued or any tax-exempt security put out by governmental control agencies that the interest rate on that security does not for the time being peg the basic interest rate in the country he exposes his ignorance or does not care anything about fact. I think we all recognize now that the Government rate paid on Government securities pegs the interest rate for the time being. I was one of those who hoped the situation in the country would be such that the interest rate could be gradually pressed down to a level that would be recognized by the general investing public as a stable level, because until credits, as well as other prices—and the price of credit enters into and affects our economic and financial conditions just the same as the price of commodities—and until there is a stable price level both for commodities and for credit naturally there is going to be a halting of business. But whenever those who have funds to invest come to the conclusion, or a large number of them come to the conclusion, that a stable price level has been reached both in the credit and commodity markets, then you can expect a resumption of economic activity in this country, and not before. I think that is fundamental and axiomatic.

I had hoped we could press down the price of credit in the credit market of this country gradually. And I was very much astonished when the Secretary of the Treasury put out the 5½ per cent certificates. Of course that is his judgment, and of course his judgment is better than mine, but the majority of investment bankers I have talked to thought he made a mistake. You saw the effect it had on the bond market the next day. I believe he could have gone to the bankers of this country and said, "I want $3,000,000,000 of one or two year certificates at 5 per cent," and he could have gotten it. The leading bankers have come to the conclusion that what is the basic flat rate is what the Government is going to base its operations on. I thought the Secretary of the Treasury was going to get down to a 5 or 5½ rate—

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I yield to myself five additional minutes. The fact that the Secretary issued these 5½ per cent certificates was one thing that induced me to withdraw my opposition to this bill. I know of a man who wanted $10,000 of these farm loans, but when the Secretary of the Treasury put out those 5½ three-year certificates he thought he would rather invest in them. It is demoralizing. Do not misunderstand me. It may be the Secretary of the Treasury may be right. But what has happened? The interest rate was "pegged" at a higher rate than necessary, but it made it impossible for the joint-stock banks to put out less than 5½ per cent bonds. Fortunately the subscriptions to the Treasury certificates were oversubscribed, and the Secretary of the Treasury will be able in the future to make arrangements by which I hope the interest will get down to a 5 per cent basis. The Federal land banks, I do not think, will have to increase the rate. The joint-stock banks will. I have always opposed joint-stock banks. They are a hybrid. They do not believe in this system. The system will never be a success until we get rid of the joint-stock banks. But you have them. This is not a good time to clean up, because the farmer needs every agency he can get at this time. These joint-stock banks are going to the commercial banks and are paying 6 per cent and putting up their bonds as collateral. Of course they can not exist under that condition. They are losing money. They convinced the farmers' organizations throughout the country that they would float their bonds at 5½ per cent. I fear they can not do it to a very great extent. I believe the farm loan banks can be able to float the small amount they are going to put out.

Unfortunately, you have been arbitrarily limited to them to $200,000,000 business a year. They can not meet one-tenth of the demand now. I do not believe the farm loan bank will ever function until you can give them an independent working capital, so as to be free of the bond syndicate. I had not intended to say anything about that, but I have mentioned it, and I am going to talk about something that nobody has mentioned on this floor before. This all goes back to the proposition that Mr. Norris, the first commissioner, made an improvident contract to float the first issue through a bond syndicate. I think it was an evasion of the law. I think they were selling the bonds at a discount. Of course, the syndicate went to the expense of advertising, and if the board had undertaken to do that it would have cost them more than the discount they paid is the defense that is offered.

Mr. McFADDEN. Does not the gentleman feel that because of the contractual arrangements with these banks the board is at a disadvantage in the sale of these securities?

Mr. WINGO. I am going to come to that.

Mr. McFADDEN. And does not the gentleman feel that the passage of this law gives the bankers that grasp on the Federal Farm Loan Board?

Mr. WINGO. No. The Secretary of the Treasury at that time was not an expert as to bond issues. But this man was supposed to be an expert, and he was put on the commission for that purpose. Fortunately he is now out of the system. The present Secretary of the Treasury, appearing before our committee, approves this arrangement and this bond syndicate. He says it is proper, but the situation is such that whenever this Farm Loan Board undertakes to go out and sell its bonds in the open market they are met with the direct threat of this syndicate that "if you do, we will dump our holdings on the market and break the market for you."

How are you going to get free of that syndicate? You will never do it, gentlemen, until those banks are given a working turnover capital that will make them independent, so that they can accumulate mortgages between the bond-issuing periods, because they can not take mortgages unless they have cash and they can not issue bonds unless they have mortgages or Government bonds to secure them.

I predict that it will yet have to come, and I think it is the quickest way to relieve the Treasury of the $180,000,000 bonds, not to take several bites at this cherry, but to give them at one time sufficient capital, and then I believe they can sell their bonds at 5 per cent, free from the syndicate. I do not believe they will ever be able to do it freely unless they get an ample working capital.

Now, the question comes up as to what effect it will have on these other bonds outstanding. These bonds are not generally held. Gentlemen stand up here and say the market price is 94. I will furnish you men who will guarantee that $100,000,000 at 94 will all be taken at once if anybody tries to get rid of them. I refer to the 5 per cent 10-year option issue. Why is there not a general market on these bonds? Because these bonds are either held by the United States Treasury or by this syndicate or by investors who hold on to them, no matter what the market is. The last issue to-day is quoted at par and 101. But the volume not being large and not held for general distribution, this bill will not affect the price.

Now, will it affect the price of other credit of municipalities trying to put out its bonds? Will they be affected? Remember that the Secretary of the Treasury has already raised the interest rate on Government securities, pegging the basic rate at 5½, so that 5½ bonds will not affect the market. It will enable these joint-stock land banks to match the market price of the Treasury, the basic rate.

Now, if you will read the hearings you will notice that Mr. Lever intimated that he believed they could float them at 5 per cent.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. Yes.

Mr. McFADDEN. The statement I made about the market at 94 was governed by quotations and the statement made by the chairman of the joint-stock land bank.

Mr. WINGO. That may be so about the joint-stock land bank securities. I was talking about Federal farm loan bank securities. Some people do not know the difference between them, but take a man who knows the difference, and you are not going to get those held by the Federal land banks at 94 in the market now. I will bet you can not get them at 100 cents on the dollar.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas reserves the balance of his time.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. DUNBAR].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. DUNBAR. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, to some extent I agree with what the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. Wingo] has said regarding the bonds of the Federal farm loan banks and the joint-stock land banks. I am not one of those, however, who agree with the author of this bill that because the Secretary of the Treasury has recommended that the Federal farm loan banks and the joint-stock land banks be privileged to sell bonds at 5½ per cent interest Congress should grant them this privilege. Unless the Secretary of the Treasury can give some good specific reason why we should permit the Federal farm loan banks and joint-stock land banks to sell bonds at 5½ per cent interest, I see no reason why Congress should blindly follow his advice.

The great problem of the day, it seems to me, which affects our financial condition more than any other, is the collection of the debts due us by foreign Governments. It has not been over six weeks since the Secretary of the Treasury paid to England $32,000,000. I say he paid that amount of money, but it was practically a gift to Great Britain by the Government of the United States from the Public Treasury. It is true we owed Great Britain $32,000,000 for transporting our troops across the waters during the late war, but Great Britain owes us $4,000,000,000 which we loaned her, and she owes us $500,000,000 of interest; and I say that the Secretary of the Treasury had no right to pay Great Britain $32,000,000 when Great Britain owed us $4,500,000,000, and because in the last few months he has virtually given Great Britain $32,000,000, I am not one of those who are disposed blindly to take his advice, follow his lead, and vote for 5½ per cent interest on these proposed joint-stock land bank bonds. I do not take this stand because I am prejudiced against Great Britain, for I am not. England in past centuries has done more to civilize the people of the world than any other power, but all nations should be made to realize their financial obligation to us and proceed to make arrangements to pay.

Now, gentlemen, if I believed that the issuing of these bonds would do the farmer any great amount of good I would almost be willing, notwithstanding my conviction might oppose it, to vote for the issuing of these bonds at 5½ per cent. But, gentlemen, the Federal farm loan banks sold within the last two months $40,000,000 of bonds at 5 per cent interest, and interest rates are being reduced, not increased. This whole question arose, as the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. Wingo] has stated, because it originated in the joint-stock land banks.

I am one of those who believe with him that the joint-stock land banks have no place in the financial economic relationship with the farmers of the country. A joint-stock land bank is permitted to issue a tax-exempt security. Now, what is a joint-stock land bank? Ten or a dozen men, who may or may not be farmers, may get together and organize a bank and they will advertise that they have Government tax-exempt bonds to sell for  $5\frac{1}{2}$  per cent interest. They may sell their bonds and not one farmer may realize a single cent in the way of loans which are permitted to be made as a result of the sale of those bonds. But in the Federal farm loan bank system it is somewhat different, because all of those banks are united under one governing head, and any loss sustained in one of them is shared by the others, while any profits made by one are shared by all. But in the joint-stock land bank system a bank may fail and the other banks are not responsible for the failure. Then, there would be the stigma of bonds having been sold that might be worthless and that people have purchased thinking there was a Government guaranty of payment behind them as well as a Government exemption from taxes. I say that the public are misled when a joint-stock land bank bond is bought with a Government exemption, because the Government is in no way responsible for the payment of the bond and because the money received from the sale of it may be diverted to purposes other than aiding the farmers, for whose benefit the bank is supposed to have been organized. I think the joint-stock land banks ought to be put out of existence and that the Federal farm loan banks should function in their place, and I believe the Federal farm loan banks should be given a greater opportunity to be of greater use and of greater benefit, perhaps along the lines suggested by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. Wingo] or perhaps on some modified plan. I do not believe that the joint-stock land banks have any place in our economic system, and I believe they should go out of existence. There never would have been any request made for a  $5\frac{1}{2}$  per cent bond if it had not come from the joint-stock land banks. It did not come from the Federal farm loan banks.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DUNBAR. I will.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Members of the Farm Loan Board appeared before our committee and stated that while they had sold $40,000,000 of 5 per cent bonds, they started with $18,000,000 pledged, and they were several weeks in getting the issue sold, and they said they did not believe they could float another issue unless they were permitted to raise the rate of interest. Three members of the board came before our committee and urged the passage of this bill. Is not that so?

Mr. DUNBAR. That is true, but I think they were actuated by the fact that the joint-stock land banks had requested the right to issue bonds at  $5\frac{1}{2}$  per cent interest, and the Farm Loan Board lent their moral aid to the joint-stock land banks in that way. When the Federal farm loan bank sold those bonds and when the Secretary of the Treasury agreed to pay  $5\frac{1}{2}$  per cent on Treasury certificates, money commanded 1 per cent higher interest rate than to-day. Sixty and 90 day time money in New York is now obtainable at  $5\frac{1}{2}$  per cent and 6 per cent interest; "call money" at  $4\frac{1}{2}$  per cent. I fail to see the necessity to authorize increased rate to be paid by joint-stock land banks for bonds to be sold.

Mr. KING. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. APPLEBY].

Mr. APPLEBY. Mr. Chairman, being a member of the Committee on Banking and Currency, I have learned something from first-hand testimony about agricultural conditions in the West and South. My first impression was to oppose this bill, but when you come to analyze the proposition it is not one of voting money, simply a question of granting an increase in the rates of interest on farm loan bank bonds. Consequently, after due consideration, it seems to me that these banks should be allowed to increase the rate of interest on those bonds which they are offering to investors. The amount asked for is but one-half of 1 per cent. This seems fair inasmuch as the Liberty loan bonds of the first issue were  $3\frac{1}{2}$  per cent bonds, and the rate was gradually increased until the Victory bonds were sold at  $4\frac{1}{2}$  cents. These transactions show clearly that the question of supply and demand of money largely fixes the rate of interest. Recently the Secretary of the Treasury has offered Government certificates of indebtedness at a rate of  $5\frac{1}{2}$  cents, the length of time of these certificates are about the same as the proposed farm loan bonds. Both are tax exempt.

Another case in point of increasing rates of interest took place here in Washington less than two years ago, when the banks of the District of Columbia were allowed by Congress to increase their rates of interest from 6 per cent to 8 per cent on promissory notes for discount. Consequently, the old saying of "supply and demand," after all, largely fix the rates of money as well as other commodities. The further fact was brought out in the testimony given before our committee of the many mortgages taken by the farm loan banks and placed on record. The banks not being able to market these bonds, largely on account of other nontaxable securities being offered at a higher rate of interest, and the money on these mortgages has not yet been advanced to the makers of the same. Consequently, it would be good business for us to get behind this interest proposition by raising the rates and making these bonds salable. It has been said that the agriculturalists of the country are asking favors of Congress. I do not think so. I hope I am disinterested in this matter. It looks to me what we need in Congress at this time is more optimism as to the business future, and a good deal less of pessimism. We want to help start the wheels of agriculture, manufacture, commerce and transportation, and adjust ourselves to the new conditions which confront us. It appears to me that to-day is a mighty good time to begin by voting for this measure. [Applause.] I thank you, gentlemen, and I yield back the remainder of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman yields back one minute.

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. A. P. NELSON] five minutes.

Mr. McFADDEN. I also yield to the gentleman five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. A. P. NELSON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I am in favor of the passage of the pending bill increasing the rate of interest from 5 per cent to  $5\frac{1}{2}$  per cent on Federal land bank and joint-stock land bank bonds, because of the fact that under the present conditions we are face to face with an emergency that must be met. We must make the Federal land banks and the joint-stock land banks function to their maximum capacity and place as much money as possible at the disposal of the farmers of our country who are in dire need of financial help in renewing old loans now being foreclosed and in making new loans for the payment of obligations which to-day are in the form of frozen credits in our local country banks.

This bill, S. 1811, was amended in the Committee on Banking and Currency of the House by adding the provision that the increase of one-half of 1 per cent shall only continue to June 30, 1923, when the rate of interest automatically goes back again to 5 per cent. It is therefore strictly in the nature of emergency legislation and will only continue for the next two years. It is hoped that within the next two years our financial condition will be such that bonds of this character will sell readily and freely at 5 per cent.

If the money market should change so as to make money rates easier, the Federal Farm Loan Board, of course, would sell these bonds at a lower rate than the limit placed in this legislation. Indeed, large blocks of these bonds were sold at  $4\frac{1}{2}$  per cent in the early period of these banks, although the possible rate was 5 per cent. Hence it is barely possible that even with the limit of the rate of interest fixed at  $5\frac{1}{2}$  per cent during the emergency period to June 30, 1923, financial conditions might become such that these bonds would sell easily at 5 per cent, in which event, of course, the Federal land banks and the joint-stock land banks would not think of selling the bonds for more than 5 per cent or  $5\frac{1}{2}$  per cent, or whatever rate of interest the market would demand.

I especially wish to emphasize here the fact that the raising of the rate of interest on these bonds from 5 per cent to  $5\frac{1}{2}$  per cent is not increasing the rate of interest to the farmer or borrower, which still remains at the maximum fixed rate of 6 per cent. In other words, the raising of the rate of interest on the bonds does not raise the rate of interest to the borrower or the farmer. The loss in the difference of the bond rates will be sustained by the Federal land banks and the joint-stock land banks and not by the farmer or the borrower.

The recent bond sale of \$40,000,000 by the Federal land banks demonstrated that the sale of these bonds at 5 per cent was very slow, and that it is very probable that in making the next bond sale the Federal land banks may have to raise the interest to  $5\frac{1}{2}$  per cent in order to effect a reasonably sure and quick sale of the bonds issued. It is to be noted, however, that neither the Federal land banks nor the joint-stock land banks will sell these bonds at  $5\frac{1}{2}$  per cent if the market will absorb them at 5 or  $5\frac{1}{2}$  per cent. The main reason for this legislation is to make it possible for these banks to function under the present abnormal financial conditions which exist in our country to-day, and to enable them to meet the market conditions, whether that be 5,  $5\frac{1}{2}$ , or  $5\frac{3}{4}$  per cent.

I desire to call the attention of the committee to the fact that this bill is recommended for passage by the Secretary of the Treasury, Hon. A. W. Mellon, and has been approved by the Committee on Banking and Currency of the Senate, and was passed by that body. It also has the unanimous approval of the Federal Farm Loan Board, and in the hearings you will find that three members of that bureau, Hon. A. F. Lever, Hon. H. W. Joyce, and Capt. W. S. A. Smith came before the committee and strongly urged the passage of this bill, and that Hon. C. E. Lobdell, farm loan commissioner, in a letter to the chairman of the committee, joined his colleagues in stating that it would be wise to pass this bill. Hon. John R. Mitchell, a member of the Federal Reserve Board, was present at the hearings and urged the passage of this legislation. His judgment and advice, because of his wide experience in farm loans and country banking in the middle western and northwestern agricultural regions, should have great weight with Congress to-day. Mr. Mitchell stated positively that he could not see how the enactment of this bill into law would affect, in any marked degree, the present values of United States Liberty bonds. He further stated that, in his opinion, the bill is absolutely sound, and will relieve a lot of frozen credits that are to-day in the country banks and help the financial situation among the farmers very materially.

The fact that we have safeguarded this amendment to the Federal farm loan act as an emergency measure, and that after two years the rate will automatically go back to 5 per cent, as originally instituted, I think will meet the approval of the most conservative Member of the House, who might feel that this rate should not be maintained as high as 5½ per cent any longer than absolutely necessary.

From the hearings I find that in the testimony of Hon. H. A. Moehlenpach, of Wisconsin, formerly a member of the Federal Reserve Board, who appeared before the Senate committee urging in the strongest manner possible the passage of this legislation, he offers letters from representative men of the State of Wisconsin, in which these men urge the passage of this bill and of legislation that will enable the Federal land banks and the joint-stock land banks to function. I wish to quote from these letters, as they come from men who thoroughly understand the agricultural situation in that State and the Northwest.

Mr. R. G. Nuss, secretary Wisconsin Implement Dealers' Association, says:

Farmers are in distress in getting in another crop and we fear disastrous results unless money in volume and continuous fashion is supplied.

Mr. George McKerrow, president Wisconsin Farm Bureau Federation, says:

Nothing should be done to retard or hurt the complete functioning of the Federal farm loan system in both branches so that our farmers may have adequate facilities for long-time credits.

Mr. J. J. Jamieson, president of the Wisconsin Bankers' Association, says:

The farm-loan associations and the joint-stock land banks have made ideal working units in serving our farmers. It would be a calamity, indeed, if these systems should be disturbed in their splendid work. On the other hand, everything should be done to increase the usefulness and to enlarge the scope of the system so that it can function more completely in these days of stress.

Hon. John J. Blaine, governor of the State of Wisconsin, says:

The Federal farm-loan system has made a great contribution in caring for the long-time credit needs of the farmer, and has been a real means of reducing the rate of interest on this class of loans. He has not been subject to the high charges, as in days gone by, of the farm-loan brokers and money lenders. During the past year or more, since the system ceased to function, we have seen a tendency to get back to the old methods and the old rates. There can be no danger in having too many farm-loan associations or too many joint-stock land banks or other agencies competing in a field like our State, where the demand is so great for long-time farm credits.

Mr. C. E. Babcock, president of the Wisconsin Retail Lumbermen's Association, says:

As president of the Retail Lumbermen's Association of this State (which consists of about 700 individual dealers) I think I am in a position to state to you accurately the stress under which the farmers are laboring at this time to secure credit. * * * The country bankers of our State are hard pressed for funds. * * * The price of the farmer's produce has dropped in a very violent way during the past 12 months, and this has brought great discouragement and in many sections real distress to our farmers to get their planting and harvesting of another crop. * * * The National Government and the State will do well to assist in every way possible, not only on this financial matter, but in the marketing of the crop of the farmer and to stabilize in every way this program. I trust you will be able to see the Members of both Houses from Wisconsin and impress upon them the importance of this.

The farmers are to-day being discriminated against in the matter of long-time credits, because of exorbitant rates of interest plus large commissions which are being asked for renewal of loans and for new loans. The reason for this, to a large degree, is due, no doubt, to the fact that loanable capital is withdrawn from financing farm operations and used in other financial operations, such as large foreign bond issues and bond issues of domestic corporations, which pay as high as 7½ and 8 per cent, plus large commissions as underwriting fees. Indeed, reports indicate that insurance companies of the East, as well as large real estate mortgage-loan agencies who used to make loans freely on farms at 5, 5½, and 6 per cent in years past, are now demanding 7 and 8 per cent plus exorbitant commissions, because they can now invest their funds in foreign Government bonds and in bond issues of our large domestic corporations at very high rates of interest.

The one thing that we ought to consider very carefully in this matter is that when the loans are made to the farmers for 5 or 10 years at 8 per cent with a high commission charge on top he has no way of being relieved from this burden should the market rates in a year or two, or even three and four years, go down. He has his interest rate fixed, and most of the loaning companies these days will not grant the "on or before" privilege of payment as in the past, thus holding the farmer to his 5 or 10 year contract. This is in marked contrast with the business man who can go to the Federal reserve banks and during the stringent period borrow money for 60 or 90 days at 7 and 8 per cent, but if in 6 months' period or a year's period the interest rate goes down he is in position to renew his loans at the lower rate of interest. Not so with the farmer who has made his loan for the fixed period of 5 or 10 years, and at the present reduced prices of all products from the farm the farmer can not stand to pay the exorbitant rates of interest which to-day are demanded by insurance companies and large loaning agencies. [Applause.]

As I have stated in a previous argument on the Curtis-Nelson bill, I wish to repeat again here that the country banks have loaned themselves up to the limit in an effort to tide the farmer through the period of distress; their liquid paper is exhausted; they are helpless to furnish further relief and are as vitally interested in the farmer being able to come into possession of outside sources of credit as is the farmer himself. Every relief offered the farmer in the way of a farm loan results in releasing for ordinary and normal banking usage funds of the bank now tied up in loans which the farmer can liquidate in no other way, thus conferring a very direct benefit upon commerce and industry in addition to the service directly rendered the farmer. [Applause.]

The main thing about the bill before us to-day is to enable the Federal farm loan system to function to its maximum capacity in its dual provisions. The Federal reserve system is to-day furnishing at most reasonable rates sufficient funds for our manufacturing and commercial interests in the big industrial centers, for which we are exceedingly happy, and it is equally necessary that the Federal farm loan system shall be made to function so as to make loans obtainable at reasonable rates to the tillers of the soil in order that we shall be able to return at the earliest possible date to normal conditions in our agricultural, commercial, and industrial activities.

I am free to agree with every member of our committee, I am free to agree with every speaker on the floor of this House—and no one would urge it with more real genuine belief that it ought to be done than I—that we ought to remove all tax-free securities in our Nation, but that can not be done now. That is a thing that must be done by constitutional amendment and must be referred to the several States for ratification in order to do away with the tax-exempt securities in our Nation to-day. In my judgment it is not right to tax these $500,000,000 securities of the farmers' Federal farm system while at the same time we let $16,000,000,000 of other securities go free and continue to be exempt from taxation. We must not start on the farmer first. [Applause.]

Farming is the basic industry of our Nation. When the farmer is prosperous, the merchant, the business man, and the local bank will be prosperous, and this, in turn, works all the way up to the most crowded industrial center. The distribution of even two or three hundred millions of dollars to the farmers in one year through the Federal farm loan system would probably mean a liquidation of five times that amount in frozen credits to-day. This would mean over a billion dollars of credit liquidation in our country which would mean the beginning of business activity and permanent prosperity. It is absolutely essential that we aid the tiller of the soil to produce, sell, and buy, and thus start our stagnant industries in operation and put our idle millions to work. [Applause.]

I desire to call the attention of the man who may object to raising the interest rate from 5 per cent to 5½ per cent, because of the possible depressing effect it may have upon our United States Liberty bonds, to the fact that the Government in financing itself has already produced this condition in issuing its certificates of indebtedness for short periods at 5½ per cent and for longer periods at 5½ per cent. Indeed, in issuing the Liberty bonds themselves we find the rates increasing with each issue, from 3½ per cent in the first issue to 4½ per cent in the Victory issue, and, as Mr. Mitchell of the Federal Reserve Board stated before the committee, he did not believe that this bill would affect in any marked degree the value of the present United States Liberty bonds already issued.

Therefore, in view of the fact that this bill as an emergency measure has the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, the Federal Farm Loan Board, members of the Federal Reserve Board, and the various farm organizations, I believe that the House should, to-day, pass this bill (S. 1811) as amended by the Committee on Banking and Currency of the House, in order that we shall furnish the relief necessary to our agricultural interests, and make it possible for the Federal farm loan system to function to its maximum capacity.

In closing, I desire to express my high appreciation of the splendid personnel of the Federal Farm Loan Board. We have in Hon. C. E. Lobdell and Hon. A. F. Lever men of wide experience and deep fundamental knowledge of the needs of the agricultural interests of our country, and Congress should not hesitate to furnish them every means possible to make this system function to its maximum capacity. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. A. P. NELSON. I wish to insert here some very interesting facts and figures gathered from the census reports by the Washington Herald economist:

The new census report on the mortgage debt of farms has timely interest in connection with the discussion of the financial status of agriculture. The question arises, Is the farm industry increasing or decreasing its borrowed capital, and what is the significance of the change?

Census figures are not very satisfactory on this subject because of a change of basis in each of recent census years and the fact that the returns on mortgage debt covers only farms operated by owners and leaves out all farms operated by managers and tenants. The reports show that of the total number of farms operated by owners, which was 3,925,090 in 1920, only 3,535,847 reported as to whether they were mortgaged or not. This is just a little more than half of the total of 6,448,366 farms in the country.

The census leaves much to be estimated on this subject, but a comparison of the last four census reports gives some idea of the direction that farm capitalization is taking in the form of mortgage indebtedness.

The new census shows that while the value of the farms reporting the indebtedness has increased 117 per cent the amount of the debt in these same farms has increased 132 per cent. The ratio of debt to value has increased from 27.3 per cent in 1910 to 29.1 per cent in 1920. This indicates a considerable growth in the amount of debt carried, which is shown more clearly in the average debt per farm, which increased from $1,715 in 1910 to $3,361 in 1920.

An increase in mortgage indebtedness is not necessarily an indication of lack of prosperity. It rather is an indication of a changing point of view toward the mortgage. Once regarded as an instrument to be avoided and removed at the earliest possible moment by the adoption of every possible economy, it is now coming to be regarded as the form in which a farmer may hold invested capital in his individual enterprise. So long as the rate of interest is reasonable and the terms favorable the mortgage may be continued for several years by even the most careful operators, so long as they can use their profits better as operating capital improvements or in other investments.

The per cent of farms mortgaged is high in some of the most prosperous agricultural States, the west north central region leading with an average of 56.9 per cent. At the same time the amount of the debt in relation to value was lowest in this same section.

In total amount of debt per farm Iowa leads with $9,358; then Nevada, $8,499; Nebraska, $7,042; South Dakota, $6,412; California, $6,001; Arizona, $5,441; and Illinois, $4,385.

The total value of land and buildings on farms is put at $67,795,965,884, or an increase of 94.8 per cent over 1910. The number of farms reporting debts being only 41 per cent of the total, it may be roughly estimated that the total mortgage debt of all farms is something like twice the amount reported or nearly $8,000,000,000. A survey several years ago by the Department of Agriculture placed the total of mortgage loans at about $3,500,000,000. If the debt has increased as have the values the present total is somewhere near to the $8,000,000,000 mentioned.

This estimate is only of value in comparing the borrowed capital used in agriculture with other industries. The total railway capital reported by the Interstate Commerce Commission for 1918 was $20,784,000,000, which included $9,992,000,000 in bonds and $9,055,000,000 in stocks, each more than equaling the total mortgage debt on farms.

The growth of farmers' debt, as represented by mortgages, reflects the change in the organization of farms to an enterprise requiring more borrowed capital and credit. Considered in relation to the total value of farms and the annual value of products this amount of indebtedness is not necessarily alarming. As this debt grows, however, there is an increasing fixed charge against agricultural production in the interest which must be reflected in the cost of production.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, the only hesitancy I have had about giving my support to this bill has been upon the question of its necessity. When the proposition came before the Committee on Banking and Currency, of which I am a member, I did not want to vote for it until I heard from the Farm Loan Board and the Secretary of the Treasury as to the necessity for the legislation. But as soon as the proof was before us that the joint-stock land banks and the Federal land banks were unable to market their bonds in a way that would enable them to do business along normal lines, and with some regard to the demands upon them, I had no further doubt as to the wisdom of the legislation. It is simply a practical, common sense, business proposition. The land banks are in just such a situation as has confronted the commercial banks of the country in recent months, and we should have been shocked if we had been faced with legislative restrictions and provisions that would have forced the commercial banks to stop business last year when interest rates went up beyond what anybody anticipated or expected. Fortunately, there were no restrictions that hampered them in the right to borrow money to carry on their business, and so they went ahead and took care of the situation as best they could.

All that the Federal Farm Loan Board asks is that they be permitted to market the securities of the land banks at such rates of interest as will attract the investing public. There has never been such a demand for money before. Nobody could anticipate the situation that now exists when we passed the land bank bill originally. Nobody dreamed of all that has happened since then. The Secretary of the Treasury has raised the interest rates on Government borrowings and I do not wish to criticize him for it at all. I am not sure but that the interest rates on bonds heretofore should have been higher. I know that patriotic men who bought them should not be forced to lose their money. There are going to be large quantities of securities put on the market in the next few years. We are told the War Finance Corporation is going to float vast amounts of securities. Probably all this was considered by the Secretary. It is very easy to criticize the Secretary of the Treasury. But there is a great deal of thoughtless criticism by people who do not have all the information sometimes that those charged with great responsibilities may have. In any event, what we should do is to deal intelligently with the existing situation and not confuse it with other matters.

It is said that this legislation is a special favor extended to the farmer. I might answer that by saying that if that is true the original farm loan act was a special favor to the farmer, and we did grant them certain benefits, but that matter was dealt with in the establishment of the banks originally. The question of tax-exempt securities has very little legitimate place in the argument on this bill. This system is in operation. It has the sanction of Congress. We have put our hands to the plow and we ought to go along and do the things that sensible business men all recognize as necessary in order to make these banks function along the lines intended, or if we made a mistake or committed a folly, we ought to turn around and repeal the law in its entirety and quit. Not only is that true, but if we do not want any more tax-exempt securities in this country there is a perfectly proper way by which the Congress can go about dealing with that question, but this is not the place and this is not the time for such action. If anyone wants any legislation like that, any Member of this House is at liberty to introduce his bill and have it considered in the regular way. There is a time for it, but what we ought to do now is to deal with the situation that exists. The bill before us recognizes that the necessity for this legislation may not be permanent, because the Banking and Currency Committee of the House adopted an amendment to the bill which limits its operation till June 30, 1923. Not only is that true, but nowhere in the bill is provision made that the interest rates must be raised. We simply give to the Federal Farm Loan Board the power and authority to apply common-sense business rules in a practical way in the operation of this system, and when they go out to sell bonds on the market we clothe them with authority to deal with the investing public on terms that will enable them to compete with others who are in the borrowing market, seeking to obtain money.

It is a simple, plain business proposition. The original farm loan act provides that no bonds shall be sold at a higher rate of interest than 5 per cent, and that no loans shall be made at a higher rate of interest than 6 per cent. The banks find themselves in a situation where they may be forced to pay higher rates of interest if they are to operate successfully. In any event, this is true of the joint-stock land banks. As to the Federal land banks, members of the Federal Farm Loan Board do not believe it will be necessary to pay as high as 5½ per cent. But they state that it is difficult to sell the bonds at 5 per cent, and they think it will be necessary to pay a little more than that until conditions become more nearly normal. We ought to close up the banks and quit or follow up this legislation, which is comparatively new in this country, with such amendments and changes as are necessary to meet changing conditions and make it possible for these banks to do business as Congress intended they should. If conditions had been what they are now, no Member of this House would have considered for a moment putting the restrictions and limitations in the original farm loan act which it contains. It was intended when the act was passed to fix the maximum interest at which bonds might be sold high enough to leave ample margin to make sure the board would be able to market the bonds without difficulty. If we were to undertake to amend the law at this time in a way to allow the same latitude that was intended to be allowed in the original bill, we would have to fix the maximum rate of interest on the bonds higher than 5½ per cent and raise the rate of interest to be charged the farmers to a higher rate than 6 per cent. But it is not proposed to go any further than the necessities of the situation absolutely require. It is only proposed to raise the maximum rate which may be paid on the bonds to 5½ per cent and at the same time provide definitely that the rate of interest to be charged borrowers shall not be increased. I agree with the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. Wingo] that legislation should be passed authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to carry deposits with the land banks to the amount of $100,000,000, in order that they may have at all times sufficient working capital with which to sell their bonds by keeping them continually on the market and not depend upon occasional bond sales in which the purchasers have advantage.

I have introduced a bill, which is now before the Banking and Currency Committee, giving authority to the Secretary of the Treasury to make such deposits to the extent of $100,000,000, and I sought before the Banking and Currency Committee and before the House to increase the amount carried in the bill recently passed which authorized the Secretary of the Treasury to make such deposits to the extent of $25,000,000. But, no matter how ample might be the capital stock of the banks or how large a revolving fund might be provided, it would still be necessary for them to pay necessary interest on any bonds sold to induce the investing public to take them. The bill before us simply undertakes to do that very thing.

Some gentlemen are always shocked for fear a special favor will be done the farmers of the country when any legislation is offered in which they are primarily interested. So far as I can remember there was never a cry heard against tax-exempt securities until the farmers began to receive some slight benefit from them. There are some fifteen billions or more tax-exempt securities that have already been absorbed, and yet the land banks have only sold between four and five hundred million dollars of such securities. I fail to see any basis for the charge of favoritism to the farmers in legislation which simply provides that the investing public shall receive higher interest rates for money loaned. There is no favoritism in this bill, unless it be for those who have idle capital seeking investments. I do not question that the farmers of the country will receive benefits from this legislation. I feel absolutely sure they will. But, in helping them we shall in turn afford some measure of relief to bankers, merchants, and other classes whose prosperity is dependent upon the success of the farmers. There is no excuse for any man to oppose this bill, unless he is opposed to the farm loan system. There are a few such Members in this House, but I do not believe they can win a majority to their way of thinking. [Applause.]

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I do not think there is any substantial ground of argument against the merits of this bill, and I assume there will be no difficulty about its passage. I think the legislation is very important in view of the interest rate situation in the country as to other investment securities, and in view of the urgent necessity of the farm loan system functioning as contemplated by the farm loan act. In looking over some farm statistics this morning, I saw that the recent compilations by the Department of the Census disclose that the 1920 census shows there has been an increase in tenantry in the United States of a little over 100,000 since 1910, or something more than 4 per cent, and that the decrease in farms cultivated by their owners has been a little more than 23,000, or about six-tenths of 1 per cent. That makes a better showing, perhaps, than we have anticipated, and yet it is not a satisfactory showing. The showing will not be satisfactory until the pendulum definitely swings back the other way and an actual decrease in tenantry is shown. Therefore the effort on the part of Congress and those who have to do with our national finances ought to be to extend every reasonable and practical encouragement to home ownership, so that by 1930 the census will show an actual, substantial increase in the number of men who own their own farms and live under their own "vine and fig tree."

If there is any one institution that has thoroughly vindicated the wisdom of its creation, it is the farm loan system. War conditions presented many difficulties and obstacles, but the system has operated successfully in spite of these, and in my judgment is now firmly established as a part of the fiscal machinery of the Nation. The most recent report I have seen from the Farm Loan Board shows that up until the present time about 131,000 loans have been made, and the aggregate value of these net mortgage loans was $356,106,112.48, and the average of such loans was something more than $2,800 each. The joint-stock land banks have loaned something more than $80,000,000, and the aggregate number of their loans was about 8,300, making an average, therefore, for each of their loans of between nine and ten thousand dollars. There is a proposition which is being advocated with considerable energy by some of the farm organizations of the country to increase the loan limit from $10,000 to $25,000.

In my judgment it would be a great mistake to make that change. I think the farm organizations which are advocating it are showing very poor judgment. Their position is unsound. The soundness of the farm loan system from an economic point of view rests upon the very showing that it is able to make, to wit, that this money which is being mobilized under Government supervision and with the advantage of tax exemption has not been loaned to just a few farmers but has been loaned to 131,000 of them, and in sums of about $2,800 each, on the average. This very showing is the strongest argument that can be made for the system and is the very best evidence of the wisdom of those who are operating the system. It would be a very difficult matter to justify the tax-exempt feature of farm loan bonds, even as to the bonds issued by the 12 Federal farm loan banks, unless we could show a wide distribution of the loans and that they are made in small amounts. This, I am happy to say, we can do, and I would not want to see it otherwise. I think the joint-stock land banks would do a great deal better if we would put a limitation on their loans of, say, $20,000, not more than that on the outside. What is the situation that now confronts us? Why is it necessary to amend the law so that bonds can be issued bearing a rate of as much as 5½ per cent rather than the 5 per cent limit which now prevails? The reason is simply this: Other Government securities, other securities issued by commercial enterprises, are so attractive in interest rates that it is very doubtful whether the Farm Loan Board would be able to float another bond issue at 5 per cent. At least it should have some leeway in the matter of fixing the interest rate on its bonds if it finds the condition of the bond market requires such change. One of the ablest opponents of the present bill was Mr. E. D. Chassel, secretary of the Farm Mortgage Bankers' Association of America. He filed a brief with the committee, and, in my judgment, there are certain parts of his brief which are the strongest possible argument for the adoption of the present bill. I read now from his brief, which he filed with our committee:

At the present time United States securities can be purchased to yield 5½ per cent. The security on both principal and interest is absolute. Municipal securities can be purchased in large quantities, exempt from Federal income tax, to yield 5½ per cent and 6 per cent, sometimes more than 6 per cent; school bonds in Iowa can be purchased to yield 5½ per cent and 6 per cent.

In the face of these market conditions it does not seem at all probable that the passage of this act would open up a market for these bonds. The price would not be sufficiently high to overcome the objections that would be raised by careful investigating investors.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Is not the purpose of passing this legislation to meet that situation?

Mr. BLACK. Yes; and Mr. Chassell makes, in the section of his brief which I have just read, the strongest kind of an argument why we should adopt this bill, because if we do not adopt it, in my judgment, the system is bound to encounter real difficulties.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. And securities will not be marketed.

Mr. BLACK. They probably could not be unless interest rates decline from their present level, because we can not conscript capital. We must induce capital to invest. That is the basic purpose of the farm loan act. In last night's paper I saw where the War Finance Corporation contemplates an issue of a considerable amount of bonds at an interest rate of 5½ per cent, the maximum that we provide here.

Mr. Chairman, the figures given out by the Director of the Census recently show that in 1920 the aggregate value of farms in the United States, including land and permanent improvements, was $77,000,000,000, this being by far the largest of any other one industry. Of this capital the farm owner has anywhere between 85 and 90 per cent of his own individual capital invested in the enterprise and is, therefore, only drawing on the credit resources of the country for between 10 and 15 per cent of his capital investment. What other industry can make so good a showing? None. The value of the railroads has been fixed by the Interstate Commerce Commission tentatively at $18,900,000,000, and of this value about $10,000,000,000 is represented in bonded indebtedness, or more than 50 per cent of the valuation. I do not cite these figures in a spirit of hostility to the railroads, but only as an illustration to show how much more heavily other industries draw on our Nation's credit resources than does farming. It is perfectly reasonable and proper, therefore, for Congress to enact legislation which will at least give the farmer a fair chance to secure his part of the funds available for loans.

Now, how can we expect the Federal farm loan system to go into the money market and compete with an interest rate lower than the current market rate, giving due consideration, of course, to the tax-exempt feature of the bonds? We can not expect that. It would be unreasonable for us to expect it. If we fail to adopt an amendment of this kind there would be a danger of the system coming to a halt or of the Federal Farm Loan Board having to come to the Congress to buy its bonds out of the Treasury of the United States, and I am opposed to that. I want the system to function from now on on its own resources. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the proposition before us seems to be a very simple one. We can fix the rate of interest upon bonds which we authorize somebody to sell, but we can not fix the rate of interest which we require investors to take. You can not loan money through farmers' organizations unless you secure the money. In order to secure the money, you must consider the money market, the rate of interest at which investors will furnish the money. That is all there is to it. If you refuse to put the rate sufficiently high to get the money from investors, you can not loan it, because you have not got it, and this proposition simply is that if the farmers' organizations are unable to secure the money from investors at a 5 per cent interest rate they may increase the interest rate, if necessary, to 5½ or 5¾ per cent.

The interest rate, in my opinion, ought to be eliminated entirely. It is a matter of money market. If we want to prevent further loans by the farm-loan organizations, we can refuse to permit them to raise the interest rate, because the interest rate having been raised on money elsewhere throughout the world—throughout every other industry and enterprise—the probabilities are that they can not secure the money at 5 per cent. And it is far better for the farmer to get money at 5 or 5½ per cent than it is to do without it. That is all we have to consider. [Applause.]

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. REAVIS].

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I share the apprehension of those who have expressed some doubt as to the efficacy of this bill. I am hopeful, however, that it will meet the situation in some degree, and for that reason I will cordially give it my support. I am in principle opposed to tax-free securities as much as anyone can be. I believe it is unscientific; that it violates every proper theory and principle of finance. I have long felt that one of the troubles with the credit of this country was the conspiracy that existed between tax-free securities and the high surtaxes of the late revenue bill. I saw a statement not long since—I can not vouch for its accuracy or correctness—that if one had a principal sum which at 5 per cent interest would yield $150,000 in income a year, that that principal invested in tax-free securities at 5 per cent under the present revenue laws of the country would return a greater net revenue than the same money invested in the ordinary securities at 15 per cent; that the surtaxes would take so much from the ordinary investment that his net return at 15 per cent would be less than the return at 5 per cent in tax-free securities. The result of a situation of that kind, of course, is that money seeks investment in tax-free securities where it is loaned by men of great wealth and, seeking such character of investment, will naturally be withdrawn from the credits of the country so necessary to the great industrial institutions, to the railroads, and to enterprises of like character.

But whenever a man comes on the floor of the House of Representatives and preaches tax-free securities as a reason for the defeat of a bill of this kind, he is doing nothing more nor less than arguing for the defeat of the farm loan system. [Applause.] The only thing that this Congress can reach by legislation of that character would be Government bonds and farm-loan bonds. The only way you can reach municipal and the great aggregate of tax-free securities in the ordinary investment would be by constitutional amendment and not by legislation. Consequently the only thing that this House could do, the only thing that this Congress could do, with reference to stopping the issuance of the great aggregate of tax-free securities, would not be on some little measure of this kind, but would be by constitutional amendment that would shut out, not alone the credit of the farmer but shut out all credits in the way of a tax-free security.

We now have the spectacle of those who for years have been building their magnificent cities by the issuance of tax-free securities complaining about a tax-free security when furnished as a credit to the great agricultural sections of this country. We have those who have issued 97 per cent of all the tax-free securities of America complaining about the 3 per cent issued for the benefit of the farmer. I want to say to this—the Democratic—side of the House that in my humble judgment one of the most serviceable pieces of legislation that marked the administration of President Wilson, and one of the most serviceable pieces of legislation that was ever passed by an American Congress, was the farm loan act. [Applause.] It was one of the great constructive things that was done by that Congress. It furnished to a great class of our citizenship the only character of security that met its need. Every other business activity, every other industry, had some institution that extended to it a credit in harmony with the business it pursued. The farm loan act granted to the agricultural interests of this country not only a great boon, but it will contribute to the life of the Nation as much as any law that ever passed this body during its existence. [Applause.]

One hundred and forty thousand farmers have taken advantage of its beneficent provisions. The average loan is $2,800, which discloses that the man of small means is applying himself industriously toward the acquisition of a home. This process long continued will materially reduce tenancy in the land, and no greater benefit than this can be conferred on any Government. To continue a maximum interest rate of 5 per cent on these bonds means that the bonds will not find a market and the farm loan act will fail to function. We should either pass this bill or repeal the law, and I can not believe that any Member, in view of the results of the law, would countenance the thought of repeal.

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TINCHE].

Mr. TINCHE. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, it is a little surprising that every time a bill comes up which by any construction the farmer can have a benefit there is always some one in the House of Representatives to charge that the farmers are seeking special class legislation. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] made my speech. Talk about class legislation! You say to the farmer, "Here is an institution that can loan you money." You say to the business man, "Here is an institution that can loan you money." On the Federal reserve bank there is no limitation of interest. That is the bank that loans the factories of the gentleman from Vermont their money, but when the farm bank asks to have the rate of interest that a bond can draw increased from 5 to 5½ per cent, so that they can function in these extraordinary times, the gentleman says you are asking for class legislation. Talk about class legislation! I took the trouble to go and look at the Record, after the gentleman from Pennsylvania made his short talk and the interruptions indicated the views of Members on this floor toward this measure, to see how they voted when the farm-loan bank proposition was up for consideration. And I found that those men who are charging here to-day that the farmer is asking for a preference cast a record vote against the creation of the farm-loan bank, and they are fighting it to-day as they did then. How they get excited about this thing!

Mr. McFADDEN. Does the gentleman include me in that category?

Mr. TINCHER. No. I did not look to see how the gentleman voted.

Mr. McFADDEN. I will say to the gentleman that I voted for it.

Mr. TINCHER. I am glad the gentleman in his younger days had lucid intervals. [Laughter.] I am very glad to hear it.

I am frank to say to you I do not like tax-free securities. I think they are an evil.

I say they are an evil. But less than 3 per cent of the non-taxable securities of this country are held by the Federal farm loan banks or the joint-stock land banks. That is a great place to start the reform.

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINCHER. Yes.

Mr. REAVIS. Did you ever hear of protests against the issuance of tax-free securities here until the farmer got the benefit of a few of them?

Mr. TINCHER. No; not until he got 3 per cent of them. Oh, how I sympathize with men down Wall Street way, when they rise every time a thing like this comes up, and wonder how is it going to reduce the price of Government bonds, and how will it affect them. It does not matter how it affects them. They bought most of them from poor people at less than par, and eastern institutions now have them for sale at prices ranging from 80 to 90 cents. Do not get excited; do not fix it so that the West can not keep on feeding you and taking care of you and hold these bonds until they mature, and then this Government will still be solvent and the bonds will be paid 100 cents on the dollar. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TINCHER] has just referred to certain incidents in connection with the passage of the farm loan act in 1916. The argument that was presented for this legislation at that time was that it would help the landless farmer, the tenant farmer, the poor farmer, to acquire a farm.

Now, pressing closely on the heels of this special legislation, I want to say to members of the committee there is another bill that is just as pressing, backed by the same interests as are behind this, and that is the bill proposing to raise the limit on farm loans from $10,000 to $25,000. You gentlemen will probably be asked to vote on that coming bill at a very early date. Had that proposal been presented at the time of the inception of the Federal farm loan act, the Federal farm loan act would never have been passed by Congress, because the argument that prevailed, and which was agreed to by all, was that they wanted to help the poor fellow, the little fellow, the tenant farmer, and the landless man.

Now, there are, as I stated here a few moments ago, some $200,000,000 or $300,000,000 worth of applications waiting to be handled. The Farm Loan Board say they can only sell $40,000,000 or $50,000,000 worth of bonds every four months. You will see it will take a little time to get sufficient money to take care of the applications already on file, and I submit to you that it is a great deal better for the farm loan system to serve 10 small farmers than one big farmer. [Applause.] In order for the farmer to borrow $25,000 he has got to have farm assets acceptable under the law to the extent of between $50,000 and $60,000. I submit that that man should not deprive the little man, the tenant farmer, or the landless man of his right to acquire land and earn a livelihood; but if you increase this limit to $25,000, that is exactly what you do—help one man who is able to help himself and deprive 10 poor men of loans who need help most.

I want to throw out the suggestion to you gentlemen here now, because this coming legislation is being pressed, and without doubt Congress will be called upon to vote upon it at a very early date. As I recall it, the Senate has already passed this measure. So on the heels of this pending measure will come the passage of this other bill; and you may be wondering, in that connection, if that bill is passed, whether the farm loan system will take care of the big fellow or the little applicant first.

I said this morning that the passage of this pending legislation would give the bankers' syndicate, who are selling these bonds, an advantage over the Farm Loan Board in making negotiations for the next sale of their securities. I believe that the debate here has demonstrated the fact that it is the purpose in the next offering of farm loan bonds to offer them at 5½ per cent instead of 5 per cent.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. In a moment. The Farm Loan Board has just consummated a sale of $40,000,000 of these bonds at 5 per cent, and I am told that to-day the market price on these bonds, the last issue sold, is around 101.

Now I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BLANTON. Why not, when the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States is offering $200,000,000 worth of securities for five and three-fourths?

Mr. McFADDEN. These are longer-time securities, and will command in the market a higher price because of this fact, and they have other attractive features that the United States bonds do not offer.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. Certainly.

Mr. STEAGALL. I think the gentleman is in error in stating that the bonds will all be sold at 5½ per cent. As I remember, the statement was repeatedly made that they had every reason to expect that they would not go to the maximum of 5½ per cent to market the Federal farm loan bank bonds.

Mr. McFADDEN. I hope the gentleman is correct, and that the board may be able to do that, but the passage of this bill makes it harder for the board to drive such a bargain.

Mr. STEAGALL. That was the statement that they made.

Mr. McFADDEN. The Congress is specifically authorizing the board to pay a rate of 5½ per cent when it is well known that the board has been at the mercy of this syndicate of bankers in the past, it seems to me well and reasonable to assume that they will pay the exact 5½ per cent rate on the next issue sold.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania reserves the balance of his time.

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. STRONG].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, this bill simply increases the rate at which the farm loan banks and joint-stock banks may issue their bonds for two years. It does not increase the rate to the farmers. It only lessens the profit of the banks, but enables them to sell their bonds and obtain the money to loan to the farmers of the Nation.

I regret very much that there is any opposition to this bill. There ought to be none. However, ever since this farm loan system passed this Congress there has been a determined opposition to it. It has mostly come from the agents' bankers who are interested in the farm loan mortgage business. They have an association, and through that association they attacked this farm loan system in the courts, and they carried it to the Supreme Court of the United States and tied it up for two years. They caught the farm loan banks and the joint-stock banks with a lot of commitments; that is, the farm loan banks and the joint-stock banks had taken applications for mortgages and agreed to make them, and in many instances had placed the mortgages on record, and had no money to meet the commitments with. Congress voted $200,000,000 to relieve that situation of the farm loan banks, but the joint-stock banks had no such relief.

They have been borrowing of the banks throughout the country at 6 and 7 and 8 per cent to get the money to meet their commitments. The Supreme Court of the United States having declared the law legal upon which the banks are founded, they now come to Congress and ask us to increase the rate at which the law permits them to issue their bonds from 5 to 5½ per cent.

Gentlemen, of all the tax-free bonds issued the farm loan bonds are the only ones that are thus limited as to the rate of interest. Why should they be so limited? And when the Government is offering tax-free certificates at 5½ per cent, thereby making it impossible for the joint-stock land banks to float their bonds at 5 per cent, why is it not just and right to pass a bill to raise the rate in order to let them sell their bonds and get the money they need to meet their obligations and make new loans?

Whom will it benefit? Not alone the farmers, because many of the banks throughout the West and throughout the East also made loans to these joint-stock banks in order to enable them to meet their commitments, and this raising of the rate of interest will enable them to sell their bonds and provide the funds to return to the banks of the country the advances which they have made, thereby giving them that much relief. It will also provide relief for the farmers who are now having their loans foreclosed, because the loan companies and large estates now have more attractive loans offered them at higher rates of interest and will not renew at old rates of interest or make new loans at reasonable rates. There is a need now for relief for farmers of the West.

It seems to me that the objection to the tax-free feature of these bonds comes with very poor grace from the men who make that objection to the passage of this bill. There are $17,000,000,000 of tax-free bonds now held in the United States, and of this vast amount only $450,000,000 have been issued by the farm loan system. It seems to me this is certainly a bad time to cry out against the issuing of tax-free bonds when the farmer is asking for less than 5 per cent of the total issue of tax-free bonds.

I do not believe in tax-free bonds, and I shall be glad to join with the men who are talking against them now if they will introduce an amendment to the Constitution to wipe out all the tax-free bonds. But until you do that, gentlemen, do not overlook or approve the $16,550,000,000 of bonds issued by the cities, towns, counties, and States and Government of this country and then throw up your hands in horror at the idea of the farmers having $450,000,000 of like bonds issued for their needs.

There is also considerable opposition to this measure on the ground that it is claimed it will raise the rate of interest to borrowers throughout the country. A member of the Federal reserve system came before our committee, and in answer to a question said it would not interfere with the general interest rate, that we would not issue enough tax-free bonds at 5½ per cent through the Federal farm loan system to in any way affect the general interest rate. Besides, it simply meets the present emergency, being limited to two years.

The Secretary of the Treasury approves this bill. The Federal Reserve Board approves it. The Farm Loan Board came before our committee and approved it. Every financial agency of this administration has approved this bill. The only opposition before our committee came from the president of the bankers' farm loan organization, organized to fight the Federal farm loan system, and I am sorry there is any opposition here. There ought not to be any. This bill will bring some relief to the farmers of this country who need the credit so badly, and we ought to pass it unanimously. [Applause.]

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, have I any time left?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has one minute remaining.

Mr. WINGO. I wish the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McFadden] would yield me a little time.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has 15 minutes.

Mr. McFADDEN. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. Wingo] is recognized for four minutes.

Mr. WINGO. I think if gentlemen will reflect for a moment there will not be a vote against the bill. By voting against this bill do you want to put the joint-stock land banks out of business? As I said, I am against the joint-stock land banks, and have been from the beginning, but I think this is a bad time to undertake to close them up. We ought to keep every loaning agency going if possible. They are going to be compelled to pay 5½ per cent. Why? Because the War Finance Corporation is going to issue a large amount at 5½ per cent. The Secretary of the Treasury is going to be in the market with loans to offer at 5½ per cent in September. Now, how on earth do you expect these joint-stock land banks to be able to sell their securities at 5 per cent when there are going to be so many tax-exempt Government securities put out along about the same time at 5½ per cent?

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. Are the securities put out by the War Finance Corporation or the temporary securities put out by the Secretary of the Treasury tax exempt?

Mr. WINGO. Perhaps I may be in error, but as I recall they are practically on the same basis as most of the issues of Government bonds. I am not sure about that. I may not be accurate.

Mr. MANN. Most of the issues of Government bonds are tax exempt in small quantities only.

Mr. WINGO. Yes; only up to a certain amount of income. But regardless of whether they have complete tax exemption or not, the fact that these securities are going to be put out at 5½ per cent will swamp the absorbing power of the investment market.

Mr. CHALMERS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. CHALMERS. What does the gentleman think of limiting the 5½ per cent issue?

Mr. WINGO. There is a limitation of time. Does the gentleman mean a limitation of the amount?

Mr. CHALMERS. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. I do not think the amount ought to be limited, because they are not going to issue any more than they have to issue. This is really for the benefit of the joint-stock land banks. There is no use in deceiving yourselves. This is not going to benefit the Federal farm loan banks. If you will refer to the testimony of Mr. Lever you will find he said he believed they would be able to borrow at 5 per cent. I think they will, because since I addressed the committee I have referred to the current market report of this morning.

The last issue of Federal farm loan 5s, which have a 10-year option—and that is better than the 5-year option of the old issues—the market report states that on yesterday there was 100 bid and that the holders asked 101. I do not think we are going to have any trouble with the Federal farm loan cooperative banks, but the joint-stock land banks are absolutely facing the question whether they shall be able to go on doing any further business or whether they will have to go out of business. Now, that is all there is to it. I brought myself to this view of it, although I was opposed to it at first, but I think they ought not to shut them down at this time. Let them clean up and help the situation, because we are starting upward now. In passing I want to commend the statement that President Harding made to the country a day or two ago. He did the country a great service. The country listens to the President of the United States, and he pointed out certain facts that are of a cheerful nature and lead men to believe that the time has arrived when the country is starting upward and that a more stable financial condition is here. [Applause.]

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I am not opposed to proper aid to the farmer. I realize that they are in a critical situation. They need credit, and need it badly, but this special piece of legislation is going to aid them like other legislation that we have passed for the farmer. I have in mind the emergency tariff bill. [Applause on the Democratic side.] This holds out a promise to the farmers that this is going to help them, but it is a false promise.

Let us look carefully and see what we are doing. The purpose of this bill is to aid the joint-stock land banks to sell their bonds at par, which bonds are now on the market at 92 to 94, and the law compels the banks to sell their bonds at par, and they must not charge the borrower more than 1 per cent or one-half of 1 per cent higher than the last bonds sold for in the market. And these banks figure that if this bill passes they will be able to sell this issue at par. Now, it has been stated by these people who are in favor of the passage of this bill that it is very questionable whether the joint-stock land banks should be permitted to function at all. It is certainly a fact that if their present assets were computed at their actual value they would show capital impairment at the present time. They are a private institution with the tax-exemption privilege, and I think we want to stop and think seriously about this proposition before we take a vote on this bill on that account.

This shortage of capital of the farmers is a circle proposition. For many years western and southern farmers have been depending on the eastern money market for loans. The fact that the Government has gone into the money market, the fact that the Government is loaning money abroad, the fact that it provides tax-exempted securities, has tended to make the big insurance companies and private individuals who made loans to the farmers in the West and in the South call in their loans because we have presented them a more attractive investment field. That is one reason why the farmers at this time are being deprived of capital, because it is a well-known fact that the mortgages are being called and that the people who are calling them are investing the proceeds in tax-exempt bonds. The passage of legislation of this kind, in view of that situation, is to hold out aid that is problematical.

I doubt very much, if we pass this bill to-day, whether or not the joint-stock land banks will be able to sell their bonds at par, even with the additional authority. I think it is a question whether or not they will not be back here asking for relief from the Public Treasury and demanding that the Treasury buy an additional portion of their bonds. It has been stated by gentlemen here in debate that the War Finance Corporation is about to begin functioning and that several billion dollars' worth of securities are to be sold to the investing public. I have not the full facts on that, and I did not suppose that the War Finance Corporation was to issue securities; but if they are and they are to purchase railroad bonds now held by the Public Treasury, I can see no reason why the War Finance Corporation should not buy farm loan bonds as well. I seriously question the wisdom of that kind of legislation and procedure, because if the War Finance Corporation is permitted to function in that respect and is going to make these securities eligible for rediscount with the Federal reserve system when held by member banks—if we start in to inaugurate that kind of a system, we are going back to the wild expansion and inflation which we have been trying to do away with.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. In view of the fact that the gentleman from Pennsylvania has admitted the depressed condition of the farmers and expressed sympathy for them and has admitted that the emergency tariff bill does not help them and has expressed opposition to this legislation, I would like to ask the gentleman what remedy he would propose to save the farmers from bankruptcy?

Mr. McFADDEN. I do not think it is a matter of legislation; I do not think we can remedy it by legislation. If we will allow things to get back to normal conditions, the farmer can get the money that he is entitled to have.

Mr. ARENTZ. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes.

Mr. ARENTZ. I think the gentleman from Pennsylvania is consistent, because it is my belief that putting hides on the free list was due to a letter that was sent around to his colleagues by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. So he is naturally consistent in being in opposition to the farmers. [Laughter.]

Mr. McFADDEN. I do not believe I stand in opposition to the farmer.

Mr. DOWELL. The gentleman is protesting that he is his friend.

Mr. McFADDEN. I believe in passing legislation that will be a real benefit to the farmer, and I think in leaving the free-hide question in the bill, if the gentleman wishes to discuss that, that we have done the farmer the greatest amount of good that it is possible for the Congress to render.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the first paragraph of section 20 of the Federal farm loan act, as amended, be, and hereby is, amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 20. That bonds provided for in this act shall be issued in denominations of $40, $100, $500, $1,000, and such larger denominations as the Federal Farm Loan Board may authorize; they shall run for special minimum and maximum periods, subject to payment and retirement, at the option of the land bank, at any time after the minimum period specified in the bonds, which shall not be longer than 10 years from the date of their issue. They shall have interest coupons attached, payable semiannually, and shall be issued in series of not less than $50,000, the amount and terms to be fixed by the Federal Farm Loan Board. They shall bear a rate of interest not to exceed 5½ per cent per annum.

With the following committee amendment:

On page 2, line 6, after the word "annum" insert "but no bonds issued or sold after June 30, 1923, shall bear a rate of interest to exceed 5 per cent per annum."

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. When this bill came before the Committee on Rules I had read the statement of Judge Loddell in opposition to it. Having been a student of this character of legislation when it was up before the Congress in 1916, I took particular interest in it. I voted for the bill at that time, although I stated on the floor of the House when I did so that I did not think it would do any particular good to the State in which I live, but that there were other sections of the country that asked it, and I was of opinion that those sections would be benefited, and therefore voted for the bill. I have been afraid of much of the legislation along fiscal lines where there has been an effort on the part of the Government to create values that do not exist. It seems to me that we ought to be quite careful to follow the economic lines, and we should not attempt by statutory enactment to make valuable a thing which economically is not valuable. A policy of that kind is not good even in time of emergency.

I have looked into the provisions of this bill, and I really can not see the basis of objection lodged against it originally. I note that Judge Loddell even wrote a letter that his first impressions, which were adverse, had been somewhat modified. I think that is a legitimate statement of the position of many men in time of emergency. In war time, when values were so very abnormal, there were many exchanges of title made and mortgages given on unpaid balances, and these unpaid balances were so high and products have fallen to such a degree, that the value of the security is less than the amount of the mortgage given on the unpaid balances. I think that explains the startling statement made during the debate on the tariff bill that our farm mortgages had increased from $1,700,000,000 to over $4,000,000,000.

When that statement was made it startled me, for I had not up to that time seen it, but I noticed afterwards that it was verified. In undertaking to ascertain why that is so, I have come to the conclusion that with the high level of prices of everything many exchanges were made and many large mortgages were given for unpaid balances, and while the land is here and probably the value is here, the bottom went out of everything else when the war was over, and prices shrank, as, say from $1.90 for corn at that time to now about 34 cents. For that reason it strikes me that the farmer is in a pitiable situation, and if we can help him without violating economic principles, which would do him more harm than good, I am ready to do it.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman tell us whether he is supporting this bill? I do not catch his argument.

Mr. FESS. The gentleman will find out very soon. The gentleman is very aggressive to ascertain how other people stand. If the membership of the House will permit, I think this debate to-day has made a splendid contribution to one of the most imminent questions before the country, viz, the matter of tax-exempt securities. Some gentlemen have said that not until recently was there any objection to it. May I refer to a personal interest? As vice president of the constitutional convention of Ohio in 1912, I forced a reconsideration of the amendment that required the taxation of bonds in the State of Ohio, and did it in the face of the most tremendous fight which raged about that amendment that I know of in legislative history of which I have had anything to do. I think that the drift toward tax-exempt securities is not only unwise, but is seriously dangerous to the country. I agree with those who have thus spoken, that at this time that is not an argument against this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the right to object for a moment in order to state that I shall not object if the gentleman will tell us how he is going to vote on the bill.

Mr. KING. I can tell the gentleman from Texas how the gentleman from Ohio is going to vote. That is easily discerned from the gentleman's argument.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FESS. We are making this more inviting than it was before. That is the purpose of it. If we carry that out logically and extend it, it is going to be a very serious question, because we are inviting investment in securities upon which there is no tax. That is the trouble now with our taxation system.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. Yes.

Mr. McFADDEN. Is the gentleman aware that the State of California is now advertising for the purpose of getting ready to issue $500,000,000 worth of tax-exempt bonds with which to develop water power in the State?

Mr. FESS. I was not aware of that. The general drift toward tax-exempt bonds makes it easier for States to issue them now than ever before, because they get a better market than they ever did before. I think it is very serious. Of course, no one will object to the issuance of the first Liberty bonds tax free, because it was in time of war, and it was just the beginning and we did not know how freely our investors would take the bonds. It is true that the rate of interest was not high, but they were made tax exempt. It was in time of war, the world was on fire, and we had to have the money, and I do not think anyone ought to criticize that policy at that time, but we must not continue it. If this debate will call attention to the unwisdom of Congress further issuing this sort of security, and thus lead to a movement in the form of an amendment which the States shall ratify, taking away from the States the power so to issue tax-exempt bonds, a mighty good result will come from it.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. Yes.

Mr. PADGETT. The gentleman referred to its being a war policy to issue bonds exempt from taxation. It has always been the policy of the Federal Government to make its bonds exempt from taxation. It is not a war policy.

Mr. FESS. The gentleman does not mean that all of our "Liberties" are tax free?

Mr. PADGETT. They are free from taxes except Federal taxes on income.

Mr. GARNER. I think the gentleman means to say that all bonds in the past in time of peace and otherwise have been tax free.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. FESS. I did not understand the gentleman's question.

Mr. GARNER. I want to suggest this to the gentleman from Ohio in reference to what he suggests about a constitutional amendment. Does the gentleman believe that 36 States will ever agree to surrender the power to issue tax-free securities without the Federal Government at the same time surrendering its power to do so?

Mr. FESS. I do not think the States will agree. I remember very distinctly a gentleman appearing before the committee and the gentleman from Texas asking that specific question, and he said that the country through influence generally can induce the legislatures to agree to a tax-free amendment.

Mr. GARNER. I agree with the gentleman, but does not the gentleman think it is asking the States to go a long way when you ask them to surrender their power to exempt tax securities while at the same time the United States Government retains its power to issue tax-free securities?

Mr. FESS. That is not consistent, of course.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. I will.

Mr. BLACK. I will ask the gentleman if he does not think it would be wise if we continue the joint-stock land banks as a part of the farm loan system to limit their loans to a much lower limit than they now have the power to loan?

Mr. FESS. I do; I very distinctly believe we ought to do so. I voted to report the bill from the Rules Committee, and shall now vote for it in the hope that it will assist the agricultural interests, which have been and are still the greatest sufferers from the liquidation of war conditions.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Chairman, in 1916, during the Democratic administration, we enacted a law creating a system of farm loan banks in order that the farmer could borrow his money from 20 to 35 years at a low rate of interest, the principal to be repaid in small annual payments, thus being relieved of all renewal charges after the first year.

It was intended to enable farmers to pay off mortgages on their farms and to enable those who did not own land to buy homes on long term installment plan at a low rate of interest, not more than 6 per cent per annum, and in that way to acquire a home in a number of years for less than rents would have cost them.

It is generally conceded that it is one of the best and most serviceable laws that has ever been enacted by Congress. This is admitted by many of our colleagues on the Republican side of this Chamber. It has operated in the interest of the farmer and will continue to do so, and, incidentally, all the people of the Nation.

There are two branches of this banking system. One is operated upon the cooperative basis and called the Federal land bank. There are 12 in number, and they receive Government aid. The other system is known as joint-stock land banks and capital is subscribed by private individuals. There are 23 joint-stock land banks.

They were greatly interrupted by war conditions, for the reason that farm loan bonds could not be negotiated to an advantage while the Government was floating Liberty bonds. Besides, they were virtually suspended for 14 months, while the constitutionality of the act was being contested in the courts by its enemies. But even with all these interruptions more than 125,000 farmers have secured loans through this system, amounting to $450,000,000, the average loan being about $3,000, which shows that the loans are being made to the small farmers.

The Federal land banks have loaned $374,000,000. The joint-stock land banks have loaned $75,000,000. So it is now provided that the farmer may borrow his money for a long period of time at a low rate of interest without paying commissions to anyone. The law forbids these banks charging the farmer a commission. It was expected that the establishment and operation of these banks would stabilize the rates of interest on all loans on farms throughout the country and put out of business the loan sharks who had been preying upon the farmers by charging high rates of interest and commissions. Much has been accomplished in this direction in many parts of the country.

The law provides for the issuance of bonds by these banks bearing a rate of interest not exceeding 5 per cent per annum. The farmers' mortgages are used as collateral security for the bonds, and when sold proceeds are used in making more loans to the farmers.

The purpose of the bill now under consideration is to authorize the issue of bonds by these banks for the next two years bearing a rate of interest not exceeding 5½ per cent.

It has been clearly shown by statements of the members of the Federal Farm Loan Board, and others, that on account of the condition of the money market at this time that it is necessary for such bonds to bear 5½ per cent interest in order to be able to float them. So it is emergency legislation.

These banks can not function as they should without this authority. Let us pass this bill to-day. There should be no delay in its enactment into law. It will not increase the rate of interest on loans made by the banks to the farmer.

Both systems of these banks now have a capital stock of about $60,000,000.

We passed a bill recently which made provision for an increase of $25,000,000 capital. We undertook to make a greater increase, but that was as much as the majority party was willing to provide for at this time.

Applications for loans on file at this time amount to about $150,000,000. To meet the demands and needs of the farmer at this time it would be necessary to have a capital stock of $150,000,000. While this bill will not give all the relief needed, and which we would like to see provided, still it will do much good. The demand for loans at present is unprecedented, and probably greater than will ever be again.

Complaint has been made during the debate to-day that favoritism is shown by making the bonds of the farm-loan bank tax exempt. Whoever heard of complaints about tax-exempt securities until the farmers were given some advantage by such securities?

More than fifteen billion tax-exempt securities have been floated, and these land banks have issued less than $5,000,000 of such bonds. So there is no foundation for the charge that favoritism is being shown the farmers. This legislation will benefit the farmers, but in doing so it will also benefit merchants, bankers, professional men, and all other classes whose success and prosperity depends upon the farmer.

I was glad to aid in reviving the activities of the War Finance Corporation to assist in financing products for export. I favor that part of the bill now pending in the Senate directing the War Finance Corporation to loan the farm-loan bank $100,000,000. The farmers did not realize on the cotton crop of 1920 one-third that it cost to produce it. The banks are holding the notes and mortgages of these farmers and need their money. It will require two or three years for some of them to pay out of debt. So it is all important just now to provide the farm-loan banks with as much money as possible, so that they can loan to the farmer and enable him to pay the banks and avoid foreclosure of his mortgage and bankruptcy.

The American farmers are in very bad financial condition and great distress, and have been since last fall when there was such a sudden and unexpected falling off in the price of agricultural products, due to want of a market and not overproduction. It is the duty of the Government to extend to them a helping hand. I have and will continue to support and vote for every measure that will give relief to the farmers who feed and clothe the world. [Applause.]

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

I am for the bill under consideration because I believe it will afford some relief to the distressed farmers. It will enable many of them to procure much needed loans, and either save themselves from bankruptcy or be enabled to avoid selling their property at a great sacrifice. Taken as a whole, the farmers are perhaps experiencing the most trying and adverse conditions which they have ever undergone. They are not asking for any favors but simply a square deal.

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, it is a curious inconsistent philosophy that prompts some Members of the House to wail out here against legislation which they say proposes to interfere with natural economic laws, such as they insist this bill does, but which I deny; and yet those same Members only a few days ago voted for the Fordney protective tariff bill, which was the climax of all legislation ever enacted in this country calculated to interfere with natural laws and economic conditions, and which will go further toward destroying the law of supply and demand and toward creating artificial values. In fact, that is the very purpose of the said tariff bill. It is all right as applied to the manufacturers of the country, but it is all wrong as applied to the agricultural interests, according to the philosophy of those gentlemen. I can not understand why it is that many dwellers in cities have any such one-sided ideas with respect to farm productivity and prosperity. The people who dwell in the cities, if they but knew it, are more interested than the farmer in maintaining farm production and at reasonable prices, because those who still remain upon the farm will certainly produce enough to feed themselves; but if we reach a point, which we will sooner or later reach, if conditions continue, that those remaining upon the farms are not sufficient to produce enough for themselves and the rest of the people, it will be the city dwellers who will suffer and not those still on the farms. It is not the farmers' problem, but is the public's problem; not merely an agricultural proposition, but a national proposition.

A hundred years ago about 95 per cent of our population was rural. Even as late as 1880 about 70 per cent of our population resided on farms and in unincorporated villages. Now, considerably more than a majority of our populace dwell in cities and incorporated towns. In other words, the country has moved to town by leaps and bounds, and an overwhelming majority of the immigrants have located in the cities and industrial centers. This movement to the city, which is proceeding at an alarming rate, is a direct and inevitable result of the high protective tariff policy, which has enriched manufacturers and built up populous centers at the expense of the agricultural population. This policy has so impoverished the farmers and has so drawn on the agricultural labor supply that it has become a very serious problem not only to the farmer but to the consumer as well.

The farmer produced his last crops under the most expensive conditions, but has been obliged to dispose of them at deflated prices or not at all, with the result that the farmers of the country have sustained to date a total loss of $7,000,000,000. The farmer has not been getting a square deal. It is estimated that even in normal times the farmer only obtains 38 cents out of the industrial laborer's dollar, and that the industrial laborer only obtains 35 cents out of the farmer's dollar, but that business procures $1.27 out of both dollars of the farmer and the industrial laborer.

According to statisticians, during the past year the farmers of the country, some 45,000,000, including their families, with an investment of $80,000,000,000, not only made no return upon that investment or their labor but they operated at a loss, and during the same period of time the business interests of the country with only twice the investment of the farmers and with an infinitely less number employed made a profit of $20,000,000,000. The industrial laborers of the country, who have no investment in their vocations, in normal times receive more per capita than do the farmers of the country. And yet whenever any legislation is proposed even to give the farmer a fair chance some Members get up and make the argument to which I have referred. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. [Cries of "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SWEET. Mr. Speaker, I call up for consideration the conference report on the bill (H. R. 6611) to establish in the

It shall serve without compensation, and at least one of the members of such board shall be an ex-service man and a member of some war veterans' organization. The decision of such board, after hearing all the evidence presented by the offender and those charging a breach of the rules and regulations, shall be final."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 55: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 55, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"That for the purposes of this section every such officer, enlisted man, or other member employed in the active service under the War Department or Navy Department who was discharged or who resigned prior to the date of approval of this amendatory act, and every such officer, enlisted man, or other member employed in the active service under the War Department or Navy Department on or before November 11, 1918, who hereafter is discharged or resigns, shall be held and taken to have been in sound condition when examined, accepted, and enrolled for service, except as to defects, disorders, or infirmities, made of record in any manner by proper authorities of the United States at the time of, or prior to, inception of active service, to the extent to which any such defect, disorder, or infirmity was so made of record: Provided further, That an ex-service man who is shown to have an active pulmonary tuberculosis or neuropsychiatric disease (of more than 10 per cent degree of disability in accordance with the provisions of subdivision (2) of section 302 of the war risk insurance act, as amended) developing within two years after separation from the active military or naval service of the United States shall be considered to have acquired his disability in such service, or to have suffered an aggravation of a preexisting pulmonary tuberculosis or neuropsychiatric disease in such service, but nothing in this proviso shall be construed to prevent a claimant from receiving the benefits of compensation and medical care and treatment for a disability due to these diseases of more than 10 per cent degree (in accordance with the provisions of subdivision (2) of section 302 of the war risk insurance act, as amended) at a date more than two years after separation from such service, if the facts of the case substantiate his claim. This section shall be deemed to be in effect as of April 6, 1917."

When a person receiving total permanent disability benefits under a United States Government life policy (converted policy) recovers from such disability and is then entitled to continue a reduced amount of insurance, the director is hereby authorized and directed to transfer to the military and naval insurance appropriation all of the loss reserve to the credit of such policy claim except a sum sufficient to set up the then required reserve on the reduced amount of insurance that may be continued, which sum shall be retained in the United States Government life insurance fund for the purpose of such reserve."

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6611) to establish in the Treasury Department a veterans' bureau, and to improve the facilities and service of such bureau, and further to amend and modify the war risk insurance act, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

On amendment No. 1: This amendment strikes out the words "in the Treasury Department" and inserts the words "an independent," and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 2: This amendment inserts the words "under the President," and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 3: This amendment strikes out the words "an Assistant Secretary of the Treasury in addition to those otherwise provided by law" and inserts the words "appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate," and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 4: This amendment strikes out the word "and" and inserts the words "the director of the veterans' bureau," and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 5: This amendment strikes out the words "at the rate," and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 6: This amendment inserts the words "payable monthly," and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 7: This amendment inserts the words "now in the Treasury Department," and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 8: This amendment strikes out the words "director of the veterans' bureau" and inserts the words "director, subject to the general direction of the President"; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 9: This amendment inserts the word "said"; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 10: This amendment strikes out the word "that" and inserts the word "and"; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 11: This amendment strikes out the words "Secretary of the Treasury" and inserts the word "President"; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 12: This amendment strikes out the word "but" and inserts in lieu thereof a comma; and the House recedes, with amendment.

The action of the conferees on amendments Nos. 1 to 12, inclusive, adopts the consolidation policy of the House bill and provides that the governmental organizations for the benefit of the disabled ex-service men shall be consolidated in an independent bureau under the President. This amendment also provides that the director of the veterans' bureau shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The salary of the director is left at $10,000 per annum, the same as in the House bill.

On amendment No. 13: This amendment provides that the Federal Board for Vocational Education shall be abolished and all the powers and duties vested in such board shall be exercised by the director of the veterans' bureau. Section 3 of the House bill provides that the functions, powers, and duties conferred by existing law upon the Bureau of War Risk Insurance and the rehabilitation division of the Federal Board for Vocational Education shall be transferred to and made a part of the veterans' bureau. The House provision simply placed in the new bureau the rehabilitation division of the Federal Board for Vocational Education, which relates solely to vocational training for disabled ex-service men. The Senate amendment provides for transferring to the new bureau, not only the rehabilitation division which relates to vocational training for disabled ex-service men, but also the duties and powers vested in such board which relates to the promotion of vocational education in agriculture and the trades and industries, and cooperation with the States in the preparation of teachers of vocational subjects. The Senate amendment also transfers to the veterans' bureau the powers and duties vested in the board relative to vocational rehabilitation of persons disabled in industry or otherwise and their return to civil employment. The Senate amendment would transfer to this bureau duties and powers of the board which do not in any manner relate to the rehabilitation of disabled ex-service men. The veterans' division is established for the purpose of administering all governmental agencies which have to do with the veterans of the World War; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 14: This amendment provides that the powers and duties conferred, the appropriations made, and the rights of property acquired, and the obligation incurred under the hospitalization act of March 4, 1921, as amended, shall be transferred to the veterans' bureau. The Senate amendment transfers to the veterans' bureau $18,600,000 for the construction and remodeling of hospitals provided for in what is known as the Langley bill. The original act provided that the building and remodeling of hospitals should be performed under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury. The Treasury Department heretofore has had supervision over the construction of our public buildings. It would appear there is no good reason why a change should be made at this time, especially in view of the fact that the Treasury Department has already spent about six months in preparing plans and selecting sites; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 15: This amendment was made necessary after the Senate had adopted amendment No. 13 abolishing the Federal Board for Vocational Education, and transferring the powers and duties of the board to the veterans' bureau; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 16: This amendment was made necessary after the Senate had adopted amendment No. 13 abolishing the Federal Board for Vocational Education, and transferring the powers and duties of the board to the veterans' bureau; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 17: This amendment strikes from the House bill the provisions in regard to the commissioned personnel of the United States Public Health Service, which has been detailed or may hereafter be detailed to the veterans' bureau. The House recedes, with an amendment, striking out the words "and such other personnel as shall be added from time to time when such added personnel is employed for the same purpose and for performing the same or similar duties." The provision as it now stands provides that all commissioned personnel detailed or hereafter detailed from the United States Public Health Service to the veterans' bureau shall hold the same rank and grade and shall receive the same pay and allowances and shall be subject to the same rules for relative rank and promotion as now or hereafter may be provided by law for commissioned personnel of the same rank or grade or performing the same or similar duties in the United States Public Health Service.

On amendment No. 18: This amendment was made necessary after the Senate had adopted amendment No. 13 relative to abolishing the Federal Board for Vocational Education and transferring the powers and duties of the board to the veterans' bureau; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 19: This amendment gives the director the power to review the acts of the regional offices and sub-offices, and the House recedes with an amendment. The provision as it now stands gives the director the power to review the acts of the regional offices and sub-offices in case of an appeal under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the director. In other words, in case an appeal is not taken from the action taken at the regional office the action taken at the regional office will be final.

On amendment No. 20: This amendment provides that the director can terminate any regional office or suboffice when in his judgment this may be done without detriment to the administration of the act. The House bill provides that the regional offices and suboffices, with all authority to establish such offices, shall terminate on June 30, 1926. With this provision in the law the director is given authority to terminate any regional office or suboffice when in his judgment this may be done without detriment to the administration of the act; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 21: This amendment is a clerical change and refers to appropriations made after the act goes into effect; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 22: This amendment is a clerical change; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 23: This amendment was made necessary by the Senate adopting amendment No. 13, abolishing the Federal Board for Vocational Education and transferring the powers and duties of the board to the veterans' bureau; and relates to the act providing for cooperation with the States in the promotion of education in agriculture, trades, and industry, approved February 23, 1917; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 24: This amendment is made necessary because the veterans' bureau will be under the President and not located in the Treasury Department. It strikes out the words "Secretary of the Treasury" and inserts in lieu thereof the word "President"; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 25: This amendment is made necessary because the veterans' bureau will be located under the President and not in the Treasury Department; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 26: This amendment relates to the director inspecting private agencies that are doing hospital work for the veterans' bureau; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 27: This amendment provides that the head of the inspection service relative to hospitalization shall report to the director in the manner the director may prescribe the result of each examination of facilities and service, and shall recommend to him methods of standardizing such facilities and service; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 28: This amendment limits the work to be done in hospitalization, medical care and treatment for the beneficiaries of the veterans' bureau to the limits of appropriations made for carrying out the provisions of the paragraph. The House bill contained no such limitations; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 29: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 30: This amendment is practically the same as the House provisions. It is simply a question of wording; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 31: This amendment provides that the property and structures which may be acquired for hospitalization shall become a part of the permanent equipment of the veterans' bureau, or of some one of the now existing agencies of the Government. The House bill provided that the permanent equipment acquired for hospitalization purposes shall become a part of the permanent equipment of the now existing agencies of the Government. This amendment simply adds the veterans' bureau; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 32: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 33: This amendment strikes out the provisions of the House bill, which provide that the director of the veterans' bureau may contract with State, municipal, and private hospitals for such medical, surgical, and hospital services and supplies as may be required in the best interest of the beneficiaries under this act. The House recedes, with an amendment. The House bill provides that such contracts may be made for a period not exceeding 10 years. The amendment strikes out the word "ten" and inserts the word "five." With the exception of this amendment the provisions are now the same as in the House bill.

On amendment No. 34: This amendment provides that the President is authorized, if he deems necessary and advisable for the proper medical care and treatment of the beneficiaries under the act, to transfer to the director the operation, management, and control of specifically designated hospitals now under the jurisdiction of the United States Public Health Service, such hospitals when transferred to be used exclusively for the beneficiaries under this act, and shall be under the operation and control of the director for such period of time as the President may prescribe; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 35: This amendment provides that nothing in section 10 shall be construed to authorize a travel allowance to clerks or persons for transportation or subsistence outside of the district in which they are employed. In other words, this provision will guard against unusual and unnecessary travel allowance and subsistence expenses being incurred; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 36: This amendment provides that the penalties for the breach of the rules and regulations prescribed by the director for maintaining proper discipline at the hospitals shall not extend to a forfeiture by the offender of a portion of his compensation without an appeal to the director of the veterans' bureau; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 37: This amendment relates to an appeal from the decision of the hospital authorities or the director involving a forfeiture of a part of the offender's compensation to a board of three persons. The House recedes, with an amendment, striking out the words "Before any penalty for a breach of the rules and regulations which may be held to extend to a forfeiture by the offender of a part of his compensation shall be executed." The decision of such a board, after hearing of the evidence presented by the offender and those charging a breach of the rules and regulations, shall be final. This amendment is a part of section 11, which has reference to discipline in the hospitals.

On amendment No. 38: This amendment provides that if any inmate of a hospital maintained by the United States shall be ordered to undergo an operation, his protest, together with all the facts in the case, shall be submitted to the board of appeals hereinafter provided for. The ex-service man in a Government or private hospital can not be ordered to undergo an operation without his consent. This amendment appears to be unnecessary; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 39: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 40: This amendment does not materially change the House provisions. It is simply a question of wording; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 41: This amendment relates to an aggravation of a preexisting injury specifically noted at examination for entrance into or employment in the active military or naval service. It makes no material change in the House bill or the present law; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 42: This amendment makes no material change in the House bill or the present law; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 43: This amendment provides that a wound or injury received or disease contracted or an aggravation of a preexisting injury or disease for which hospital, medical, dental, surgical, and convalescent care and treatment and prosthetic appliances shall be furnished shall have been incurred in line of duty. This provision makes no material change in the provisions of the House bill. It is more in detail than the House bill; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 44: This amendment is a clerical change made necessary by the adoption of amendment No. 43; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 45: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 46: This amendment provides that no applicant who waived any right to exemption on account of an injury or disease, upon admission to the military or naval forces of the United States, shall be entitled to the benefits of this section in case of an aggravation of such injury or disease incurred in line of duty. The provision last aforesaid shall not apply to officers, enlisted men, or members of the military or naval forces assigned to combat service. This provision would be difficult of administration, and would appear to be unnecessary; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 47: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 48: This amendment provides that the director in filing his report with the Clerk of the House and the Secretary of the Senate shall set forth the nature and terms of all contracts made under the authority of this act, and the names and principal place of business of the parties thereto. It simply requires the director to make a more elaborate report than required by the House provisions; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 49: This amendment provides that any person who shall knowingly make or cause to be made or conspire, combine, aid or assist in, agree to, arrange for, or in any wise procure the making of a false or fraudulent affidavit, declaration, certificate, statement, voucher, or other paper in connection with his claim for compensation shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned for not more than one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment for each such offense. It would appear that some such provision is necessary and salutary in the administration of the act; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 50: This amendment is a clerical change. The word "President" is stricken out and the word "director" inserted; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 51: This amendment does not change the intent of the House provision. It is a rewording; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 52: This amendment does not change the intent of the House provision. It is simply a rewording; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 53: This amendment is a clerical change; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 54: This amendment strikes out the words "or aggravation has been caused by his own willful misconduct" and insert the words "was intentionally contracted or aggravated." The language used in the House bill—"caused by his own willful misconduct"—has appeared in almost every pension and war risk insurance act passed by Congress. It has been repeatedly construed, and it is not deemed wise to make the change proposed by the Senate amendment; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 55: This amendment limits the presumption of soundness of men accepted for service. The wording of the House bill excludes from the presumption of soundness those who entered the service after November 11, 1918, and who have suffered injury and have already been discharged. It also provides that in case of pulmonary tuberculosis or neuropsychiatric disease developing within two years after separation from the active military or naval service of the United States, the ex-service man shall be considered to have acquired his disability in the service; and the House recedes, with an amendment. It has been difficult for many young men in cases of pulmonary tuberculosis and neuropsychiatric diseases to prove that their disability had been acquired while in the active service. The amendment gives the ex-service man the benefit of the presumption that if he develops pulmonary tuberculosis or any neuropsychiatric disease within two years after separation from the active military or naval service, he shall be considered to have acquired his disability in the service. The amendment also provides that at a date more than two years after separation from such service, if the facts of the case substantiate his claim he will be entitled to compensation, providing his disability is rated at more than 10 per cent, in accordance with the provisions of subdivision 2 of section 302 of the war risk insurance act, as amended.

On amendment No. 56: This amendment provides that if a disabled person is so helpless as to be in constant need of a nurse or attendant, such additional sum shall be paid, but not exceeding $50 per month, as the director may deem reasonable. The law now provides $20 per month, and this proposed amendment would increase the amount from $20 to $50 per month; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 57: This amendment is a clerical change; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 58: This amendment simply adds the words "but not earlier than the date of discharge or resignation." No person is entitled to compensation under the war risk insurance act until after separation from the service; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 59: This amendment is a clerical change; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 60: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 61: This amendment is a clerical change; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 62: This amendment provides that in case of a reassignment by the Government to a beneficiary or his personal representatives of a cause of action against a third party the beneficiary must waive all claims to compensation against the United States under this act or any amendments thereto. It appears that this amendment is unnecessary and would in a measure defeat the purposes of the paragraph amended; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 63: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 64: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 65: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 66: This amendment strikes out all of section 406, and the section is reworded in amendment No. 67; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 67: This amendment rewords section 406 in accordance with suggestions received from the Secretary of the Treasury and the Secretary of War; and the House recedes with an amendment. Under the original war risk insurance act it was specifically provided that the United States should bear the extra hazards of war. It was also specifically provided that any man carrying term insurance could convert it at any time without medical examination. The act of December 24, 1919, established for converted insurance a trust fund, to which the Government contributes nothing and which is made up wholly of the insurance premiums paid by the insured. The converted insurance premiums are figured out on a proper insurance actuarial basis and the fund is self-sustaining. Inasmuch as a policyholder had a right to convert his term insurance at any time, it was found that many policyholders, in very bad shape because of war hazards, converted their insurance three or four months before death. Then when they died the entire insurance was payable not by the United States but out of the United States Government life insurance fund. In other words, instead of the Government bearing the excess hazard, this matured trust fund, to which all the soldiers were paying premiums and in which they had a particular interest, because the smaller the loss the greater the dividends, was in fact bearing the unusual hazards. This section is proposed to correct this situation. The amendment also provides that where the entire loss is paid out of the military and naval appropriations, then so much premiums as may have been paid into the converted fund on that particular policy shall be credited to the military and naval appropriations.

On amendment No. 68: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 69: This amendment makes section 407 of the war risk insurance act retroactive to October 6, 1917; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 70: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 71: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 72: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 73: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 74: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 75: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 76: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 77: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 78: This amendment provides that all premiums, the payment of which when due is waived, shall bear interest at the rate of 5 per cent per annum compounded annually from the due date of each premium; and if not paid by the insured, shall be deducted from the insurance either because of total permanent disability or death; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 79: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 80: This amendment strikes out the words "Secretary of the Treasury" and inserts the words "director of the veterans' bureau." This change is made necessary owing to the fact that the bureau is under the President, instead of in the Treasury Department; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 81: This amendment strikes out the words "Secretary of the Treasury" and inserts the words "Treasurer of the United States." This is a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 82: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 83: This amendment adds a new section to the bill and will appear as section 22 of this bill. In the war risk insurance act it will be a new section added to Article III, to be known as section 315, and to read as follows:

"Sec. 315. That no person admitted into the military or naval forces of the United States after six months from the passage of this amendatory act shall be entitled to the compensation or any other benefits or privileges provided under the provisions of Article III of the war risk insurance act, as amended."

The House recedes with an amendment.

This amendment simply provides that after six months from the passage of this amendatory act no person admitted into the military or naval forces of the United States shall be entitled to compensation or any other benefits or privileges provided under the provisions of Article III of the war risk insurance act, as amended.

The House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the title of the bill, and agrees to the same. This amendment to the title of the bill is made necessary by reason of the veterans' bureau being placed under the President and not in the Treasury Department, as provided in the House bill.

SAMUEL E. WINSLOW,
JAMES S. PARKER,
BURTON E. SWEET,
ALBEN W. BARKLEY,
SAM RAYBURN,

Managers on the part of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa is recognized.

Mr. SWEET. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Fess].

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. SWEET. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I understand that this is a complete and unanimous report?

Mr. SWEET. It is.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The Senate has corrected the mistake it made yesterday in its passage?

Mr. SWEET. It has.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. What is there to do except adopt this conference report?

Mr. SWEET. That is all.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The conferees are discharged, the Senate having acted first?

Mr. SWEET. Yes. It is simply the question of adopting the report.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will not the gentleman move the previous question?

Mr. SWEET. I understand a number of Members would like to be heard.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a moment to enable me to answer the question of the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. CHALMERS. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that we vote on the bill and let gentlemen extend their remarks in the Record.

Mr. BUTLER. Let us have a vote.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Iowa yield?

Mr. SWEET. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. The Senate amendment, numbered 56, was added to this bill, which provided that "when an ex-service man is so helpless as to be in constant need of a nurse or attendant he should be allowed $50 per month to pay that attendant. The House conferees disagreed to that amendment and caused the Senate to recede from it, so that under the present situation of this conference report, if it is adopted as it is now, it will permit an ex-service man who is absolutely helpless on his back and who is in need of a constant attendant to have only $20 with which to pay the nurse or attendant, which is absolutely insufficient and will deprive him of a nurse, as he can not get one for $20 per month. Therefore as one Member I think that in behalf of our ex-service men in that helpless condition we ought to vote down this conference report and send the bill back to conference and have that Senate amendment numbered 56 adopted. With this Senate amendment 56 adopted I am heartily in favor of the bill, as I supported it in the House, but if the previous question is ordered I am going to vote against this conference report as a protest against this inequitable provision of allowing only $20 for a nurse.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The gentleman knows very well we can not recommit the report.

Mr. BLANTON. We can vote it down, and then we can amend this provision. That is the only way to amend it. Vote down the conference report.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The gentleman from Texas wants to take the responsibility of voting it down?

Mr. BLANTON. It could be fixed up and passed in six hours. I am in favor of doing that in behalf of the helpless ex-service men who are now on their backs without nurses and attendants.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Iowa yield?

Mr. SWEET. I do.

Mr. MONDELL. What is the estimated cost per annum of all of the activities for ex-service men, as they will be concentrated in one organization under this act?

Mr. SWEET. Under this new bureau?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. SWEET. About $480,000,000 a year.

Mr. MONDELL. I noticed the other day a statement from the Treasury Department in the sum of $500,000,000. That is only $20,000,000 more than the gentleman's estimate, so I assume that estimate is based upon a pretty careful consideration of the items of cost.

Mr. SWEET. I imagine it is, and my statement is based on the estimate prepared by the War Risk Insurance Bureau, made at the Treasury Department.

Mr. MONDELL. Can the gentleman tell us the actual expenditure during the fiscal year that ended July 1 for and in behalf of all these activities—insurance, compensation, vocational training, hospitalization, and so forth? What was the actual expenditure for the year?

Mr. SWEET. Generally speaking, about $460,000,000.

Mr. MONDELL. Then the gentleman estimates an increase of only $20,000,000?

Mr. SWEET. About $20,000,000. The estimate varies from $14,500,000 to $20,000,000 by which this bill will increase the benefits to disabled ex-service men of the country.

Mr. MONDELL. That is, assuming the same number of men receiving benefits, the cost would be $20,000,000 more?

Mr. SWEET. About that.

Mr. MONDELL. And your estimate of the cost is based on the present number of men receiving and applying for vocational training and for aid?

Mr. SWEET. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. I wish the gentleman from Wyoming would ask the gentleman from Iowa an additional question—how much goes for administration? I am not speaking now of the amount that goes to the beneficiaries.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman from Iowa will yield to the gentleman from Illinois to ask him that question.

Mr. SWEET. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CANNON. What I want to know is how much of this goes to the soldiers and how much goes for administration?

Mr. SWEET. About $13,000,000, or a little over, goes to administration.

Mr. CANNON. Is there anything in the hearings that will educate us on this subject of administration?

Mr. SWEET. Well, it is stated in the hearings and in the statement that I made to the House when this bill was discussed, covering the question of administration, insurance, compensation, allowances, allotments, and all matters pertaining to service benefits, vocational training, and hospitals.

Mr. CANNON. And that was given in detail?

Mr. SWEET. That was given in detail.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SWEET. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. DOWELL. As to this $20,000,000 additional, represented by this bill, all of that goes to the ex-service men?

Mr. SWEET. It does, practically.

Mr. DOWELL. There is no additional expense, so far as administration is concerned?

Mr. SWEET. A small amount of that $20,000,000 will be for administration.

Mr. DOWELL. And the balance will be additional assistance to the ex-service men?

Mr. SWEET. It will.

Mr. MONDELL. Now, Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Iowa will give me one minute—

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will not the gentleman move the previous question?

Mr. RAYBURN. If the gentleman is not going to move the previous question I think there should be some arrangement as to the division of time.

Mr. MONDELL. Let me just say this, Mr. Speaker: People who are not familiar with what Congress has done for its gallant defenders, the men who served the country so splendidly in the Great War, have at one time and another very severely criticized the Congress for alleged lack of interest in behalf of these men and for failure to provide for them. Mr. Speaker, the very statement of the fact that we are now expending about $475,000,000 per year for and on behalf of these men, and that practically all of this money is going directly to the men or being used directly for their benefit, ought to be an answer in itself to those who have criticized the Congress. [Applause.]

But more than that, Mr. Speaker, those who have known of the splendid work that has been done, of the great efforts that have been put forth on behalf of our ex-soldiers, know that what has been done for them, what has been accomplished for them, is much more than can be measured by even this enormous expenditure. At no time in the history of the world, nowhere on earth, have the defenders of a nation ever been treated with the generosity with which the injured and disabled soldiers of the late war have been treated.

They are worthy of it. It is their right. We are all glad to vote for these great appropriations for them; but as we do so I hope the country will remember that the Congress and the Nation have been more generous to these soldiers than any other people have been to their defenders in all the tide of time. [Applause.]

Mr. BRIGGS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. SWEET. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT].

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I do not think the gentleman from Wyoming was very happy in using the word "generous." I think that we are only paying a just due. I do not like to think of these things as a matter of generosity. I like to think of them as paying an obligation to the saviors of the country. [Applause.]

I hope the gentleman from Iowa will move the previous question.

Mr. SWEET. Mr. Speaker, I have many demands for time, and I must either reject them all or grant them all. I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa moves the previous question.

The question was taken, and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. BLANTON. I ask for a division on that, Mr. Speaker. We will see whether they will give $20 a month for a nurse to a poor helpless soldier.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas demands a division.

The House divided and there were—ayes 185, noes 13.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote, because it shows that there is no quorum present, and I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count.

Mr. MONDELL. There is clearly a quorum present.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, well, the gentleman from Wyoming would like to have the vote taken that way next year, and if he does he will be elected to the Senate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (after counting). Two hundred and twenty-two Members present, a quorum. The previous question is ordered.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Will the gentleman from Iowa yield for a question?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The previous question is ordered. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Upon that, Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee demands the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 268, nays 4, not voting 159, as follows:

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Speaker, I wish to vote "aye."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Was the gentleman in the Hall listening when his name should have been called?

Mr. LONDON. Only a part of the time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Was the gentleman listening when his name should have been called?

Mr. LONDON. No.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman does not qualify.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. CHINDBLOM indefinitely, on account of illness.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. Speaker, I wish to announce that my colleague, Mr. CHINDBLOM, who is confined to his home on account of illness, desires me to state that if he were present he would have voted for the conference report.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make the same announcement for my colleague, Mr. WHEELER.

Mr. FESS requested leave of absence for Mr. FITZGERALD until August 21 on account of having been ordered to report for camp duty at Camp Knox from July 30 to August 31.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? (After a pause.) The Chair hears none.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, the Chair is mistaken; there is objection. As to a personal request for leave of absence for a Congressman who has been ordered from Congress to camp in peace time, I want to ask the Chair whether or not there is any power that can take a Member of Congress away from his duties in peace time to a military camp?

The SPEAKER. The Chair heard no objection made.

Mr. BLANTON. I was on my feet objecting and clamoring for recognition.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I was not aware of the fact that the gentleman from Texas was going to enter upon that question, but I do think that presents a pretty serious question. There was no objection made during the war time. I would appreciate it if the Chair would be good enough to withdraw that request from the desk at this time and lay it before the House at a later date.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will the gentleman allow a suggestion?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I think if the gentleman will examine the law he will find that the form in which this request for leave is made does not altogether represent the exact status of our colleague. I do not think he has been taken by force of arms, by mandate of the War Department, or by the scruff of the neck, against his will.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, during the time of the war none of us objected to Members of the House being absent on military duty. Probably it ought to have been objected to then, but no objection was made either for officers or for those who were privates. Nevertheless there is involved a very grave question—the mingling of the military and civil authorities. I do not wish to be ungracious in any sort of way, but I would be very glad if the Speaker would withdraw that for a time and let us think it over.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. If the gentleman will permit me, I think he will find that the request is probably rather crudely worded. It does not represent the actual status of this gentleman in his relation to the War Department.

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman will yield, the newspaper states that the War Department had ordered the Congressman to camp and the Congressman in obedience to his duty had gone.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I do not want to suggest what the brother may have had in his mind, but I want to say that the War Department orders no reserve officers to duty in time of peace without his own consent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair heard no objection when he put the question, but the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] asks unanimous consent that the matter be withdrawn and disposed of at a later date.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I was on my feet to make the objection, and I addressed the Chair as soon as I could before he put the question.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Speaker, has the House the power to give a man leave of absence in the first place, and if it has not, how can it do so by action of a committee?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair believes that the House has the right to grant a leave of absence, and that is what is asked for in this request. The Chair did not understand that the gentleman from Texas was making his objection at the time when the statement was made by the Chair.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; Mr. Speaker, I was on my feet to object and I rose immediately, trying in the confusion to get recognition of the Chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair feels in view of the statement of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] that he was on his feet to make an objection, although the Chair failed to hear it; is there any objection to the request?

Mr. BLANTON. I object.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a privileged motion.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a unanimous-consent request.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move that the request of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FITZGERALD] be referred to a committee of three to be appointed by the Chair, to determine—

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, that is not in order, because the request is not before the House. It has been objected to, and that ends it.

Mr. McARTHUR. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Has the gentleman from Tennessee completed his motion?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move that a committee of three—

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House—

Mr. SWEET. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that Members of the House—

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I do not yield for that.

Mr. SWEET. Be granted three legislative days in which to extend their remarks on the bill H. R. 6611.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I object.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming moves that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, can the gentleman from Wyoming take me off my feet when I am in process of making a motion?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. He may on his motion to adjourn.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Wyoming that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee) there were—ayes 102, noes 61.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. BLANTON. Pending that I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee demands the yeas and nays. Those seconding the demand for the yeas and nays will rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] Evidently a sufficient number, and the yeas and nays are ordered. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Wyoming that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 144, nays 65, answered "present" 3, not voting 219, as follows:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-five Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present. The Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. TRAMMELL resumed and concluded the speech begun by him yesterday. The speech entire is as follows:

Tuesday, August 2, 1921.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I am very glad that the Senate has at last reached a conclusion to take what I hope may prove to be an effective step toward benefiting the agriculture interests of the Nation. Since the war none of the industries of the country have suffered so greatly as has agriculture. It has been hampered on account of the lack of a market, and it has also been more or less paralyzed on account of excessive rates charged for the transportation of products within our own borders, but up to this good moment the Congress has not tendered any relief to the great farming interests of America.

The first substitute offered to the bill, that submitted by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG], and the substitute which is being discussed at the present time in a large measure are similar. As I have studied the two measures, I can see only minor changes provided in the so-called McNary substitute. Some of the changes I look upon as being advantageous and in the interest of the agricultural producers; but, on the other hand, I find at least one provision which I believe will not aid or assist in accomplishing the object desired to be attained but will work to the detriment of the beneficent purpose intended by the pending legislation. I refer to the provision which relates to the financing of the so-called Edge banks, which have been created for the purpose of carrying on foreign financial negotiations and for the purpose of establishing branch banks in foreign countries.

Why the McNary substitute should provide that such institutions should be furnished with money through the War Finance Corporation without requiring that that money shall be used for agricultural purposes or for the purpose of carrying on the exportation of either agricultural products or manufactured products I do not apprehend. Upon a consideration of the provisions touching upon this subject it is plain that the War Finance Corporation is authorized to advance money to such banks regardless of the purposes or the objects for which the money is advanced.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. TRAMMELL. I yield.

Mr. SIMMONS. Unless I am very much mistaken, the law creating the so-called Edge banks confers upon them only powers with reference to exportations. I have not recently read the act, but that is my understanding of the Edge law. It was enacted for the purpose of promoting the exportation of American products. The functions of the organizations authorized under that law are, as I recall, confined to exportations. If I am mistaken about that, I will be very glad to be corrected by the Senator.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I think the Senator will find upon a review of the act that the scope of its authority is far broader and more extensive than that of merely assisting export business or financing exportations. It confers much more general authority than that required for the financing of exportations. I think the substitute should be so amended as to restrict the advances which are made to the so-called Edge banks to such advances as are made for the purpose of assisting the agriculture interests of the country or else for the purpose of assisting exportations.

I find also that the proposed substitute provides that the loans shall be made to the so-called Edge banks for five years. It provides for the purchasing of their debentures, of their securities, and it may finance them for five years. I have wondered why there should be such zealous support for giving a 5-years' credit to these financial institutions when credit is restricted to the individual farmers of the country to a period of only two years.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. TRAMMELL. Certainly.

Mr. KELLOGG. The original War Finance Corporation act provided that the credit should not extend beyond five years; that is all. The War Finance Corporation has not issued any five-year bonds; it found it unnecessary to do so. It issued $200,000,000 of one-year bonds, and they were paid within the year. The War Finance Corporation believes that it can finance exports on notes or short-time bonds, but the original law limited them so that they could not go beyond the five years; it did not require them to issue 5-year bonds or to do anything of the kind. The Senator was mistaken in that respect.

Mr. TRAMMELL. The law did not require them to do it, but the law authorized them to do it.

Mr. KELLOGG. Very well.

Mr. TRAMMELL. And this amendment proposes to authorize them to continue to extend credit for a period of five years.

Mr. KELLOGG. The amendment does not affect that, because—

Mr. TRAMMELL. It does not affect it, but it continues the authority given to the War Finance Corporation under section 21 of the original War Finance Corporation act, which gave them the right to extend credit for a period of five years.

Mr. KELLOGG. If the Senator will inquire of the War Finance Corporation, he will find that the credits which they have extended and the only ones they find practicable are reasonably short-term credits. The Senator may go over the list of all of the credits they have extended and he will find that they are practically all short-term credits. The War Finance Corporation believes that the class of credits they are extending for moving products could not be made and should not be made for any such length of time. They said that a year at the outside for a first credit was the utmost that was needed, but they wished power to extend such credits from year to year not exceeding two years. That is the statement of the War Finance Corporation.

Of course, it stands to reason that credits extended for moving crops are not going to be extended over two, three, four, or five years. The War Finance Corporation said that any such credits would be of no advantage, and I do not think the Congress would wish to go into the business of extending long-term credits over a period away beyond the time of the disposal of the products.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, of course I am not commenting upon the procedure that has been adopted by the War Finance Corporation. I am talking about the measure that is before us. The point that I desire to emphasize is that there seems to be a disposition on the part of some Senators supporting this measure, or else those who formulated the measure, to reach the agricultural interests of this country beneficently, only indirectly, by some circuitous route. It seems to be the disposition when dealing with the manufacturing interests of the country or these foreign banking institutions in the law at least to give them a greater term of credit, and to give them credit upon terms upon which it is not given under the measure to the agricultural interests of the country, and that is the point I am criticizing.

Senators have enthused here over this measure, not because it was going to redound to the building up of these foreign banks, not because it is going to redound to the building up of the dealers in exports, but because they say it is going to be a wonderful panacea for the farmers of the country; it is going to produce wonderful results for them. Now, I think this measure will produce some good results. I think the object of the measure most commendable; but what I desire to do, if we are going to call it a measure in the interest of agriculture, is to endeavor to have its provisions afford every possible relief to the producers of this country.

We find in the McNary substitute a provision that the Finance Corporation can purchase from domestic banks notes, bills of exchange, and other evidences of indebtedness in writing when secured by a chattel mortgage; but the position is taken here that you must not advance to a bank money that the bank may use in making advances to a farmer directly upon his own security.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, if I allow other Senators to make speeches all through my speech, I shall talk here probably a week. It does not worry me, but I want to get through.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida declines to yield further.

Mr. TRAMMELL. That is one of the provisions of the McNary amendment. If the Senator questions it, I can read it in just a moment. It provides that in exceptional cases they can purchase this class of securities. In other words, the authors of this measure, or those who conferred upon it, recognized that that was sufficient security and a safe investment for the Finance Corporation when purchasing a chattel mortgage upon staple agricultural products from the bank; yet you say that they must not accept those classes of securities from the farmer, even in the hands of the bank. If the farmer's security is to be used, he must go through the circuitous route of having it handled by a dealer, handled by those engaged in marketing products, or else through an association; but as far as the Finance Corporation purchasing the same security from a bank, it is not authorized by the McNary substitute.

I do not quite understand why the phrase "in exceptional cases" should have been written into the bill. It is the only avenue through which the farmer has the opportunity to have his individual securities handled in the least, and that is by a sale.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. TRAMMELL. I do.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator says he does not understand why the words "exceptional cases" are used. I want to say to the Senator that the whole section to which he is now referring is almost identical in language with the powers conferred upon the Finance Corporation in war times. We found that there were certain exceptional cases that could not be dealt with under the general rule that was prescribed, but that ought to be dealt with. The "exceptional case" that was intended to be covered by this section was the case of a State bank which would not be able to borrow from the corporation under the preceding clause of section 24, because under State law limiting the amount of their borrowings to their capital stock plus their surplus they have already borrowed all that they are permitted under their State authority to borrow. They could not borrow, therefore, from the corporation under the balance of section 24. Now, for the purpose of enabling them to secure additional advancements, it is provided that instead of their borrowing the money upon these securities they may be given permission to sell the securities right out, and in that way accomplish a purpose which could not be accomplished under the general provision of section 24.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I understand, from the explanation made, why the words "exceptional cases" were inserted. That makes it all the more necessary, in my opinion, for the amendment that I propose to this measure to be adopted, because if you do not adopt that amendment then the producer in this country, regardless of his security, has no avenue through which he can enjoy the benefits of this legislation except to go through a dealer, a factor, or somebody carrying on an export business, or else to go to the cumbersome necessity of forming an association. The amendment which I propose provides that the corporation may not only make advances to banks or trust companies upon the security of the dealer—which in most instances, doubtless, will be secured by the product itself—but that in making advances to a bank they can accept as security from the bank a chattel mortgage upon staple agricultural products.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. TRAMMELL. Certainly.

Mr. KELLOGG. I should like to ask one question. Does the Senator believe that any single corporation in Washington can loan directly to 30,000,000 or 40,000,000 people in the United States, or any small percentage of them, and relieve anybody by attempting to do it?

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I do not think they could by making the individual loans directly, but I propose handling this entire transaction through the banks of the country; your measure without my amendment is going to handle the advance through the dealers of the country, those engaged in the export business; and you have the farmers, the agricultural interests of this country, subject to their will and going upon bended knees, begging to them, in order to get the benefits of the measure.

Mr. KELLOGG. Does the Senator believe that a corporation, if authorized, could relieve the condition of this country by loaning directly to the people? Does he believe that it would be possible to do that?

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I believe that the corporation dealing through the banks, in recognition of the security furnished by chattel mortgage upon the products of the country, could in a great many instances through the banks accept this security upon advances made to those banks just the same as they would accept similar securities if they had been deposited there by dealers or by exporters.

Mr. KELLOGG. That is exactly what the bill authorizes.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, the bill does not authorize that. It authorizes it only through dealers, those engaged in marketing, and associations.

Mr. KELLOGG. No; not at all.

Mr. TRAMMELL. It does not authorize an advance upon security offered by a producer himself individually, even when this security is held by a bank.

Mr. KELLOGG. Why, it authorizes this corporation to buy from domestic banks, bankers, or trust companies notes, drafts, bills of exchange secured by chattel mortgage, and so forth, and they are, of course, given by the producers. There is nothing here that excludes them.

Mr. TRAMMELL. That is exactly the point I have been making, that the bill recognizes that as proper security; it recognizes it as a good investment on the part of the Finance Corporation when it is held by a bank and a bank wants to sell it. Now, after you have put the stamp of approval upon that class of security, how are you going to say to the producers that unless that is owned by a bank you will not advance the bank any funds upon that same class of security? Then, too, in exceptional cases—the cases involved through State banks, as stated by the Senator from North Carolina—you have given recognition to that class of security.

Mr. DIAL and Mr. SMITH addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. TRAMMELL. I yield to the junior Senator from South Carolina, who rose first.

Mr. DIAL. I should like to ask the Senator whether he does not understand that the banks will have to indorse or guarantee that paper?

Mr. TRAMMELL. Why, certainly, Mr. President. The banks will have to indorse that paper, and under the provisions of this measure the banks will have to indorse all other classes of paper that they sell or negotiate with the Finance Corporation.

Mr. DIAL. So that they would have two securities.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Why, certainly; they would have the bank as security in addition to the security covered by the chattel mortgage.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me—

Mr. TRAMMELL. I gladly yield for a question, Mr. President, but I am not going to yield for speeches all of the afternoon in the middle of my speech.

Mr. SMITH. I simply want to ask the Senator a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield for that purpose?

Mr. TRAMMELL. Certainly; I will yield for a question.

Mr. SMITH. I just want to get the Senator's viewpoint. Does he think it is possible for the War Finance Corporation, in the emergency that now confronts us, to deal satisfactorily with individuals, even upon the form of security that the Senator now says ought to be accepted by them?

Mr. TRAMMELL. I think it would be satisfactory to deal with individual security in the hands of a bank, and the subcommittee that drafted this bill seemed to think it would be satisfactory. If they did not think it would be satisfactory, why did they put in the bill a provision to the effect that the corporation would have the right to go and purchase that very kind of securities when owned by a bank? I should like to ask the Senator, please, to answer why they authorize it in the measure if they did not regard the security as ample in cases of that kind?

Mr. SMITH. Why, Mr. President, there is lots of security that the War Finance Corporation have no means of passing upon; but with the indorsement of the bank they can pass upon the credit and the standing of the bank and the bank makes good the paper that it offers with its indorsement upon it. That answers the Senator's question.

Mr. TRAMMELL. That does answer it. The bank would make good this character of security, when furnished as security to the Finance Corporation for advances, just the same as it would if it were selling the security.

I think we will accomplish a great deal under this measure even if we make the farmers of the country travel a circuitous route in order to get any assistance; but why the necessity for doing that? We all recall some few years ago when there was distress in moving the crops in the South that Secretary McAdoo transferred quite a considerable amount of public funds to that section, and it was handled through the banks of the country in making loans to the farmers. Of course, he held the banks responsible for it and a restriction was placed on the amount of interest that was to be charged.

My contention is that if you can furnish a safe avenue through which to benefit the farmer, without compelling him to go through some other route to obtain his funds, you should do that, and in that way assist him. He gives a chattel mortgage, the bank accepts the chattel mortgage, and the bank can sell that, and this corporation can finance it if it sells it. But if a bank says, "I want a certain amount of funds to finance the agricultural people of our section upon securities that they have given us, backed up by a chattel mortgage upon staple products," then the corporation has no authority to make the advance. I am just asking for that authority.

Mr. EDGE. I understand that while I was out of the Chamber the Senator from Florida discussed somewhat that portion of the bill now under consideration, from line 11, on page 6, providing that the War Finance Corporation is authorized to deal with debentures, and so forth, of a corporation organized under the so-called Edge Act. Is that true?

Mr. TRAMMELL. It is.

Mr. EDGE. If the Senator could do so without taking too much of his time, I would like to have him repeat any objection, if he has any, to that, to see if I can give him any information, because I have made somewhat of a study of the operation of those institutions.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I stated that, according to my interpretation of the amendment bearing upon that subject, the law placed no restrictions upon the advances, nor did it qualify the advances so as to make them for the purpose of assisting in carrying on exportation or for the purpose of assisting the agricultural interests of this country. That is the point I made against the amendment; also, Mr. President, that it provided for lending these banks money for a period of five years, and provided for giving the agricultural interests of the country assistance for only two years. That is very plainly set forth in the bill.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, if I may just take a very brief moment—

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I dislike to have a speech made in the middle of my attempt to make an address.

Mr. EDGE. I do not desire to make a speech. I intend simply to answer the question. Of course, if the Senator prefers not to have it answered—

Mr. TRAMMELL. Certainly, the Senator can answer the question; but I do not want to have an address made by the Senator now. The Senator made a speech the other day on this proposition.

Mr. EDGE. I did not discuss this feature of it. In the first place, the corporations organized under that section of the Federal reserve act are confined entirely to the business of exporting American products, and are not to engage in domestic business of any kind or character. They are, of course, permanent institutions to continue after this emergency period passes, and we all sincerely hope it will pass, the business of extending credit to American farmers and American producers to enable them to export. It is the one permanent institution Congress has devised in order to continually help them. So that when this emergency arose, and it was determined, under the scope of this act, to use the machinery of the War Finance Corporation in order to meet the emergency and to give them additional opportunity to extend credit, it was considered wise by Mr. Meyer, the managing director of the corporation, and he drew the amendment, that they should have power, within their discretion, to loan money on the debentures or promissory notes issued by those corporations.

I may say to the Senator that the only such corporation in active operation to-day is in New Orleans. It is exclusively engaged in making exportations of cotton, and to-day, as a matter of fact, the War Finance Corporation have been indirectly loaning that corporation in New Orleans money, even without the passage of this bill; but they felt this would make it very much more businesslike, so that they could lend the money to the New Orleans corporation for the purpose of exporting cotton. That is the only purpose of the amendment.

Mr. TRAMMELL. The purpose being to assist in exportation is a very commendable one. But the point I am making is that there are not proper restrictions on the amendment to this bill, that it seems to give carte blanche authority to the War Finance Corporation to make advances to these banking institutions, and I think the bill should be amended in that respect.

I would like to see some opportunity given to the producers of the country to use their securities through the banks, without the necessity of dealing with a dealer, or an exporter, or entering into an association. If I caught the purport of the amendment that is proposed, it provides that these advances may be made to an association of those engaged in producing.

Mr. SMITH. It is the same thing.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Of course, the amendment has not been printed, but it shows plainly that the purpose and the object of it is to preclude individuals from having their securities in the hands of the banking institutions of this country available to the bank to be used for the purpose of getting advances.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator is mistaken about the amendment to which he refers. The object of the amendment is to authorize loans to associations organized for the purpose of dealing in or marketing; not producing, but dealing in or marketing.

Mr. TRAMMELL. If we can have the amendment read, I think the Senator will find that is not what it provides.

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Senator will permit me to say one word, I would like to have some means by which a producer could go and borrow money directly, instead of having to go to a bank and borrow, and then the bank go and borrow from the corporation. We had that up the other day. But the members of the War Finance Corporation say that if they were to be made the banker of all the producers of agricultural products of this country, it would require a personnel probably of 10,000 people, and they would have to have branch banks in every community, nearly, in the country; that it is utterly impracticable for them to loan directly to farmers all over this country, because they have to scrutinize very carefully the security that is offered, and they have to advise themselves as to the adequacy and sufficiency of that security, and if they had to loan directly to the farmers, if a farmer lived in California, they would have to go to California and institute inquiries for the purpose of ascertaining what his financial standing was, and what the value of the property he proposed to put up was.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I have not proposed an amendment which contemplates that they shall deal directly with the individual, but I have proposed an amendment which will carry out the same policy in regard to the form of security held by the bank, that the bank may use in obtaining an advance from the War Finance Corporation. I would like to ask the Senator if in the purchase of these securities they will not have to make an investigation similar to that they would have to make in the case of an advance upon a similar security held by a bank?

Mr. SIMMONS. Certainly not. The advance that is being made to the bank in that case, or the rediscounting, would be made not upon the faith of the paper they would rediscount, but upon the faith of the bank and the credit of the bank, and that is very easily ascertained.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, if they were making an advance to a bank upon evidences of indebtedness secured by a chattel mortgage upon staple products, would they not certainly make it upon the responsibility and the security of the bank just the same as they would if they were purchasing it?

Mr. SIMMONS. No. Suppose a farmer came up with his chattel mortgage. It would be necessary for them to make an investigation to ascertain whether that security was adequate and sufficient. Suppose, on the other hand, the bank comes up and says, "I want to sell you this chattel mortgage." The corporation says, "I will buy that if you will indorse it and put the credit of the bank behind it. I know what the financial standing of the bank is. I know whether that security is adequate or not. I do not have to make an investigation about that."

It buys the security because, in part, it is backed by a chattel mortgage, but really and as a matter of fact the credit is advanced upon the credit of the bank and not upon the credit of the chattel mortgage.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, the Senator and I absolutely agree. He says that that is good and ample security to the War Finance Corporation when it comes to the question of selling these various securities, but I judge he takes the position that it is not good security if the notes are held by the banks secured by the credit of the producer.

This is what it amounts to, a chattel mortgage upon staple agricultural products, negotiated through a dealer, the same being engaged in the exportation of products, in the hands of a bank, furnishes ample and sufficient security upon which this Finance Corporation can advance money. That is the provision of the bill. But the same chattel mortgage of the same farmer upon the same staple agricultural products, if carried into the bank and a loan negotiated directly with the bank by the producer, is not good security.

I can not quite understand it. I realize that it is the purpose and the object of every Senator upon this floor to try to benefit and assist the agricultural interests. Your purpose is a commendable one. But I am unable to quite understand why a chattel mortgage upon agricultural products, if negotiated through a buyer or a dealer or an exporter, or through an association, furnishes an ample and a sufficient basis for credit, but if that same security is deposited in the bank by the producer himself, as security for a loan by the bank, the corporation can not make an advance to that bank on that class of security.

I am not criticizing the purpose and object of those supporting the measure in its present form, but I think we are all interested in trying to do what we can to further the agricultural interests, in the way of enabling our farmers to tide over a period when we have no market, and in an effort to assist in carrying on exportations, and feeling this way, and desiring to accomplish all possible in their behalf, I have proposed this amendment, and I can not see that it in any way diminishes the security of the Finance Corporation, nor can I see that it imposes any hardships upon the banks, any more than for the same class of securities to be handled through dealers, exporters, and buyers.

[At this point Mr. TRAMMELL yielded the floor for the day.]

Wednesday, August 3, 1921.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I desire to address the Senate briefly upon an amendment which I proposed upon yesterday to the substitute which has been offered by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY].

This amendment does not provide for nor does it contemplate that credit shall be given directly to a producer. I gathered the idea from some of the inquiries made of me on yesterday by certain Senators that they were disposed to draw that conclusion. As a matter of fact, my amendment does not provide for a credit directly to the producer.

Under the substitute offered by the Senator from Oregon it is proposed that the War Finance Corporation, for the purpose of assisting the agricultural interests of the country, may make advances to dealers and to those who are engaged in marketing; and, under an amendment which is to be proposed by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], to associations composed of persons who are engaged in the production of the character of products which are embraced within the provisions of the bill. Those constitute the group under paragraph (a) to which advances may be made by the War Finance Corporation.

Then, under paragraph (b) of section 22, advances may be made to persons in foreign countries who are engaged in exportation when the expenditures are made entirely within this country. Under paragraph (c) of the substitute it is provided that the War Finance Corporation may make advances to banks, bankers, and trust companies upon the class of securities which are provided in paragraph (a).

We now revert to paragraph (a), and we find that the advance may be made to a dealer, to those who are engaged in marketing, and to associations which are composed of producers of agricultural products. Therefore, Mr. President, the advance which may be made to a banker, a bank, or a trust company is restricted to the securities which may come to them through a dealer, through a marketing agency, or through an association which is composed of those who are engaged in producing. So the only method through which a producer may negotiate his security, based upon a chattel mortgage upon staple agricultural products, is by knocking at the door of the dealer, the marketing agency, or an association which is composed of producers who are engaged in the production of this character of products.

Under the provisions of this measure he is precluded from going directly to the bank itself and furnishing to the bank the security upon which he may obtain an advance from a dealer, upon which he may obtain an advance from a marketing agency, or through the agency of an association.

What is the basic security upon which an advance may be made to a dealer? The basic security is the product which the producer offers to the dealer upon which to obtain a loan. The dealer, Mr. President, can take that same security, in the instant case a chattel mortgage, and can go to a bank and obtain an advance upon the chattel mortgage furnished to him by the farmer; but if the bank receives that chattel mortgage from the farmer direct it is precluded from getting any advance from the War Finance Corporation under the provisions of this measure.

If a producer applies to a person engaged in marketing for a loan upon a hundred bales of cotton, and the marketing agency advances him upon that hundred bales of cotton, as an illustration, a loan of $200 to tide him over, the marketing agency can go to the bank, negotiate the chattel mortgage upon the farmer's cotton, and obtain a loan. Then the bank in turn can take the chattel mortgage, and it is eligible as security under those circumstances to obtain a loan from the War Finance Corporation. If it is handled through an association it may follow the same course. But if the farmer himself does not use the agency of a dealer, the agency of a marketing company, or of an association, his security held by the bank is not eligible and does not constitute a security upon which the bank can obtain an advance from the War Finance Corporation.

The object of my amendment is that a chattel mortgage held by a bank covering an advance upon staple agricultural products, that chattel mortgage having been made direct by the producer to the bank, may become eligible as a security in the hands of the bank upon which the bank may negotiate an advance from the War Finance Corporation. That is not dealing with the individual; that is dealing through the duly organized and constituted financial institutions of the country in regard to chattel mortgages just the same as the bill proposes to deal in regard to all other securities.

Should this class of securities be made eligible for an advance to a bank? I take the position, Mr. President, that it is just as stable, that it is just as secure an obligation if it is placed in the hands of the bank by the producer himself as if it had come through the circuitous route of having been placed there by the dealer or by a marketing agency or by an association.

This class of securities would not be an adventurer into our financial affairs. It is a security that is not new to the banking institutions of this country. Under the present Federal reserve bank law the very class of securities which I propose to make eligible for an advance in the hands of a bank is made eligible for rediscount. I can read the section. I think, however, the Senators generally are familiar with the law. I think the Senators generally know that when a member bank holds chattel mortgages or warehouse receipts or other instruments of writing securing the title to staple agricultural products, including live stock, so specified in the Federal reserve bank law, that class of security is eligible for rediscount at the Federal reserve bank. I am seeking in this emergency measure, in this measure which has been heralded as intended to afford relief to the producers of this country under their stressed circumstances, to give the producer, through the banks, no greater privilege, even under these stressed circumstances, than is given to him in days of peace and prosperity under the Federal reserve bank law.

I can not quite understand why anyone should oppose an amendment of this kind. If the real purpose and object is to afford relief to the agricultural interests, why require the producer to go to a dealer to get his advance? Why require the producer upon his valid, ample, and staple security to go to a marketing agency to obtain an advance upon his products? Why require him to apply to some association and have the transaction handled through an association before he can become the beneficiary of the so-intended beneficent features of this measure? We all know what it means if you give the dealers of the country a monopoly, the marketing agencies a monopoly, the associations a monopoly, in the way of making those the only channels through which a producer can finance and hold his products; you know that in a great many instances the producer is going to have to pay a very dear toll for the accommodation which he receives from the dealer or the marketing agency, and an unnecessary expense, even through an association composed of producers.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to his colleague?

Mr. TRAMMELL. Certainly.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think the objection urged to the Senator's amendment is based on the idea that he proposes to have the War Finance Corporation deal directly with producers; and inasmuch as there are some 6,000,000 farms in the United States, or more, that would involve this corporation dealing with six or eight million people. That would necessitate an organization probably of 50,000 people before they could get in shape to do that. Now, the point is whether this amendment requires the Finance Corporation to deal directly with the producer or with the bank with which the producer may be accustomed to do business. The language is:

Also for advances made to any producer for the purpose set forth in paragraph (a).

I do not believe there can be any objection to this corporation dealing with banks or with institutions already organized, but you would not want to put them in the position of taking the place of the banks. I should like to hear the Senator on that point.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, my colleague was not present when I began my remarks. I stated very emphatically, and I hope very clearly, that this amendment did not provide for granting any credits to the individual directly, but that it only makes eligible in the hands of a bank an additional line of securities. I will state to my colleague that the word "and" should precede "also." I thought when I sent the amendment to the desk that I had the word "and" there. Here is the way paragraph (c) would read as I propose to amend it.

Following, of course, the statement that the War Finance Corporation may make advances, it gives different groups, group (a), group (b), and then we come down to group (c). The War Finance Corporation under group (c), if the paragraph is amended as I propose, would be empowered to make these advances—

To any bank, banker, or trust company in the United States which makes or has made an advance or advances to pay such person as is described in paragraph (a) of this section for the purpose therein set forth, and also for advances—

Now, it states to whom they may make advances. They may make them to banks, bankers, and trust companies—

And also for advances made to any producer for the purpose set forth in paragraph (a) upon notes, drafts, bills of exchange, or other instruments of indebtedness secured by chattel mortgages, warehouse receipts, bills of lading, or other instruments in writing conveying or securing marketable title to staple agricultural products, including live stock.

It simply makes eligible that class of securities. Now, I have cited the policy of the Government and our financial institutions as provided under the Federal reserve bank law, which makes this character of securities eligible for rediscount when held by a bank, of course; but in this very measure itself, the substitute under consideration, the subcommittee which proposed the substitute recognized the stability of the very same class of securities, in that the subcommittee in the substitute provides that these classes of securities may be purchased by the War Finance Corporation in exceptional cases. That is found on page 5, section 24. It is provided there that—

The corporation may, in exceptional cases, upon such terms not inconsistent with this act as it may determine, purchase from domestic banks, bankers, or trust companies, notes, drafts, bills of exchange, or other instruments of indebtedness secured by chattel mortgages, warehouse receipts, bills of lading, or other instruments in writing conveying or securing marketable title to staple agricultural products, including live stock.

I very largely copied the provisions of that section relative to the purchase of this character of securities; but in my amendment I enlarge the authority of the War Finance Corporation to the extent that this class of securities that under the bill have been made available for purchase may also be made available, when held by a bank, for an advance to the bank. It is not a question of any individual loans.

Some Senator said here yesterday that it would necessitate an investigation, and that the War Finance Corporation could not carry on an investigation into the character of the security. Mr. President, this character of security held by a bank which had been delivered to the bank for a loan on the part of the producer is no more difficult to investigate as to its stability and its value than if the same security had been deposited there upon an advance or a loan to a dealer, to a marketing agency, or to an association.

The substitute provides that these advances shall be secured by promissory notes and such other guaranties as may be required. For advances made to a dealer, for advances made to a marketing agency or association, the substitute does not require any mortgage security. The substitute does not require that the bank shall underwrite that security upon obtaining an advance. It leaves it within the discretion of the War Finance Corporation to require such security, such pledge, or guaranty as may, within its discretion, be deemed advisable.

Then, I say that the security to the Government under the substitute upon the advances that are authorized is not, as far as the requirements of the measure are concerned, as safe and ample security as I have proposed to make eligible in the hands of a bank upon which an advance may be made.

Of course, proceeding under the law, I take it that the War Finance Corporation will, by pledges and guaranties, secure amply all advances, and in their experience in the past I understand that they have suffered no losses whatever; but, as far as the provisions of the substitute are concerned, it does not propose securities for every class of advance that is authorized thereunder that would be as staple and as secure as an advance on a chattel mortgage based upon staple agricultural products, that chattel mortgage held by the bank and the bank negotiating for the advance through the regular channels.

Some Senator yesterday, speaking in a critical mood in regard to this amendment, said that the bank might have to indorse the security. Mr. President, if the bank should be required to indorse this character of security, then certainly the Finance Corporation, in its zeal to protect the Government, would require the bank to indorse the securities brought to it by dealers, by marketing agencies, and by associations. You have imposed no hardships upon the bank in addition to those which would be imposed upon it, if it is a hardship, in the negotiation for advances under the provisions of the substitute as proposed.

Mr. President, as a matter of fact, I do not think that the banking institutions of this country would look with disfavor upon my amendment. Rather, to the contrary, I think that the banking institutions of the Nation would look with favor upon a provision which authorizes the bank at first hand to obtain advances under the same circumstances and conditions under which a dealer or a marketing agency could obtain them. Why should it be necessary for the bank, before it can utilize this character of securities, to have that character of securities come to it through the hands of a dealer, a marketing agency, or an association? I can not quite see any reason for that.

It seems to me that the bankers of the country would welcome an opportunity to utilize a chattel mortgage given upon staple agricultural products, or upon warehouse receipts, as an eligible asset or security upon which the bank could obtain advances from the War Finance Corporation. Under the provisions of the bill they can not do it. I am unable to understand, if this character of security when held by a dealer constitutes eligible security upon which the dealer can obtain an advance and obtain it directly, why it is not as good security if offered by a bank after having been given to the bank direct.

I will give an illustration. A farmer goes and mortgages certain products to a dealer for a thousand dollars. The dealer goes to the War Finance Corporation and says, "This farmer has given me a mortgage for $1,000 upon staple agricultural products." He gives his security. Under the law, the War Finance Corporation can immediately advance him a thousand dollars. But if that same producer or farmer goes to the bank and says, "Mr. Banker, I want to borrow $1,000, and I will give you a chattel mortgage upon staple agricultural products," the banker says, "Well, I very much regret it, Mr. Jones, but demands upon the bank are so great that I can not make this advance to you, because, under the law, I am unable to use your chattel mortgage, this class of security, for the purpose of getting an advance from the War Finance Corporation." Therefore the farmer is unable to get his loan from the bank. But the banker says, "There is a way you can get it. You go over there to the man who wants to buy your crop sometime in the future; you go over there to the marketing agency, and you see if you can not get them to loan you $1,000, secured by a mortgage upon your staple agricultural products, and they no doubt can accommodate you, because if this paper gets into their hands it then has a sanctity thrown around it under the law which makes it eligible for use by the War Finance Corporation as security for an advance."

The farmer goes over there and is subjected, of course, to the charges which the dealer or the marketing agency may impose upon him; he is subjected to such contracts as they may see fit to impose upon him, to sell in the future the product he is pledging, and that becomes the only avenue through which he can obtain his money; that is, if he obtains it that way. Of course there is another way he might obtain it—through an association—with the cumbersomeness and awkwardness and the charges that may be imposed upon farmers when they organize an association. The chances are, as a rule, when farmers organize into an association that they are unable to use their assets personally, but the financial barons of the country always require them to become jointly and severally liable, in addition to their mortgage securities.

The result is that under the McNary substitute the producer himself is forced to apply to the dealer or to the marketing agency, or else be subjected to such unreasonable regulations and terms as may be imposed upon an association. But as soon as the association gets hold of the man's chattel mortgage, as soon as the marketing agency gets his chattel mortgage, as soon as the dealer in these products gets hold of his mortgage, then that immediately becomes good security, eligible security, upon which the War Finance Corporation can make advances.

You talk about interfering with banking; you talk about trespassing upon the prerogatives of the financial institutions of our country. Under this bill in its present form, if you deprive the banks of the opportunity of holding this class of securities as eligible, upon which to obtain advances, then you have transferred to quite an extent the prerogatives of the bank from the bank to the dealer, to the marketing agency, to the association, and the bank will have to do the business secondhand. If they want to obtain some advance from the War Finance Corporation, they will have to go out and get the securities from some dealer, from some marketing agency, or from some association.

Mr. President, I am very serious about this, because I think it is an amendment which will add very much to the accommodation which will be extended to the agricultural interests of this country under this measure, and I am unable to see how anyone can take the position that this class of securities, held by a bank, will not be eligible as securities upon which advances may be made, when, if the same security is held by a dealer, by a marketing agent, or by an association, it is eligible for an advance.

All the objections which may be made in criticism of the necessity for investigating this class of security held by the banker may, with equal force and probably with greater force, be made in criticism of the necessity of investigating the security if it is held in the hands of a dealer, a marketing agency, or an association. Of course, we know that the banks engaged entirely in financial transactions, engaged entirely in carrying on the very business of making loans and advances, and dealing with the public in a financial way are really better qualified and more experienced in handling securities than the ordinary dealer or the ordinary marketing agency. So, the objection that they would have to go to a good deal of trouble to investigate the value of the security has even greater force when you apply it to a dealer, a marketing agency, or an association.

I know what the plan would be under this measure. The bank would be utilized very largely for the purpose of passing upon the value of the security and for the purpose of seeing that the Government's interest is protected in all advances which may be made. It would ultimately be the banks of the country which would make secure the Government upon its advances. Then, if it is going to be the banks which make the Government secure upon the advances, why do you say to the producers of this country that they can not have any transactions with the banks or that securities in the form of chattel mortgages upon their staple products will not be worth anything when held by the banks for the purpose of getting advances?

I think, Mr. President, that the general object and purpose of the pending measure is a very commendable one. I am sure that the authors of this substitute are sincerely desirous of assisting the agricultural interests of the country. I am sure that it is the purpose and object of Senators generally to enact legislation at this time, which is the most distressing we have had among the farmers and the producers of this country, which will operate beneficially and helpfully to this great interest of the Nation. But, Mr. President, if that is the purpose and if that is the object of all those supporting this measure—and I am sure that it is—why close the door to the producer of the country of the most convenient and the most customary avenue through which he negotiates his loans for the purpose of financing and holding over his crops until the market is in a better condition? Why should we do that?

Of course, if we could see where the interests of the Government were jeopardized it would be quite different; if we could see where it was going to necessitate any great, extensive investigation on the part of the War Finance Corporation, different from that which would be required under the other provisions of the measure, then we might pause before adopting my amendment. But none of those objections can be logically and consistently urged against the amendment now being discussed, which provides that when a bank holds a chattel mortgage securing a marketable title upon staple agricultural products that that security may become eligible as a security upon which the bank may obtain an advance.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to his colleague?

Mr. TRAMMELL. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. I suggest to the Senator that it might be a little clearer if he amended the proposed amendment by striking out the word "for," after the word "also," in line 2, so that it would read "and also advances made to any producer for the purpose set forth in paragraph" so-and-so; that is, advances made to any bank, banker, or trust company.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Certainly. What is the Senator's suggestion as to that?

Mr. FLETCHER. Just to strike out the word "for." It makes it a little clearer, because the section begins:

To any bank, banker, or trust company in the United States which makes or has made an advance.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Oh, yes; also any advances.

Mr. FLETCHER. Also advances made to producers; that is, advances made by banks and trust companies.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I think the suggestion made by my colleague is a good one, so I would modify—

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. TRAMMELL. Certainly.

Mr. LENROOT. Before the Senator modifies his proposed amendment may I make the suggestion that I still think the grammar would not be quite right even with the adoption of the suggestion of the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER]? I should like to suggest to the Senator that the language should read this way:

Or which makes or has made an advance or advances to any producer for the purpose set forth—

And so forth. That is, any bank, banker, or trust company which makes or has made advances for this purpose.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Will the Senator please state that again?

Mr. LENROOT. Taking the Senator's own amendment, it should read this way, in my opinion. After the words "set forth," on page 3, in line 23, strike out the period and insert the words, "or which makes or has made an advance or advances to any producer," and so forth.

Mr. FLETCHER. That is still better, I think. There could be no doubt about that meaning. I think that makes it more plain.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I think that would cover the situation. It is agreeable to me to have the amendment so worded. I am seeking the object and the purpose and not quibbling over the question of language or phraseology.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the Senator yield further?

Mr. TRAMMELL. Certainly.

Mr. LENROOT. Unless the word "producing" is stricken out, in line 2, page 3, I take it the Senator concedes his amendment would not be necessary or accomplish anything.

Mr. TRAMMELL. The amendment, of course, is lying upon the table, and I am glad to make any alterations or changes in phraseology that will carry out the purpose and object which I am seeking, so the matter of redrafting the amendment may be deferred for the present.

Mr. LENROOT. But I should like to ask the Senator this question: If the word "producing" remains in the bill, in line 2, page 3, then would there be any reason for his amendment?

Mr. TRAMMELL. Of course, if the word "producing" remains in the bill, then the War Finance Corporation would be authorized to deal directly with the individual, and that seems to be very seriously objected to by some.

Mr. LENROOT. I agree it is, but it is only in the event the word "producing" is stricken out of the bill that the Senator's amendment would be necessary to allow rediscount of producers' paper.

Mr. TRAMMELL. It would only be necessary under those circumstances if that word is stricken out. Personally I am not seeking by my amendment to open up the channels of direct negotiations between the War Finance Corporation and the individual. Yet I do believe some plan should be provided for giving the individual farmer every benefit under the measure given to anyone else. This could and should be accomplished. The object I am seeking is to make this class of securities eligible when held in the hands of bankers upon which to obtain advances, just as the same security would be eligible if held in the hands of a dealer.

Mr. LENROOT. I will submit to the Senator later my suggestion as to redrafting his amendment.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I have occupied quite a little time in discussion of my proposed amendment. I feel that the producers of the country, when we are trying to assist them as we are through the pending measure, should be given the advantage of this additional opportunity to finance their crops, and I very much hope the amendment will be given serious consideration by Senators and that it will be agreed to.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll. The Assistant Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Fletcher	McCormick	Spencer
Ball	Gooding	McCumber	Stanfield
Borah	Harrell	McKellar	Stanley

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to repeat the announcement made on the previous roll call, that the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM], the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON], the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] are absent on official business, attending hearings before the Senate Committee on Finance. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-eight Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

CONTRACTS FOR THE FUTURE DELIVERY OF GRAIN.

Mr. DIAL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 5676) taxing contracts for the sale of grain for future delivery, and options for such contracts, and providing for the regulation of boards of trade, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that tomorrow morning, at the close of the morning hour, if I can obtain the permission of the Senate, I propose to address the Senate on the cotton futures contract bill and the amendment intended to be proposed by me to that bill.

PRICES OF CRUDE PETROLEUM.

Mr. KING submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 120), which was referred to the Committee on Commerce:

Whereas the price of crude petroleum has been greatly depressed and there has been no corresponding reduction in the price of gasoline and other products derived from crude petroleum; and

Whereas it is claimed that this condition has been brought about by individuals and corporations engaged in the refining and selling of crude petroleum and its various products, and particularly gasoline, in order that unreasonable prices might be charged to the consumers of such products and unreasonable profit derived therefrom, and also for the purpose of forcing the producers of crude petroleum to dispose of their producing wells and oil holdings to said persons and corporations or to interests controlled by them; and

Whereas it is claimed that there is a monopoly in the United States which, by improper manipulation and in contravention of law, seeks to maintain unreasonable prices for gasoline and the products of crude petroleum and to dominate the entire field of production, refining, and distribution of oil and the products of oil in the United States: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce, or a subcommittee thereof, be, and it is hereby, authorized and directed to investigate fluctuations in the price of crude petroleum and the causes thereof, and the conditions with respect to the purchase, refining, and distribution of gasoline and other petroleum products for consumption in the United States, and particularly whether the purchasing of such crude petroleum, refining of gasoline, and the distribution of the same are affected by monopolistic manipulation and control, and whether there are individuals and corporations operating within the United States for the purpose of establishing or maintaining a monopoly in crude petroleum oil or in any of its products, and particularly in the refining, distribution, and sale of gasoline, and to report its findings in the premises to the Senate.

The committee is authorized to send for persons and papers and to employ such clerical and professional assistance as may be necessary.

VIEWS OF VISCOUNT BRYCE ON VERSAILLES TREATY.

Mr. HITCHCOCK obtained the floor.

Mr. McCORMICK. Will the Senator from Nebraska yield for a moment?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield.

Mr. McCORMICK. I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD the views of Viscount Bryce on the Versailles treaty, as given in a lecture before the Institute of Politics at Williams College yesterday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

BRYCE SAYS TREATY SOWS SEEDS OF WAR; FEARS OUTBREAKS—FINDS DANGER OF CONFLICT ON THE RHINE, IN TYROL, THE BALKANS, AND RUSSIA AND TURKEY—PEACE NEEDED SUPERMEN—BUT SOME OF THE NEGOTIATORS, HE SAYS, DID NOT SEEM TO BELIEVE THE PRINCIPLES THEY PROFESSED—HE ATTACKS DEEP SECRECY—IN WILLIAMS ADDRESS HE LAMENTS THAT VICTORS BEAR RESENTMENT LIKE VANQUISHED.

[Special to the New York Times.]

WILLIAMSTOWN, MASS., August 2.

It would have taken a group of supermen to have made a satisfactory peace treaty at Versailles, Viscount Bryce declared to-day in a lecture before the Institute of Politics at Williams College. As it was, he said, the work of the negotiators has received nothing but censure in Europe and has resulted in sowing the seeds of future wars.

"There is," declared Lord Bryce, "no blacker cloud pregnant with future storm hanging over Europe now than that which darkens the banks of the Rhine."

He said that Europe's sore spots are many, and predicted that the slightest irritation of any of them may lead to armed conflict. "The war has shown one unprecedented feature painful in the prospect it opens," he asserted. "The victors bear as much resentment against the vanquished as the vanquished do against the victors."

REVIEWS PROBLEMS OF VERSAILLES.

Discussing the peace treaty and the events that led up to it Lord Bryce said: "After the war came the settlement by the representatives of the victorious powers assembled at Paris; not a fortunate spot for the kind of deliberation needed. Of them and of the methods they employed this is not the place or the time to speak. Their work has received in Europe nothing but censure. Comparing the treaties they framed with those which were made by the congress at Vienna in 1814-15, European critics observe that the men of Vienna, Alexander and Metternich, Talleyrand and Hardenberg and Castlereagh, may have had bad principles and employed despotic methods and misconceived the interests of their peoples, but they at least knew what they were doing and gave effect to their principles.

"Their work bestowed upon Europe a tolerable peace, which lasted for more than 30 years. But there is not one of the treaties of 1919-20 which is not now already admitted to need amendment, while some are seen to lead straight to future wars. One hears people say 'The sort of peace that those negotiations have given us is as bad as was the war.'

"With these and many other strictures you are doubtless familiar, and you can judge how far they are deserved. But against these severe judgments let us give consideration to the difficulties which faced the negotiators at Paris.

"The men of Vienna had a common ground in their faith in monarchical principles and in their reliance upon force to carry out their principles. They had only monarchs to consider, not the will of peoples, and could do what they thought best for the interest of those they served. But the negotiators at Paris differed in their principles and ideals, and at least some of them do not seem to have believed in the principles then professed. European critics have suggested that some of them may have thought they must play down to their own electorates, and regard not what ought to be done but also what would help in their next electoral campaigns. Popular prejudices, popular passions, and cupidities had to be humored or gratified.

"Moreover, and this is an excuse which must not be lightly brushed aside, the task before them was one of unprecedented difficulty. New States had to be created, territories redistributed, indemnities secured, and all on a scale incomparably greater than any international congress ever before had attempted.

SAYS SUPERMEN WERE NEEDED.

"A task so great needed not politicians of the usual type, but persons of the class which we now call supermen; persons who possessed not only a profound and accurate knowledge of the facts they had to deal with, but also a wide vision, a grasp of fundamental principles, a calm judgment raised above the revengeful passions of the moment; persons who loved and sought justice, looking beyond the present to the future, seeking the good of mankind as well as the advantage of their respective nations, able to appreciate the workings of those better forces which alone can bring reconciliation and peace to a distracted world.

"Such men did not appear. Why should they have been expected. There is no saying more false than the saying which declares that 'the hour brings the man.'

Taking up the position in which the European countries find themselves as the result of the peace treaty, Lord Bryce said:

"Germany, which, though reduced in area, is still Germany, and continues to call herself the reich [the realm], albeit now a republic instead of a monarchy. Germany is still the most populous of European countries after Russia, with highly educated and industrious inhabitants and great productive industries. Between her and France the ancestral antagonism, dating back to the days of Louis XIV's aggressions, is now more bitter than ever and seems likely to last in France as long as the generation lives which remembers the devastations wrought in 1918 by the retiring German Army, and in Germany as long as her Government continues to pay immense sums in reparations for the losses in the war by France.

"This war has shown one unprecedented feature painful in the prospect it opens. The victors bear as much resentment against the vanquished as the vanquished do against the victors. There is no blacker cloud pregnant with future storm hanging over Europe now than that which darkens the banks of the Rhine. Not even after Jena in 1806, not even after Gravelotte and Sedan and the capitulation of Paris in 1872 has the prospect of reconciliation between two neighboring peoples seemed so distant.

GERMANY'S ABILITY TO PAY DOUBTFUL.

"Into the tangled question of indemnities and their payment I will not enter. Enough to say that, though everyone agrees that the claim of indemnities is based on recognized principles, it remains doubtful what will be Germany's ability to pay."

Of Austria and of Italy's aspirations in regard to Tyrol, he said:

"Italy had, of course, no historical title whatever to the purely Germanic region she sought to acquire. However, the principle of nationality was in this case thrown overboard by the allied powers and a quarter of a million of German Tyrolese, countrymen of the heroic Andreas Hofer, who had led their forefathers in a gallant resistance when Napoleon turned them over to Bavaria in 1805, were delivered up to Italy as if they had been so many cattle. The British and French Governments defended their action by pleading a secret treaty they had made with Italy in 1915, when they were endeavoring to induce her to enter the war on their side. It was a promise that ought never to have been made. The other allied powers had no such excuse to offer and do not seem to have offered any.

"Voralberg, a small region on the eastern bank of the Rhine before it enters the Lake of Constance, and one which is usually treated as a part of Tyrol, expressed its wish after the collapse of the Hapsburg monarchy to be admitted as a canton into the Swiss Confederation, which it adjoins, but the Swiss Government did not accept the offer, opinion in Switzerland being divided on the subject and opposition on the part of France apprehended. And here it must be noted that the treaty of St. Germain forbids Austria as a whole to unite herself with Germany, a disregard of the so-called principle of self-determination which the allied powers seek to justify on the ground that such a union would strengthen Germany.

"In the case of the Republic of Czechoslovakia the boundaries of the ancient Kingdom of Bohemia were adhered to on the north and southwest, although these included several millions of men who speak German and deem themselves Germans. This departure from the principle of nationality may perhaps be defended on the ground both of antiquity and of the difficulty of ignoring the natural frontier established by the mountain masses on the northeast, on the northwest, and on the south; and the President of the Czechoslovak Republic, one of the most thoughtful and wide-minded men of our time, has assured me of the wish of his State to treat—as it will be truly their wisdom so to do—the German element with full friendliness and justice. Nevertheless there is a possibility that difficulties may hereafter arise from the desire of that element to be added to their Germanic brethren on the other side of the mountains."

ASSAULTS PARTITION OF HUNGARY.

On the provision in the peace treaty which strips Hungary of more than half her territory, Lord Bryce declared:

"No explanation has ever been given of this policy, and the reasons one hears hinted at are not sufficiently confirmed by proof to make it right for me to state them. You are doubtless aware that a thick shield of secrecy was, from the first, hung before the proceedings of the negotiating powers, and though subsequent revelations, not always discreet, have given some light, much still remains matter for conjecture. It is a singular fact that though no diplomatic proceedings for three generations have been so important as those of 1919-20, and though never before was there so general a demand for publicity, no previous negotiations have been shrouded in so deep a mystery. Many things were done which could not have been done in public had those in England, for instance, who knew the facts and desired justice, been able to express their views.

"I come now to other sources of trouble likely to arise between the South Slavs and their neighbors on the south and west. The allied powers prudently refused to divide Albania between Yugoslavia and Greece, leaving this interesting group of tribes to work out their own salvation in their own way. It has hitherto been a wild way, but it may be softened down now that the barbaric Turk has been removed.

"On the east Yugoslavia is confronted by Bulgaria, whose people, though they speak a Slavonic tongue which differs little from Serb and from Russian, are not of Slavonic but of Finnic stock. Descending from the middle course of the Volga in the eighth century A. D., they adopted the tongue of the Slavs, whom they conquered, but in physical structure and character they are sharply contrasted with the Serbs, their bodies more solid, their intellect less imaginative and susceptible, a people of patient industry and steady will, good fighters, and able to support defeat and rise from it with a resolve to recover what they have lost.

ASSERTS BULGARIA HAS NO FRIENDS.

"A bitter rivalry, dating back to the short war of 1885, has unfortunately created bad relations between them and the Serbs and become one of the factors in preventing the formation of that confederation of the Balkan peoples, to include Serbs, Greeks, and Rumanians, as well as Bulgarians, which the friends of the races liberated from Turkish tyranny dreamed of 40 years ago. Bulgaria has at present no friends anywhere, for the Rumanians have taken territory inhabited by a Bulgarian population in the Dobrudsha, south of the lower Danube; the Greeks have received parts of Thrace, where there is a large Bulgarian element, and occupy the seaports on the north coast of the Aegean Sea; and the Serbs have appropriated a large region in southern Macedonia, where the Bulgarian element is in a large majority.

"This was one of the errors committed by the allied powers assembled at Paris. Disregarding the appeal of the Bulgarians to the principles of nationality and self-determination, which would have given southern Macedonia to Bulgaria, refusing even to constitute that region a small and more or less autonomous State under the direction of the allied powers or of the League of Nations, they assigned most of it to Serbia, which had conquered it from the Bulgarians in 1913, and the rest to Greece. The Macedonians have had to submit, but neither they nor their brethren in the Kingdom of Bulgaria have renounced their aspirations; so one may fear trouble in this quarter as soon as a prospect of satisfying those aspirations rises over the horizon."

Turning to Russia, Lord Bryce said:

"If the experience of States which have in past times lapsed into anarchy or fallen under the dominion of a group of adventurers ruling by mere force, without a shred of constitutional or moral authority, were to furnish any ground for a forecast, we should expect the rise of military despotism like that of Bonaparte. But whence or when will the deliverer appear? Three attempts have been made and have failed. Whoever reestablishes order will find a country from which most of its best men have been removed, some by starvation, many by murder, others by exile, so his task will be all the more difficult.

"But it must be remembered that Russia herself, once her internal troubles have subsided and she is again a military power, will probably endeavor to reconquer all the territories which she has recently lost, except perhaps Poland and Finland. The Russian exiles, survivors from the old régime, who have escaped into western Europe make no secret of their desire to recover the Baltic lands which had been largely Russified before 1917, and even the territories beyond the Caucasus, in which the native races had been only superficially affected by Czarist rule.

"Such an attempt would raise a whole crop of new questions capable of furnishing materials for new wars. A Russia of 80,000,000 people, with the immense natural wealth of Siberia added to her own, would be formidable to her neighbors. Before the war she was formidable enough to alarm Germany, and would have been more than a match for any European power had not her administrative system, military and naval as well as civil, been worm-eaten by a corruption which crept up into the very highest circles like a hidden dry-rot."

Continuing this survey, Lord Bryce found also much inflammable material in Turkey and said he wondered why "the Turkish Government, which had in 1915 massacred 1,000,000 of its Christian subjects—women and children as well as men—and had treated the British prisoners whom it had captured in Mesopotamia with an inhumanity which caused the death of more than half of the private soldiers—the officers would probably have suffered equally but for the intervention on their behalf by German officers—why after these crimes that Government should have been treated by the Allies with such extraordinary lenity and should now have fresh indulgence offered to it by proposed modifications in the treaty of Sevres—these are mysteries the explanation of which is probably known to some of you as it is to me. But the secret is one which, as Herodotus says of some of those tales which he heard from the priests in Egypt, it would be improper for me to disclose."

EXPORTATION OF FARM PRODUCTS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1915) to provide for the purchase of farm products in the United States, to sell the same in foreign countries, and for other purposes.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I desire first of all to call the attention of the Senate to the method by which it is now attempted and practically successfully attempted to substitute for the Norris bill a measure which, as my colleague has said, was evidently originated outside of the Senate.

In the previous administration our friends on the other side of the aisle freely criticized the administration of Woodrow Wilson for its attempt to dictate legislation, and criticized Members on this side of the aisle very freely for yielding to that dictation.

One might have assumed after such preachments and such criticisms that this session of Congress, with its enormous Republican majority, might at least have freed itself from such a charge, but we find already early in this administration that the control of legislation is not in the House of Representatives and the Senate, but is at the other end of the Avenue.

Mr. President, there was another distinction between the so-called Executive dictation of the former administration and the present dictation, to which I want to call the attention of my Republican friends. It is this: When the Woodrow Wilson administration went into office it had a right to assume that it had received a mandate from the American people to enact certain constructive legislation. It prepared that legislation, submitted it to Congress, and used all the power which the backing of the people gives a new administration to force that legislation through Congress. That legislation, with some amendments and some changes, went through, and it fulfilled the pledges that had been made when Woodrow Wilson was elected President. Now, we witness in this administration a different situation. Instead of submitting to the Congress of the United States a program of constructive legislation, in order to fulfill promises which were made to the people in the last election, Congress is practically left to its own sweet will, and in a disorganized way it floats along, week after week, with almost nothing accomplished; but when the House of Representatives and the Senate indicate a disposition to enact certain legislation which they feel the public necessities require, when it is on the point of enacting such legislation dictation comes from the other end of the Avenue and legislation is slaughtered by the decree of the Executive; in other words, it is a negative dictation to destroy what the representatives of the people are about to enact. We have seen an evidence of that on a former occasion when the President of the United States came to the Senate and used his personal influence concerning a great bill which was then before the Senate and was likely to pass, a bill that had been reported by a committee, a bill which was taken up by a vote of the Senate, but which upon the demand of the Executive was recommitted to the committee.

So in this case one of the great committees of the Senate, the Agricultural Committee, responding to an evident distress in the agricultural industry and in agricultural regions, formulates a bill, which was drawn by my colleague, the chairman of the committee, the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], reports it favorably to the Senate, and submits it for consideration.

The Senate by a vote decides to consider the bill; it makes it the unfinished business; and there soon develops a sentiment here which indicates that the bill in some form, either as originally reported or as amended by the Senate, is likely to pass. Then, from the other end of the Avenue, we learn through the public press that the President of the United States is likely again to visit the Senate and to protest against the passage of that bill. Finally, however, as a substitute for that and as an expedient more consonant with legislative proprieties, administration influence and administration men draft a bill of a different character, and, at the dictation of the Executive, that bill, or substantially that bill, is to be substituted for the bill which my colleague drew and which the Agricultural Committee reported to the Senate.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska yield?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield.

Mr. KELLOGG. Does the Senator from Nebraska not know that the Agricultural Committee, by a vote of 10 to 2, adopted the substitute? Does the Senator think that administration influence has changed the opinions of most or all of his colleagues on the other side of the Chamber?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, what the Senator from Minnesota says is true. The Agricultural Committee has adopted the substitute bill, just as other Senators here of the majority party have accepted the dictation that has come from the Executive.

Mr. KELLOGG. What about the minority?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The members of the Agricultural Committee are no different from the other Senators here.

Mr. KELLOGG. What about the Senator's colleagues?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The members of the committee have yielded to an Executive demand, and, after having considered a bill and reported it to the Senate and supported it here in the Senate, they permit it to be set aside and a very largely different bill to be substituted for it.

Mr. KELLOGG. What about the colleagues of the Senator on the other side of the Chamber who are not supporting the original bill but are supporting the substitute?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Well, Mr. President, I do not suppose the Senator from Minnesota expects me to criticize those who differ from me. There are upon this side of the Chamber many Senators representing agricultural districts who are anxious to secure legislation, and many of them looked upon the bill which was introduced by my colleague as a measure which would bring about relief; but those Senators, when the majority takes the position that it proposes to kill that bill, will take any other measure which promises to afford some measure of relief. So I think there may be a reason why Senators upon this side of the Chamber who represent agricultural districts will support the substitute.

Mr. TOWNSEND and Mr. LENROOT addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BROUSSARD in the chair). Does the Senator from Nebraska yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I desire to ask the Senator from Nebraska if he has read the two bills, and which he thinks is the better bill from the standpoint of the farmers?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I have not taken the floor for the purpose of discussing the merits of the bills.

Mr. KELLOGG. But simply to make a political speech.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I shall discuss some of the merits of the bills, and I am making a political speech, as the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] suggests. I am not the first Senator, however, who has made a political speech; I have heard Senators upon the other side do so; and I feel that it is a perfectly legitimate proposition at this time to call to the attention of Senators who a few months ago denounced Executive dictation that they now are becoming parties to the very thing which they were so loud in denouncing in the former administration.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield.

Mr. LENROOT. I should like to ask the Senator from Nebraska if he is not aware of the fact that a majority of the Democratic Senators who have spoken upon this subject have stated upon the floor that they preferred the substitute bill to the bill as originally reported by the Committee on Agriculture?

Mr. TOWNSEND. If the Senator from Nebraska will permit me, that was what I intended to say. I am not so much interested in the political aspects of the matter, although I am prepared to argue the question of Executive dictation to which the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] has referred. However, is it not the duty of the Senate when matters of legislation come before it to obtain the best possible measure of relief?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yes; certainly. That is an obvious proposition.

Mr. TOWNSEND. That is the object that ought to govern the Senate?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yes.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The pending measure has been brought before the Senate in a perfectly orderly way. I deny that there has been any dictation from the President. The President has simply submitted his views, as it was his duty to do, and has left the Senate free, without any threat or any intimidation, to take any action it may please.

A committee of the Senate has acted upon the bill in a non-partisan manner and a great majority of the committee, as shown by an almost unanimous vote, believe that the measure that is now before the Senate as amended by the committee will accomplish the purposes that we desire accomplished better than would the original bill. I again ask what is the duty of the Senate under such circumstances as those?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, the duty of the Senate, in my opinion, is to show some legislative independence, and when one of its great committees has originated a piece of legislation it is the obligation of the Senate to give that legislation some consideration. That legislation has had no consideration; we are not discussing it; we have not voted upon it; we are merely assuming, as a matter of fact, that the substitute bill which comes, as my colleague, Senator NORRIS, stated before he was stricken with his illness, from the administration officials of the United States, is being accepted by the majority of the Senate, and its merits cut no figure.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield, but not for a speech.

Mr. SIMMONS. I merely wish to correct a statement made by the Senator. I wish to say that the substitute now pending has been prepared after consultation with many Democratic Senators.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I understand that.

Mr. SIMMONS. And it incorporates many of their suggestions. I wish to say that the Senator is absolutely wrong—

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do not yield for a speech.

Mr. SIMMONS. I am merely going to say the Senator is wrong in the statement that he just made.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That will be sufficient.

Mr. SIMMONS. I can not say it in a word.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do not yield to the Senator for a speech.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator has just said that the Norris bill has had no consideration. The Senator is wholly mistaken about that. He was not in the Chamber at the time, perhaps, when we spent a whole day here after the Kellogg substitute was presented, and the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] explained it, I myself explained it, and the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] replied on that day in a two-hour speech. After that whole day devoted to the explanation and discussion of the measure, the Agricultural Committee met and reversed itself, turning down the Norris bill and adopting the substitute by a vote of 10 to 2.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, the Senator from North Carolina is welcome to his opinion, and I respect his opinion, as a usual thing; but every Senator in the Chamber knows the real reason why the pending amendment has been substituted for the original bill. It is because of Executive influence and administration demands, which take the place of Executive determination to defeat the original bill. I am not going to discuss that any further.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield.

Mr. KENYON. I think the statement of the Senator from North Carolina is not exactly correct. The Agricultural Committee did not support what is known as the Kellogg substitute. They tried to take the best part of the Kellogg substitute, which is practically all of it, I think, and added to it the parts of the Norris bill which they believed were helpful, making a composite bill out of the two. That is the measure that the committee reported.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield.

Mr. EDGE. I think the Senator from Nebraska made the statement that the Norris bill as originally introduced was not discussed on the floor of the Senate. I think he is entirely mistaken in that statement, because the Norris bill, before even the substitute of the Senator from Minnesota or the committee substitute was considered, was discussed for two whole days on the floor of the Senate by several Senators, including myself.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do not care to split hairs on this proposition. I am pointing out that the Norris bill has not been seriously considered following the time that the administration circles decided upon its defeat; when the administration circles decided that it should be defeated, it was simply a question of the means to defeat it; and finally, instead of an absolute attempt to defeat it in cold blood the substitute was brought in. I do not care to go any further in that matter, because I have another line on which I desire to speak.

Now, as to the merits of the bill. This is the third or fourth attempt to galvanize the War Finance Corporation into beneficial activity. The first one occurred in March, 1919, when the Congress passed an act giving the War Finance Corporation additional power for the purpose of promoting the exportation of agricultural and other products of the United States. As originally introduced, it was for agricultural products, but it was then enlarged so as to include agricultural and "other products." That was done in March, 1919, and under that authorization the War Finance Corporation comparatively did nothing at all to promote the exportation of American products.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do.

Mr. LENROOT. Who was to blame for that? Was it the Democratic administration, or the Secretary of the Treasury, or not?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I am not making an attempt to locate personal blame. I doubt whether there was any personal blame. I do not believe that the War Finance Corporation, as organized, can promote foreign commerce to any extent. When the matter was under discussion here, while I voted for the measure in 1919 and voted again in December of last year to revive the War Finance Corporation, I did so with the statement that I doubted whether it would have any important effect except possibly a psychological effect among the exporters of the United States.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yes.

Mr. KELLOGG. Does the Senator know what products the War Finance Corporation has placed in foreign countries since it was rehabilitated?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I have not time to give all the figures; but the statement published by the War Finance Corporation in November of last year—

Mr. KELLOGG. I am speaking about what it has done since last winter, this spring and summer. It was not revived until last winter.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I shall take that up in its order. At the time that we passed the joint resolution reviving the War Finance Corporation for the purpose of promoting exports—a joint resolution which President Wilson vetoed, and which we passed over his veto—the statement was made that export loans were $42,000,000, and other statements made at that time indicated that they had promoted exports to the extent of a few million dollars—I do not know just how much; fifty or sixty million dollars altogether—but very little in the way of agricultural exports; their loans were almost altogether for the promotion of manufactured exports, and very insignificant even in that line.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield while I read him the figures—$69,000,000 of agricultural products since the revival of the War Finance Corporation?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I have the figures here, and I can give them in detail.

Mr. KELLOGG. Why does not the Senator state them, then?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think the Senator is mistaken as to the amount, but I will say that when we passed the joint resolution reviving the War Finance Corporation six months ago the statement was then made, and is in the official report, that their loans for the promotion of exports at that time were only $42,000,000. That was at a time when our exports amounted to something like seven thousand million dollars a year. Their loans were a mere fly bite. The influence of the War Finance Corporation was something merely nominal in the way of promoting the exports of the United States. It was insignificant. Within a few days I have received, as other Senators have received, a statement of the War Finance Corporation showing their activities in promoting our international commerce. They say, for instance, as the Senator has just quoted, that the War Finance Corporation has already approved advances or now has negotiations pending for advances amounting to a total of $63,000,000. What is that to a country whose exports amount to six or seven thousand million dollars a year? It is insignificant. Furthermore, when they go on to specify the amount of these loans, the officers of the corporation say that "the largest transactions relate to cotton, the Nation's greatest single export, on which the corporation has agreed to loan $16,500,000."

What is $16,500,000 to cotton exports which amount to over $600,000,000 this year? It is insignificant. It means that only 2 per cent of the cotton exports are financed by this corporation. When it comes to wheat exports, its activities are still more insignificant. They state in this circular just received to-day, under the head of wheat advances, that none have been made, but they "have under consideration" making $7,500,000 in wheat advances. What is $7,500,000 loaned to exporters of wheat, considering the fact that we exported during the last 12 months $700,000,000 worth of wheat? One per cent financed by this corporation! No; not even 1 per cent financed; only 1 per cent of a year's exports of wheat under negotiation.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. In a moment.

I do not know whether it is the nature of the War Finance Corporation or the personnel of the War Finance Corporation or the nature of the situation which makes it an ineffective agent, but it has been ineffective. It has failed to function. At the present time the War Finance Corporation has a credit in the Treasury of the United States of over $400,000,000. Its capital is only $500,000,000. In other words, its capital is and long has been practically idle, and has been idle for months, and nothing was being done.

Mr. EDGE and Mr. KING addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I promised to yield to the Senator from Georgia first.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, does the Senator from Nebraska, who is now addressing the Senate, mean to be understood as saying that he would have voted for the Norris bill as it then stood, without amendment?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think the Norris bill would have been amended, Mr. President, if it had had fair consideration here.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. In what respect would it have been amended?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do not know. The Norris bill was a sincere and a serious effort to remedy the situation of the agricultural interests, which is very difficult; and I was glad when the committee reported the bill and brought it into the Senate in order that it might have a hearing.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LENROOT. I should like to ask the Senator what provision of the Norris bill that is not in the substitute he would have favored if the original bill had been before the Senate?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator may ask that question, and he may answer it in his own speech. I am not going to be diverted from the line that I have taken up here.

Mr. KING and Mr. EDGE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. The Senator from Nebraska used a moment ago, and I think very properly, the word "psychological." He voted for the revival or rehabilitation of this corporation because of the psychological effect.

I know the Senator is fair, and wants to be fair. I think he ought to supplement the statement he made a moment ago about the small amount advanced by the War Finance Corporation for the purpose of facilitating exports by stating that the War Finance Corporation has used its influence, and successfully used its influence, to induce various exporters to advance money for the purpose of financing exports; and the large amount of exports is directly traceable in part to the activities of the War Finance Corporation, and to the psychology resulting from the fact that it was functioning at all. When we revived it, when it evinced a purpose to expend something, and when it utilized its influence to engage in activities other organizations, I think it was serving a very useful purpose; and as far as I am concerned I should be very glad if it would induce private corporations and individuals everywhere to furnish the money for the purpose of exporting, rather than availing itself of money which we may have appropriated.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I am glad to hear what the Senator says, and I have not any criticism to make on the personnel of the War Finance Corporation. As I say, I voted for legislation to revive and continue it. I voted to override the President's veto. I believed in making the attempt, because it was the only thing proposed; but the course of events since the revival does not bear out the statement that it has had any effect at all.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. In a moment. We revived the War Finance Corporation in December of last year. In that month our exports were $720,000,000. The next month they were $654,000,000. The next month they were $486,000,000. The next month they were $386,000,000. The next month they were $340,000,000. The next month they were $329,000,000, and in June they were $340,000,000. They have been almost cut in two since the War Finance Corporation was revived.

I am not criticizing the War Finance Corporation for that tremendous collapse of our international commerce. It is due to other causes; but I am saying that I believe this bill will prove a delusion and a snare, and that it will not promote our foreign commerce.

I now yield to the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. EDGE. The Senator from Nebraska a few moments ago, in detailing the activities of the War Finance Corporation, referred to wheat. I know that he is very anxious that the Senate should have the facts. I will read, if I may, a four-line telegram from the Northwest, addressed to Mr. Meyer, of the War Finance Corporation:

Arrived home to-day from my eastern trip. I want to say to you that our Northwest farmers are very grateful for the aid promised, and will take great pride in handling the transaction so it will prove satisfactory in every respect to all concerned. They request I extend their thanks.

(Signed)

GEORGE C. JEWETT,

General Manager Northwest Wheat Growers' Association.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yes; I have already read that telegram, and of course I am glad that this gentleman is hopeful of something being done; but I will say, as a matter of fact, that the actual advances made to the wheat growers and to the wheat exporters are almost negligible—1 per cent of our total wheat exports during the last 12 months.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SIMMONS. I can tell the Senator the reason why the War Finance Corporation have not advanced any greater sum than they have for the purpose of exportation of cotton.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Will the Senator do that in his own time?

Mr. SIMMONS. I can do it in a minute. The Senator has made the statement here, and I should like to answer it. The reason is that the powers conferred upon them by the present act are very limited. It was found that they could only advance to persons who were buying for immediate exportation; and they found, in addition to that, that Europe was in such a condition that it could only buy cotton as it needed it, instead of buying, as heretofore, for a year's consumption at one time.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I understand that that is the reason, Mr. President.

Mr. SIMMONS. This bill enlarges their powers, and permits them to loan to an American producer, through his bank, money to enable him to hold his cotton until the European market is ready to take it under this process of buying from day to day.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It is possible that it may have some beneficial effect in relieving the banks of their frozen credits. I do not deny that it may have some such effect. What I say is that our experience with the War Finance Corporation is that it is an ineffective agent to produce the results that we desire to have produced.

THE BANK OF NATIONS.

Now, Mr. President, I am going to take a little of the time of the Senate to set forth what I think is the impending evil, and the manner in which it could be reached by a constructive piece of legislation.

The United States is the greatest producing nation in the world. It is the greatest exporting nation in the world. Our country produces more than any other country in its cotton fields, its agricultural sections in the West, its mines in the mountain regions of the West and of the North, as well as its factories. We are vitally interested in international commerce, and as I look at the situation the difficulties in the United States to-day are not domestic. They are international. They are due to the fact that we are not able to market the surplus products which we are making or which we can make. We can manufacture in our factories more products than the American people can consume. We can mine in our mines a great deal more of copper and iron and coal and silver than the American people can use. We can raise twice the amount of cotton in the South than the American people can consume. We can raise a great deal more wheat and meat than the American people can consume. Now, if we are not permitted to sell our surplus products abroad, to Europe particularly, we will have idle men in our mills, as we have now. We will have prostrate cotton interests, as we have now. We will have copper mines closed up, as we have now. We will have a failure in the demand for coal, as we have now. We will have our railroads, as we have them now, in a distressed condition for lack of business. We will have millions of idle men, as we have now. That is an international situation, and it brings us face to face with the proposition, What are we going to do to restore to the people of the United States the markets of the world?

Why can we not sell to the world? Why can not the American people, who are anxious to work and anxious to produce, sell their surplus products to the rest of the world? The rest of the world needs them. We know that they need our copper. We know that they need our cotton. We know that they need much of our manufactured goods and our agricultural products. Why do they not buy them? Why is our international commerce practically in collapse to-day? Why are we exporting to the rest of the world to-day in most of our products less than we were before the war?

Why are we exporting to the rest of the world to-day one-half the amount we exported a year ago? Why have our exports dropped from eight thousand million dollars down to something like three thousand million dollars a year in the last 12 months?

My own opinion is that it is because there is an utter failure to finance international commerce. That is worth thinking of. If we are interested in international commerce, we are interested in having it financed. Men can not buy for cash. If the people of the United States were compelled to do their business on a cash basis, business would collapse, and we would go back almost to barbarism. We have devised in the United States a great system, which we call the Federal reserve banking system, and before that we devised a national banking system. What were they for? They were to give a system of banking and currency to the people of the United States in order to afford credit to business, and our business is carried on by credit, as everybody knows. Eight times as much business is done on credit as is done by cash.

Great Britain has a banking and currency system that is similar. Germany has a system, the Reichsbank, and France has a system, the Bank of France, great reserve banks, which unite all the banking institutions, and afford credit to the people of those countries, as we afford credit to ours; and to-day, crushed though Germany is in a military sense, and embarrassed as she is in an economic sense, a business man can go into a bank in Germany and borrow on just as easy terms as can an American business man in a bank in the United States.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Borrow what?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Borrow money.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. What sort of money?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The sort of money they use in the country there.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. What sort of money?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I hope the Senator will not divert me. The German business man borrows whatever he needs to pay his labor and to pay for his raw material.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. He borrows paper money.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Of course he does, and it serves his purpose. In France they have a similar system, and in Great Britain they have a similar system, and to-day interest rates are just as low in those countries as they are in the United States, and in some of those countries they are lower; and their credit is just as good, and they are carrying on their business affairs among themselves just as satisfactorily; I believe they are doing it more satisfactorily than we are. I believe credit conditions are better there, because they have not had this deflation which we have had over here.

So I say that every country in the world has established for its own people a system of banking and currency by which credit is supplied to carry on business of all kinds.

But all of those systems stop at the water line of the Atlantic Ocean or at the boundary line of those nations. The great international commerce of the world has no banking and currency system to afford credit to the people who engage in it.

Before the war a makeshift had grown up, a makeshift very largely in the hands of British international bankers, who promoted their trade by a system of international credit, followed somewhat later by a system of international banking which developed in New York, on a much smaller scale, and with much less ability behind it. The war practically smashed those systems, and at the present time there is no international credit system and nothing to regulate international exchange.

The result is that international exchange is now a matter of gamble and speculation, not of legitimate business. If you are an exporter and you have a half a million dollars' worth of meat you want to sell in Europe, you are compelled to demand cash for it in New York. You are afraid to ship that meat to a purchaser across the ocean and accept pay at the rate of exchange as it might be when the vessel gets over there.

I was talking to a man the other day who represented one of the lumber export houses of New Orleans. The firm had shipped a shipload of lumber to Buenos Aires, sold to people down there. While the vessel was on the ocean, during either January or February, Argentine exchange went down in a great fall, and when the vessel arrived the firms which had ordered the lumber refused to take it; they could not afford to buy American exchange to pay for it; and the lumber had to be sold at auction, and the shipper lost $50,000. He said, "That ends my export business in lumber to South America. I will not take any more chances." This is only a sample case.

The fact is that at the present time this country is suffering because hundreds of exporters have gone into bankruptcy, or have been forced to give up business, because they are afraid to do business in this fluctuating exchange, which is one thing one week and another thing another, one thing on Saturday and another on Monday. The fluctuation has been so great in some cases as to cause enormous losses.

Those are the facts. There is no system to provide credit for this business, and no system to regulate exchange, but it is left to a lot of international pirates, who gamble and speculate in the exchange in an illegitimate way, while legitimate exporters and legitimate importers are doing a dangerous business if they attempt to ship and take their pay in any form except cash on leaving New York.

Mr. SMOOT and Mr. LENROOT addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield, and, if so, to whom?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, we all know that the exchange values of money in all of the countries are in a condition that was never known before in the history of the world.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. And I want to say to the Senator from Nebraska that I have not any doubt but what Germany intends to keep her money worth just about what it is to-day. If she does, I predict now that just as soon as Germany gets in condition to manufacture all classes of goods, as she did before the war, she will control the commerce of the world up to the amount that she can manufacture, and there is no limit upon that amount except the ability of Germany to get raw material and labor; and I will say this while we are on it, if the Senator does not object, that to-day the mark in Germany is worth a cent and a quarter, but that is on a gold basis. She can export her goods to America, and she demands gold for every mark's worth of goods she exports. She can take that one and a quarter cent mark and buy 4.6 cents in labor in Germany, in rent in Germany, in shoes in Germany, in clothing in Germany, and in food products in Germany, and she has, as far as America is concerned, three times the advantage in making goods for exportation, and she is going to keep that advantage. She has an advantage over England, she has an advantage over France, she has an advantage over Belgium, or over any country where the exchange is much higher than it is in Germany. In fact, I am quite sure, Mr. President, from reading the articles that have been sent me from Germany, this is a deliberate plan, and will be carried out successfully, I am quite sure. I was interested in the Senator's proposition of establishing an international bank.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. If the Senator will permit me to get to it, I would like to close by stating what I propose, which will take only a few minutes.

What the Senator says about Germany's power to export may be true; that is a proposition that has to be met by the rest of the world when we come to it. My judgment is that the United States has very little to fear from Germany. I think Germany is going to be a great customer of ours; I think she will eat up enormous quantities of our exportable surplus, and I am glad to see that the trade with Germany is growing. It is about the only country in the world whose trade with us is growing at the present time on a large scale. I hope it will continue and I hope it will be reciprocal. I hope we will buy from Germany, as we export to Germany. I know we will have to buy from Germany if we propose to export to her.

Mr. REED. May I make one observation?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Certainly.

Mr. REED. If the logic of the Senator from Utah is correct, then the rotter a currency is in any country the greater advantage it has in trade, and we ought to go to greenbacks and turn all the printing presses of the country loose getting them out quickly.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator may think that, but we are up against a proposition which a mere statement will not change. There is not any question but that Germany, with the mark at 1½ cents, with the power in her own country to produce three times the amount through the passage of certain laws and the regulation of prices, has an advantage of the American people in producing goods to send into the commerce of the world.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That is another story, as they say. But what I want now, while I have the opportunity, is to call the attention of Senators to the fact that there is a perfectly legitimate expedient which can be taken up at this time, a tried expedient, which has been used by every nation in the world to promote trade and establish credit, and that is the establishment of a system of banking and currency to afford credit for this international commerce, which has none at the present time.

My proposition and my bill is only a suggestion. I realize that the majority leaders must take it up and work it out, if it is to go at all. My suggestion is the establishment of an international bank, which I would call the bank of nations. I believe it should have a capital of $2,400,000,000, the greatest institution in the world. I believe that capital could be paid in, one-third in gold and two-thirds in the interest-bearing bonds of solvent nations; and I define a solvent nation as one which recognizes and takes care of its external obligations, which has established a balanced budget, and which has united with the United States in some form of disarmament for the purpose of making its government solvent.

Mr. REED. And pays its interest on current loans?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. One which observes its outside obligations. Any Government has power to discount its own home obligations, to tax them and reduce them; but a solvent government must recognize its external obligations.

Mr. President, my suggestion is that this bank be established with a capital of $2,400,000,000; that the Secretary of the Treasury should at once take $1,300,000,000 of that capital for the United States and pay it in, one-third in gold and two-thirds in bonds, which he has under his control. In this case they could be British bonds, or French bonds, or a mixture of bonds, providing it could be established that they were valid, that the Governments which issued them were solvent, and would take care of their interest.

Then I would sell to the American people, particularly to bankers, exporters, and importers interested in international commerce, $200,000,000 of the capital paid in, in the same way. Then I would offer to the other nations of the world $900,000,000 of this capital of $2,400,000,000, and allow them to pay it in in the same way, one-third in gold and two-thirds in acceptable bonds. I would permit them by treaties, made through the President of the United States, treaties which would establish their rights as stockholders in the bank.

That bank I would dedicate to the financing of international commerce. I would authorize it to buy and sell exchange, to lend money to importers, to exporters, and to banks engaged in financing exporting and importing. I would authorize it to issue currency against a gold reserve, that currency to be the international dollar.

I call the attention of the Senate to the fact that at the present time we have in the United States one-half of all the gold in the world. We have as much gold here now as all of the other nations have combined. We are not using it, or rather we are only using it partially. We do not require it for our domestic uses. Some people are actually advocating that we should export it. But it is still coming to this country at an enormous rate. It has come here to the extent of $500,000,000 within the last 18 months. It is coming here now in great sums, and we are not using it, and the rest of the world is being deprived of it. Why can we not use that gold as the basis for an international currency? Why can we not have an international dollar which can finance international operations? And why can not this bank, with this enormous power, become a great clearing house through which all of the exporting and importing of this country and all other countries could be done, a clearing house in which somebody would be able to tell what the exchange would be at least 24 hours in advance? It would be an institution large enough to make it impossible for the speculators and gamblers and international pirates, who now are making money out of the fluctuations of international exchange, to continue their operations. Such an institution would be large enough to regulate if not to control international exchange—to stabilize it.

Right here, however, I wish to refer to what the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] said. I do not pretend that such a bank or any bank or any institution of any country should undertake to raise the values of foreign moneys. The law which controls those values is beyond any operation of the bank, but there can be an institution which can regulate the fluctuations. Certainly there is no reason why foreign exchange with a country should fall 15 or 20 per cent in one week. That is an artificial thing. That is a gambling proposition. This bank would be able to prevent that. It would be able to put into operation a regulation of international exchange, and then the business of exporting and importing would become safe. It is dangerous now. It is a dangerous thing to engage in the exporting and importing business simply on account of the enormous fluctuation in exchange as it goes on, violent fluctuations, gambling fluctuations, from time to time.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield.

Mr. EDGE. I am interested to have the Senator develop further how he could possibly establish an international dollar of equal value throughout the world when it is generally recognized that exchange will always be influenced almost entirely by the balance of trade conditions.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I will say to the Senator that the American dollar now is practically the only money that is on a gold basis, and we can keep it on a gold basis; but if we go on accumulating the gold of the world and keeping it here idle, acting as a dog in the manger, I would not be surprised if some of the other nations would undertake to demonetize gold and leave us sitting on top of our gold heap here. We have this gold and ought to use it. We ought to use it by authorizing this bank against a special gold reserve to issue this international currency, and it would be just as good as the American dollar is now and be accepted everywhere in international commerce. It should be limited to international commerce.

Mr. EDGE. I follow the Senator; but how would the value of the international dollar be in any way established because other nations are interested as stockholders in this institution? If the balance of trade remains as it is or fluctuates as it may in the future, how can the mere fact that nations are collected together doing a banking business influence except by the regularly established method which comes through the bidding for money to pay bills?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I suppose the Senator would not like to go into any great detailed argument here, and I am not yet equipped to do that. I am hoping my friend the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLEAN] will permit the Committee on Banking and Currency to have hearings upon this question, and I hope when that time comes we shall have the expert advice of everyone who knows anything about international trade.

I remember when our Committee on Banking and Currency had hearings in the early days of the Woodrow Wilson administration, the bankers, who now decry the idea of an international bank and say it is impossible, came before our committee and said the Federal reserve system was impossible. They said almost to a man that we could not get the American banker to enter into a system by which he would discount the notes in his bank with any central agency. They said we could not introduce the European system into the United States; that we could not get the American banker to discount his notes because he would regard it as an element of weakness, would regard it as a weak thing for a banker to do.

On the advice and largely the judgment of those bankers, almost every Republican Senator and almost every Republican Member of the House of Representatives voted against that system. So even though bankers may say now that this international bank is not a feasible proposition, I think we must have the advice of international merchants, traders, exporters, and importers, and be guided in part by their experience.

My idea is that the issuance of this currency by an international bank against the gold reserve will afford a medium of exchange which will largely take the place of gold in international settlements. I see no reason why such international currency, issued by this bank, should not be sent over here to pay balances, instead of attempting to send gold. Why not? We have stopped shipping gold in the United States.

Senators will remember that before the Federal reserve system was established we kept shipping gold back and forth over the United States, and express companies did an immense business in that. We never hear of a gold shipment now, or almost never. The gold is left in Washington or in New York and in the reserve banks of the country, and there is a mere book-keeping exchange; that is, the currency is shipped in exchange back and forth. There is no reason why international business can not be done in the same way.

Mr. EDGE. I am sure I agree with the Senator that there is some merit in his contention that we may have too much gold. Going back to the original proposition as I understand it, merely interrupting to give another thought, if it would be of any advantage, the Bank of England, with all its great resources recognized of course because they exist, has not been able in any way to relieve the very rapid depreciation of exchange in value of the English sovereign.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator entirely mistakes me if he thinks that I am recommending an attempt to check the depreciation. I have said specifically that that is governed by a law beyond our legislative control.

Mr. EDGE. Yes. I understand the Senator's main object—and it must be his main object if he is going to accomplish relief—is to try to affect exchange, which as now is a deterrent to foreign trade. But I understood the Senator to say very clearly that the combination of several of the countries of the world in this great international bank or an international dollar would have its effect on exchange. I can not follow that reasoning.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I will state it to the Senator in another way. I do not claim that any attempt should be made by way of legislation to regulate the value of the British pound or the German mark or the French franc or the Italian lira. What I claim is that we should put a stop to these violent fluctuations of values which take place and which distress international commerce and make it dangerous and bankrupt the exporters engaged in it.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Certainly.

Mr. McCORMICK. If I may interrupt the Senator for a question, unless we control the issue of paper by other Governments and the deficits in their budgets, how can we prevent fluctuation in the relative value of the lira and the dollar?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I am sure the Senator from Illinois will not claim that the fluctuation of the lira from week to week is dependent upon its issue in Italy. It is these fluctuations that occur violently, artificially, and destructively to commerce that we are interested in. The value of the lira may go down if they issue more paper money, just as the value of the mark has gone down, but there is no reason why it should fluctuate so as to disjoint international commerce and make exporting a dangerous business. We ought to know what its value is.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President—

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LENROOT. If a foreign buyer needs international dollars to pay for American goods, why is he not under exactly the same difficulties as when he needs American dollars to pay for them?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. These international dollars can be loaned. The very idea of this is to provide loans in international commerce comparable to what we now have in domestic commerce. I will say to the Senator from Wisconsin that if a man running a cotton mill in this country buys raw cotton he is not required to pay cash for it. There are means by which he can get credit until he turns that cotton into the finished product and liquidates the note given when he buys the cotton. When a German manufacturer proposes to buy cotton, he practically has to pay cash for it now. If there were an international bank with a branch in Germany, there is no reason why the German cotton manufacturer should not be able to buy that cotton on a reasonable credit and be given a reasonable time to turn his cotton into the finished product and liquidate his claim through the branch of the international bank in Germany.

Mr. LENROOT. Is not the difficulty in having the market for the finished product with which to make payments, and if there was a market, as there was before the war, would not the difficulties we now have disappear?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator refers to the German finished product?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think, as the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMITH] has said, that we can depend on Germany finding a market for her finished product. The world is not always going to be languishing.

Now, Mr. President, I have taken much more time than I expected. I know that the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] desires to take the floor, and so I shall conclude. I have taken the liberty of bringing this idea before Senators because of my strong conviction that we are in a depression which is going to proceed from bad to worse unless this Government does something on a big scale of a constructive character to change the situation and remedy some of the evils. We have on this side of the Chamber comparatively little power or responsibility. You on the other side of the Chamber have both, and I have introduced my bill for the bank of nations as a suggestion for your consideration. The situation is deplorable, and on you is the responsibility of affording relief.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Certainly.

Mr. McLEAN. The Senator is dissatisfied with the present proposal—that is, with the pending bill—and he thinks that it would be ineffective to accomplish the disposition of our surplus products. Do I understand the Senator to say he would substitute the international bank for the plan proposed by the substitute?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Oh, no; not at all. I will say to the Senator from Connecticut that I am going to vote against substituting the pending amendment for the Norris bill. If, however, that motion is carried, I shall then vote for the substitute, just as I shall vote for anything that is offered if it is the best that can be had.

Mr. McLEAN. Is it the Senator's idea that the plan which he has suggested would some time in the future operate as a substitute for the pending measure?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I am very confident that it will do more than any other thinkable thing to restore our exports and to build up international commerce. It is the one thing needed, the giving of credit and the establishment of power to regulate the international exchange.

Mr. McLEAN. The Senator's proposal is that we take $1,300,000,000 in gold out of the Treasury of the United States to furnish the capital for this new international bank?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yes; gold and bonds.

Mr. McLEAN. If the plan is to take money out of the Treasury of the United States for the purpose of withholding domestic food products until they can receive an orderly market abroad, the direct effect of that institution would be to suppress competition at home.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator is referring to the pending bill?

Mr. McLEAN. The idea which the Senator from Nebraska suggests as a substitute some time, seems to me, should be very carefully considered. By all means, if we are to establish a bank of that kind to raise prices, the capital should come from private persons and not be taken out of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I know that is the Senator's theory, and that is the theory advanced by bankers. In my discussions with them I have found that objection. They say that the Government should not go into the banking business. They said that when we established the Federal reserve banks. They objected to having the Government take a controlling interest in the affairs of the Federal reserve bank. But private capital is not going into this international banking business with any authority. It has to have the sovereign power of a government behind it to be effective, and in my opinion we must have the power of the Government in an international bank, in a bank of nations, and we must have a union of Governments for the purpose of controlling and regulating international exchange and for the purpose of affording a credit in international business.

Mr. McKELLAR obtained the floor.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me a moment?

Mr. McKELLAR. Certainly.

Mr. LENROOT. I should like to ask the Senator from Nebraska, in view of his statement, whether he is in favor of that provision of the Norris bill which authorizes the Government to buy and sell farm products?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Why does the Senator insist on discussing the Norris bill when the Norris bill probably has scarcely enough support here to get a record vote?

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator stated he is going to vote for it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yes; I am.

Mr. LENROOT. Is the Senator in favor of that particular provision?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I am not going to discuss it.

Mr. LENROOT. I thought not.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I am going to occupy only about 10 or 15 minutes of the Senate's time in analyzing and comparing the three proposals now before the Senate for farmers' legislation.

I am very much in favor of the proposed farmers' legislation. If there ever was a time when such legislation was necessary, that time is now. The condition of the farmers of the United States at this period is indeed deplorable. Farm products, when there is any market for them at all, bring not more than one-third or one-fourth as much as they did last year. Not only the home market but the foreign market for our products has fallen off enormously. The result is that not only are the farmers in a bad plight, but the rail transportation companies, the shipping companies, the manufacturers, and all the middlemen are in a like bad plight. The prosperity of the whole Nation being dependent upon the prosperous condition of the farmers, it is of the utmost necessity that steps be taken immediately to give our best aid to our agricultural interests. The prosperity of all other interests depends upon the prosperity of the farmers. This was the situation on the 31st of May of this year when Senator NORRIS, chairman of the Agricultural Committee, introduced a bill for the relief of the farmers.

THE NORRIS BILL.

On that date Senator NORRIS introduced a bill providing for aid to farmers in exporting their products. The bill provided for an independent "farmers' export financing corporation," consisting of three directors, the Secretary of Agriculture, and two new members to be appointed by the President. Powers were given to this commission similar to those now held by the War Finance Corporation in regard to exports.

The Government was to take all the stock, amounting to $100,000,000. The corporation was then empowered to issue bonds in ten times the amount of its paid-in capital. This would give the corporation a capital of $1,100,000,000. These bonds were to be substantially tax free and were all to be guaranteed by the Government. The corporation was further empowered to aid in financing producers and dealers in exporting their raw or manufactured products for a period not exceeding five years. The corporation was also authorized to buy and sell such products. The purpose of this bill was excellent. The demand for such legislation was and is undeniable. If we could not have secured a better bill, I would have certainly supported the Norris bill.

OBJECTIONS TO THE BILL.

I desire now to mention the objections to the Norris bill. The objections to the bill, as I see them, are, first, the creation of a new and a necessarily inexperienced commission, with all the vast expense attending it; second, the putting of the Government in the business of buying and selling farm products, which I do not believe in; third, the limiting of financial aid to exporters alone; fourth, the guaranteeing of the bonds by the Government; and, fifth, the making of the bonds tax free.

The bill was debated for many days and its opponents claimed to have the votes to defeat it. Many of the Republican "old guard" declared it would never pass, and, of course, with their objections, we all know it could not have passed. Then came, like a bomb from an airplane, the Kellogg substitute, and the Norris bill was chloroformed.

Here let me say that I do not approve of the treatment given the able Senator from Nebraska by the administration in reference to this legislation. Of course, this is not, accurately speaking, my affair. It is really none of my business. Republican fights are or ought to be no concern of any good Democrat; but ordinarily it would have seemed that common fairness would have required that the administration should have introduced its own substitute for a bill through its own constituted committee authority and not through an outsider. It must have been very humiliating to the distinguished Senator from Nebraska to have stood by and seen his measure sidetracked and killed without his consent and, perhaps, even without his knowledge. My sympathy goes out to the Senator from Nebraska. I can not but believe that he was not treated fairly. He was at work on this legislation while others were not even considering it. He is entitled to the credit for whatever legislation is passed.

THE KELLOGG SUBSTITUTE.

I now wish to refer to the so-called Kellogg substitute. Generally speaking, the substitute that has been offered, having the identical purpose of the Norris bill, is, in my judgment, in many respects superior to the Norris bill. When certain amendments to it shall be adopted, as I am sure they will be adopted, the substitute will be of very much greater benefit to the farmers than the original Norris bill. I desire briefly to point out some of the improvements of the so-called Kellogg plan over the Norris plan. They are as follows:

First. The Kellogg plan uses the already established War Finance Corporation to do the work. I think this is of great and beneficial importance, because not only will it effect a great saving to the Government, but it puts the execution of the plan in the hands of a board already doing identically the same thing in a smaller way. The machinery has already been set up. New men will not have to be broken in, for competent and efficient men of ripe experience and great ability are already serving on the War Finance Corporation Board. It is a tremendous improvement in this proposed legislation to place the execution of it in the hands of the War Finance Corporation rather than to constitute a new corporation. The delay attendant upon the establishment of a new commission to perform this work might perhaps defeat the real good which it is hoped to accomplish.

Second. In the next place, I do not think that the Government ought to be put in the business of buying and selling agricultural products. I think it is a wrong policy. In my opinion, the Norris bill goes too far in that respect, and the Kellogg substitute is therefore much better.

Third. Again, under the Norris bill the financial aid was limited to exporters, while under the Kellogg substitute, whenever the directors of the corporation believe the public interests require, "it is empowered to make advances to any bank, banker, or trust company in the United States which may have made advances for agricultural purposes, including the breeding, raising, fattening, and marketing of live stock."

In other words, we not only give the aid of this institution to those who export our products but to those who are helping now to tide the farmers over in the way of lending them money. This is a most important function for the corporation to perform, and it is a tremendous improvement over the Norris bill. It is the one great distinguishing feature of the Kellogg substitute and should be adopted without question.

Fourth. Again, while the bonds issued by the War Finance Corporation are virtually guaranteed by the Government under the Kellogg amendment, still they are not in fact so guaranteed, and such action is made unnecessary by directing that the Federal reserve banks shall be authorized to discount the notes or bonds of the corporation. This is a great improvement upon the Norris provision in this regard.

Again, the Norris provision makes the bonds tax free. I think enough tax-free bonds have already been issued in this country, and we ought to be very careful about increasing the number of such tax-free bonds.

THE McNARY SUBSTITUTE.

The McNary substitute, for the most part, consists of the Kellogg substitute with some amendments. The principal amendments are:

First, extending the life of the War Finance Corporation; second, extending the benefits of the act in a modified way to the producers; third, extending it to foreign Governments or subdivisions thereof; fourth, giving the corporation power to purchase, sell, or otherwise deal in debentures, adequately secured, issued by banking corporations organized under section 25a of the Federal reserve act; fifth, to investigate foreign market conditions; sixth, fixing a limitation upon the interest rate. In the main, these constitute improvements upon the Kellogg substitute; and no doubt the McNary substitute will be adopted.

AMENDMENTS.

There are, however, certain amendments that should be made to any substitute bill.

The Kellogg substitute, first, directs that loans may be made "to any person, firm, corporation, or association engaged in the United States in dealing in or marketing any such products," and so forth. I believe this ought to be amended so as to include the producers of such products or associations of producers. It is claimed that the War Finance Corporation has not sufficient force to ascertain the financial responsibility of producers or associations of producers. That may be so, but the same reasoning would hold as to dealers or associations of dealers. It would not be harder to investigate as to the financial responsibility of a producer or an association of producers than it would to ascertain the financial responsibility of a dealer or association of dealers. By all means an amendment to this effect should be adopted, for surely the farmers ought to be put on the same basis as the middlemen. The McNary substitute aids the situation, but does not go far enough.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator if he likes the provision of the bill which allows loans to be made only to those who expect to export but will not permit the loan of a penny to a man who holds his agricultural products if he intends to sell in the domestic market?

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not; I am arguing that proposition now.

Again, I believe that section 17 of the Norris bill should be inserted in the bill finally to be adopted. That section provides as follows:

That for the purposes of securing reduced freight rates on export shipments of agricultural products the Interstate Commerce Commission is hereby authorized, either upon its own initiative or upon the application of the corporation, any common carrier, or any shipper, to grant such reduction in freight rates upon such products for export shipment as may in the judgment of said commission be fair and just.

This ought to prove a big incentive to the exportation of our products. However, if such an amendment is likely to inject the railroad refunding controversy in this bill, the amendment should not be offered.

In passing, Mr. President, I desire to say that unquestionably the present freight rates are proving a hindrance to business. In some cases, at least, freight rates are higher than the traffic will bear, and, of course, they ought to be reduced. The railroads owe it to themselves to reduce the freight rates. The income of the railroads would be infinitely larger if the rates were reduced.

Another amendment that could well be added to this bill would be one authorizing this board to discount the paper on farm loan banks to the extent, say, of $100,000,000, so that the purposes of the farm loan bank might be more expeditiously carried out. With these amendments it seems to me that the Kellogg substitute would be an excellent piece of legislation, much better than the original Norris bill, and should be passed.

I want to say that, whatever amendment or substitute may be adopted, the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] and his committee are entitled to the great credit for originating this legislation. The Senator from Nebraska has done a great public service. It never would have passed but for his splendid work. I do not believe that the majority of our Republican friends are greatly interested in the measure, but they have simply bowed to the inevitable. The financial interests have bills that our Republican friends want to pass, and the claims are similar to the claims of the farmers. They have other irons in the fire that can not be welded without asking the Government to do for them just what the Senator from Nebraska has asked for the farmers. In other words, some of their pet legislation can not get through unless this legislation goes through, and therefore they have rather grudgingly yielded to the inevitable, and this substitute will therefore pass, backed as it is by the Senator from Nebraska and his progressive friends on the other side of the Chamber, and with the almost unanimous support of the Democrats. It is a fine piece of legislation.

I believe that it will prove to be a tremendous benefit not only to the farmers of the country but to the commercial interests and every other class of our people. It is absolutely necessary that something should be done, and it ought to be done speedily. I hope that this bill may be passed to-day and that the House of Representatives will take it up and dispose of it at once.

Mr. STANFIELD. Mr. President, early in this session I introduced in the Senate a bill directing the Secretary of the Treasury, through the War Finance Corporation, to make loans for the benefit of the live-stock industry, which, as all Senators know, is in a very dire and distressful condition. Following that there was organized an association of the large banks of the country to aid the situation. Some banks which had never been interested in live-stock loans contributed to a pool of $50,000,000. The New York banks contributed $25,000,000 to the pool, and the remainder of the fund was raised on a basis of contributions similar to that employed in the case of the Liberty loan contributions in the different Federal reserve districts of the United States.

JULY 23, 1921.

For some reason some people and some newspapers have seen fit to criticize the organization of this pool long before there has been an opportunity of proving its ability to do something for the relief of the live-stock industry. Knowing the needs and the wants of the live-stock industry in the United States, I have been very much interested in its development, and so I have taken upon myself to keep in touch with the men who are in charge of the pool.

Yesterday I received a telegram from Mr. M. L. McClure, president of the Stock Growers' Finance Corporation, a banker of long experience in the making of live-stock loans. I should like permission at this time to have printed in the Record his telegram, also a letter which I have received from him, a letter from him to Gov. Harding, of the Federal Reserve Board, and an interview with the correspondent of an El Paso (Tex.) paper.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MOSES in the chair). Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

CHICAGO, ILL., August 1, 1921.

HON. R. N. STANFIELD,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Just returned from Kansas City, where the live-stock men are jubilant over results already accomplished by this organization, claiming it has put new life and strength in values and prospects. Have loaned over four and one-half million dollars to date. Subscriptions to pool not fully completed, but hope to close pool with thirty-five or forty million subscribed to-day or tomorrow. Chicago banks have been advancing money for operations so far. We are in some cases agreeing to accept personal guaranties from stockholders and directors of banks in lieu of banks' indorsements where loans offered exceed 10 per cent of capital and surplus for one individual. Sending full information by to-day's mail. State advisory committees will be appointed this week.

M. L. MCCLURE,
President Stock Growers' Finance Corporation.

STOCK GROWERS' FINANCE CORPORATION,
Chicago, Ill., August 1, 1921.

HON. R. N. STANFIELD,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: Your telegram of the 29th ultimo was received at the office Saturday morning. On account of my absence in Kansas City it was not answered until my return to-day.

I am inclosing herein copy of letter written to Gov. Harding, of the Federal Reserve Board, at the close of the first week's operations. I also inclose copy of an interview, which will be published in the El Paso papers, made by Mr. J. G. McNary.

The facts are results have been accomplished over great difficulties, for the reason we commenced operations for the psychological effect before we were physically ready, and what we have accomplished has made that attempt worth while, although we will have and are having considerable criticism heaped on us because we could not handle the situation and give our transactions more deliberate thought. These things will improve as our office becomes better organized.

There has been delay in the appointing of the advisory committees, caused by the delay of the subscriptions to the pool not coming in as rapidly as desired. It is proposed to close the pool to-day. We are sending telegrams and other information, and it is thought the pool will finally be closed with thirty-five to forty million dollars, but this is not an accurate statement.

The advisory committee for Utah has been appointed, namely:

T. W. Boyer, vice president Continental National Bank, Salt Lake City; E. O. Howard, president Walker Bros. Bank, Salt Lake City; C. S. Buston, vice president Utah State National Bank, Salt Lake City; Patrick Healey, president Commercial National Bank, Ogden.

The committee for New Mexico has also been appointed, and other committees will be appointed just as soon as possible.

It is also the intention to make our first assessment on the subscribers to-day or to-morrow.

I am inclosing herein a list of loans made to date. Many of these loans were made with the direct promise from the borrowing banks and loan companies that they, being relieved of these stock cattle loans, would use the funds obtained from us to loan to customers for the purpose of buying young stock. Therefore it answers two purposes—stopping the marketing of the stock cattle and provides a market for feeding steers, and enables the farming districts to market their corn and feed their hogs.

We thank you for your kindly interest and will be glad to answer any inquiries you may make.

Yours, very truly, M. L. MCCLURE, President.

HON. W. P. G. HARDING,

Governor Federal Reserve Board, Washington, D. C.

DEAR GOVERNOR: Your letter of the 20th instant received inclosing copy of letter written by Mr. Frank Kell, of Wichita Falls, Tex., to the Secretary of the Treasury.

This answer has been delayed on account of the overwhelming amount of correspondence that has been required during this week, and the reply should not be written hastily but after some thought.

Just how much short the loaning pool will fall in affording relief to the live-stock interests, of course, is not known. It would take a person of very great imagination to expect a $50,000,000 bankers' pool to be the panacea for all the ills besetting the live-stock industry at this time.

I have been closely allied with this business for about 35 years, and during that time I can not remember when all the conditions all the time and everywhere were just right. Some time the breeders were prosperous and the feeder was losing money; at times some districts were blessed with plenty of feed, grass, and water, but others had drought; at times part of the live-stock districts had mild, pleasant winters, and in other districts violent storms were killing the herds; at times prices of feeders were high and fat cattle sold so low the man who fed lost money. These kinds of statements could be continued, but at the present time most conditions affecting live stock are practically the same, and the whole live-stock industry is suffering alike, and it might be said, along with every other industry. Like conditions prevail in the whole live-stock industry, affecting the breeding, growing, and feeding. Everywhere they have the things most needed, such as grass, water, and feed, and all are alike handicapped in the fact that there is a shortage of loanable credits, partly caused by shrinkage of values and loss from drought and winter storms the past few years.

These, with other reasons, such as high rates of interest obtainable from other securities, have caused a withdrawal of loanable funds heretofore used in the industry. It is also true that just before the war began in 1914 and for two years after there was an overabundance of loanable funds for the use of the live-stock interests, and those interests, to some extent, overborrowed, partly induced by the general call to increase production for war purposes.

Mr. Kell has made a strong plea for the cattle breeders, and I hope and veritably believe he is in error in stating this pool will not help the breeder. Every dollar used to finance any phase of the cattle business will be a direct benefit to the owner of cows. All breeders are compelled to sell off their increase or become overstocked, and they must have the necessary money to conduct their business.

At the present time there is no sale for 1-year-old and 2-year-old steers, not because they are not wanted to fill vacant pastures in the growing districts north of the breeding districts but because those who want them can not be financed. It can be easily seen that if buyers are obtained for the young steers, it would relieve the Texas, New Mexico, and Arizona breeders, and permit them to make some payments on their indebtedness.

In the fall of 1920 farmers could not get sufficient credit to buy feeder steers. He had his land, his corn, and his hogs, but for lack of obtainable funds he could not feed, so that his corn would thus be marketed, his land fertilized, and his hogs fattened cheaply. If this situation is relieved it will be a blessing to the farmer, and at the same time will make a market for the breeder for the steers, young and old, calves and heifers.

The Stock Growers' Finance Corporation proposes and is doing these very things, in addition to providing funds to banks and loan companies, enabling them to carry the breeding herds.

Banks and loan companies who have loans on live stock and the security is just ample, it is their duty to conserve their own interests as well as the borrowers by giving sufficient time to growers and enable them to orderly market the security. Most of the banks and loan companies who know the business are doing that very thing. The Stock Growers' Finance Corporation proposes to help them by carrying that part of this indebtedness, which is well secured.

Banks and loan companies carrying loans on live stock, where the security is more or less insufficient, will worry along and will stand their own losses cheerfully, and will not ask either the Government or anyone else to step in and take this loss for them.

The live-stock producer who has lost, chiefly on account of conditions and events over which he has no control, has the sympathy of everybody, but this is an event in his business life and is such a contingency that will arise and does arise in every other industry or business, and most of these men are strong, red-blooded fellows who are not going to try to put their loss on anybody else, but will manfully take up the fight in the way they originally started into the business, perhaps in a smaller way, but will eventually pay their debts and retrieve their fortune.

The question has been raised by many producers of live stock as to the policy of injecting to any extent governmental or unnatural credits to increase the production of live stock. Their idea is to conserve what they now have and to continue the regular breeding with the present herds. Their reason is that apparently there is sufficient production now and prices obtainable are not remunerative. The owners of breeding herds are unable to dispose of their increase and are compelled at a great expense to move them to other pastures in other States, and at the same time apparently there is sufficient beef animals going to the market selling at prices that will show no profit for the breeders or feeder. Some are advocating the spaying of the heifer calves and also the marketing of them until the demand increases and prices are obtainable to justify producing and feeding.

This pool has now been operating for just one week, and its operations we believe have been of benefit. It has encouraged the live-stock men to know that the best bankers in the United States have enough confidence in the future live-stock business to provide loanable funds. The corporation has made commitments and loans around $3,000,000, most of which is or will be secured by breeding herds or young cattle. Over one-half million dollars has been loaned for the direct purpose to buy yearling steers from the breeders in Texas, New Mexico, and Arizona.

Some stockyard banks and loan companies have been relieved of stock-cattle loans which they had proposed to liquidate this fall, and they in turn propose to reloan these funds for the purpose of purchasing steers, which in turn will relieve the breeders, where the most relief is desired.

So far the loans on sheep have been for the purpose of conserving the present herds and not for new investments. Loans have been made in the following States, named in the order of the amounts which they have received: Texas, Wyoming, Idaho, New Mexico, Montana, North Dakota, South Dakota, Colorado, and Kansas.

Some loans have been made of which part of the security is composed of older steers, but these will come to the market this fall, and those proceeds can be reloaned to be invested in young and breeding stock.

I think I have been conservative in my statements; only time can tell what the direct benefits will be. We know it is hard to operate a large affair of this kind from one office at a long distance, and we find it almost physically impossible to intelligently and with justice administer this pool, but are endeavoring to operate it with full sympathy for the live-stock industry and at the same time remembering we are administering a trust for those who have so kindly provided the funds to be safely invested to assist the live-stock interests.

We are under many obligations to certain Chicago banks and one New York bank who have patriotically advanced funds to this corporation to loan before and pending calling on the subscribing banks for funds, enabling us to carry on our business so far. We believe this will be appreciated by the live-stock interests, who will understand why many of these subscribing banks never have heretofore carried live-stock loans.

I would be pleased to answer any further inquiries from the Secretary of the Treasury or your board.

With regards and best wishes I am,

Yours, very truly,

M. L. McCLURE, President.

IS THE CATTLE POOL FUNCTIONING?

By James G. McNary, president First National Bank, El Paso, Tex., chairman advisory committee for west Texas and New Mexico.]

"There are many doubting Thomases who do not believe that the cattle pool will ever function to such extent as to give any real measure of relief to the cattle industry. As one of the advisory committee for El Paso and surrounding territory I have been asked a great many questions in regard to the pool and its methods of operation, and especially whether or not it is going to give the desired relief. This I will attempt to answer in this article.

"I will say in the first place that the pool is functioning very efficiently and rapidly. It was originally intended to handle funds up to a total of $50,000,000, and in the first week of its operations accepted applications for loans amounting to $4,000,000, or nearly one-tenth of the total. The fact that a previous pool organized about a year before in Chicago did not function to any great extent was used by many as an argument to prove that the present pool would not function; but the other pool just referred to with total original strength of $22,000,000 made total loans amounting to only $750,000, if my memory is correct, or in other words, only 3½ per cent of its total loaning capacity, while, as above stated, the present pool loaned 8 per cent in the first week.

"There was much disappointment in the beginning when the word went out that the pool would restrict itself to loans on the indorsements of banks and cattle loan companies and would not loan direct to the stockmen. It is true that at the meeting in Chicago between the representatives of the bankers and the cattlemen, much stress was laid on the importance of the pool making loans direct, but when the Stock Growers' Finance Corporation had been organized, its board of directors selected, its executive committee formed, and its management engaged, all concerned soon found that the proposition of direct loans presented almost unsurmountable obstacles. How, let me ask, could five men sitting in Chicago loan safely $50,000,000 of other people's money to thousands of cattlemen scattered over six or more States comprising approximately 1,000,000 square miles of territory. It simply could not be done without creating an organization which would require great time and expense and be so slow moving and cumbersome that no immediate aid would be forthcoming, and all who know the status of the cattle industry know that time was the essence of importance so far as relief was concerned.

"There is no other line of business in which the moral element enters more largely in the extension of credit than in the cattle business.

"A very interesting article appeared in Collier's Weekly for July 16, dealing with 'Character as a basis for credit,' written by A. B. Farquhar, a distinguished citizen of the United States, now in his eighty-second year, who has served his country and is active in the State of Pennsylvania in many capacities, among other things having been vice president and director of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States and the American Industrial Commission of France, and who is acknowledged especially as an authority on banking and political economy. In this article in question he says: 'I would rather have five minutes' talk with anyone than have an accountant's statement of their wealth.' It is this personal contact which is absolutely necessary in loaning with any degree of safety, and especially this is true of the cattle business and more especially so at the present time. In recognition of the great difficulties involved and also of the very high responsibility resting upon them in loaning $50,000,000 of other people's money, the executive committee of the Cattle Finance Corporation, made up of the very best bankers in this country, decided to make no direct loans, but to loan only upon the indorsement of banks and cattle loan companies, and I feel their decision was absolutely correct.

"Criticism has been made on the management of the pool because of the fact that it is giving preference to large loans. In fact, in a circular letter sent out they directly asked that the larger applications be sent in and the smaller ones withheld for the time being. I believe they were right in this action also. The point was to give the greatest possible relief in the shortest possible time, and manifestly they could get quicker action on 10 loans of $100,000 than on 100 loans of $10,000. There will doubtless be an opportunity for the smaller loans to come in for consideration later, but the bank which was sending up the loans for relief of one loan of $100,000 would be, in consequence, just that much better able to take care of than its customers remaining for their $10,000 each until and if their loans could be placed through the pool.

"Many other questions I have been asked regarding the duties of the State committees. Inasmuch as loans are to be made only on the recommendation and with the indorsements of banks and cattle loan companies the duties of State committees will necessarily be merely advisory in character; that is, advisory both to the management of the pool and of the bank and the stockmen in their vicinities.

"I will endeavor to cover a number of other points on which information has been asked and to outline the procedure which is to be followed in sending in loans. I do not wish to be speaking for the executive committee or the manager, President M. L. McClure, as I have not been in any way authorized so to speak, but am merely giving the gist of such information as I have been able to obtain by going after it.

"In this connection I might say that I have heard criticism of the pool because more explicit instructions in regard to the handling of applications had not been sent out, and can say on this point that they should be pardoned for this omission as before they were really incorporated or had an office or a desk or a typewriter the applications began to come in on them so that they were absolutely snowed in without having sent out any instructions or invitations. President McClure will probably find time to send out instructions in great detail when the applications slow up a little.

"In the first place, the pool does not use any forms of its own. It accepts the notes and mortgages so long as they are in proper legal form of the banks and cattle loan companies which send in the loans. A bank having a loan to submit of say $25,000 should first satisfy itself that the applicant has a substantial equity in value over the amount of the loan desired. The note should then be dated, drawn up, signed, bearing interest to maturity in denominations of $5,000 and $10,000 (?). The original chattel mortgage should either accompany or should be filed to a certified copy which need not be certified together with abstract of the record or of recorder's certificate showing no other mortgage against the cattle. This to be all accompanied by the financial statement of the maker of the paper and the report of the inspector showing the number and quality of the cattle and his estimate of the value of the security. On all notes as well as on previous indorsements must be a waiver of demand, notice, and protest.

"Loans should be dated for six months or less, it being understood that if found satisfactory it will be extended or renewed for another six months, and extended or renewed again the total length of time, not exceeding 30 months from the original date of loan, at which time payment in full will be required.

"The rate of discount which has been fixed for the present by the executive committee is 7 per cent. The directors of the corporation have issued no rule in regard to a differential in interest for the underwriting bank or cattle loan company. While it is unreasonable that they would expect banks to use their credit to underwrite loans of this character without any consideration, it is equally unreasonable to expect that they would permit any bank to impose on the cattleman and charge him an exorbitant fee for such underwriting, so that a modest charge in keeping with the spirit in which the pool was conceived and organized should govern.

"It is my understanding that the policy of the management will be to accept one renewal of the loan without making out new papers, but at the end of one year they will require new inspection and complete new papers all around.

"Inasmuch as the loan must be acceptable for rediscount by national banks for the Federal reserve system, the taking of real estate as part security will not be permitted, the suggestion of the management being that if the ranches have sufficient tangible value to justify the loan that a separate loan be made on them through real estate channels and the amount called for from the pool reduced accordingly.

"One point should not be lost sight of, and that is at the termination of the period for which the pool was organized, namely, 30 months, there will be, so far as now is apparent, no other organization ready to take up its burden, so it behooves the cattleman who takes advantage of the facilities of the pool to so arrange his business that he can reduce his loan to the pool at each six months' period or, if not, at the end of each year, so at the end of two and a half years he can have it retired entirely or reduced to such an extent that it can be conveniently handled locally.

"I wish to call attention to one of the great benefits which is bound to result in the formation of this pool, and that is that cattle paper should be restored to good standing again with the banking fraternity of the United States. The grievous misfortunes and unparalleled difficulties under which the cattle and sheep men of the country have struggled for the past few years has resulted in bringing cattle paper into bad repute in banking circles throughout the United States. Under the plan adopted and efficient management afforded the $50,000,000 now being offered to aid the cattlemen should be loaned safely and satisfactorily, and these loans should all be paid within the allotted time of 30 months, interest and principal, without sacrifice to the industry or loss to the bankers who have so generously made this aid possible. And this accomplishment in itself should be of lasting and untold benefit to the future of the stock-growing industry in the United States."

Mr. STANFIELD. Mr. President, I should like to say at this time that the live-stock loan pool has been functioning; that it has extended relief to the live-stock industry to the extent of $4,591,000, which had been loaned, up to the close of the last week in July. The loans were made in the principal live-stock States of the West, Wyoming, New Mexico, Oregon, Kansas, Colorado, Utah, Texas, North Dakota, and South Dakota receiving relief.

It is generally admitted that the relief of $50,000,000 for live stock is inadequate; but now, with the passage of the McNary substitute to the Norris bill, an adequate fund will be provided through the War Finance Corporation that undoubtedly will give full relief to the live-stock industry. I think it is very important that all of those interested in live stock should be made aware of the fact that they have two sources of relief, and that for the present they can secure relief through the live-stock loan pool, with headquarters in Chicago, located in the Continental & Commercial National Bank of Chicago.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] to the committee substitute for Senate bill 1915.

Mr. McNARY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Harrison	McNary	Stanfield
Ball	Heflin	Moses	Stanley
Borah	Jones, Wash.	Nelson	Sterling
Brandegee	Kellogg	Nicholson	Sutherland
Broussard	Kenyon	Norbeck	Townsend
Calder	Keyes	Oddie	Trammell
Cameron	King	Overman	Wadsworth
Capper	Knox	Ransdell	Walsh, Mass.
Caraway	Ladd	Reed	Warren
Curtis	La Follette	Sheppard	Watson, Ga.
Dial	Lenroot	Shortridge	Watson, Ind.
Ernst	McCormick	Simmons	Williams
Fernald	McCumber	Smith	Willis
Fletcher	McKellar	Smoot
Harris	McLean	Spencer

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-eight Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] to the committee substitute for Senate bill 1915.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I assume that before the vote is taken upon any proposed substitute, it is in order to perfect the substitute by any amendment that any Senator sees fit to offer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. HARRISON. Any amendment to the committee substitute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that there is an amendment pending to perfect the pending substitute—the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. HARRISON. The amendment I offer is to the committee substitute.

Mr. KING. The Senator from Arizona does not desire to offer an amendment to that amendment?

Mr. ASHURST. No; I simply have another amendment which I propose to offer to the pending committee substitute.

Mr. KING. The Senator can offer that later.

Mr. ASHURST. Yes.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, under the present situation in reference to the Farm Loan Board it seems to me that an amendment such as that offered by the Senator from Mississippi to authorize the War Finance Corporation to purchase these bonds might have an unfortunate effect upon the sale of the bonds, for the reason that the Farm Loan Board is authorized under the law to sell its bonds for the purpose set forth, and is an independent organization set up by the Government for the purpose of financing the farmers of the country upon their farms as collateral. In view of the legislation that I presume has practically passed the other body of Congress, increasing from 5 per cent to 5½ per cent the rate of interest that the farm loan bonds may bear, it seems to me that to authorize the War Finance Corporation before that legislation can become operative to take a certain amount of these bonds is equivalent to serving notice upon the public at large that we ourselves have some doubt either as to the ability of the public to buy them or as to the ability of the Farm Loan Board to negotiate them. In any event the public will have to be the purchasers of those bonds, whether they buy them through the War Finance Corporation or whether they buy them through the Farm Loan Board. Until the question is settled as to whether or not the bill shall pass the other body of Congress authorizing the increase of the rate of interest to 5½ per cent, the War Finance Corporation can not purchase these bonds unless it purchases the present issue of 5 per cent bonds; and it would hardly seem to be the fair thing to propose that the bonds shall bear 5½ per cent in the immediate future and have another Government corporation buy them at 5 per cent.

I am as much in earnest as is the Senator from Mississippi in the desire to increase the capital of the Farm Loan Board. I do not know of any instrumentality that promises so much aid to the real American home builder as the principles involved in the farm loan act; but I would deplore cheapening it in the minds of the American people by providing that another instrumentality of the Government, set up for the relief of the people, was paramount to the Farm Loan Board, and was composed of better business men, who could sell their bonds to the public better and get money better than the Farm Loan Board itself could do.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. SIMMONS. I think the Senator misunderstands this amendment, or else I misunderstand it. I do not think the amendment proposes that this corporation shall buy the bonds of the Farm Loan Board, but that it shall advance money to the Farm Loan Board upon its bonds.

Mr. SMITH. It amounts to the same thing.

Mr. SIMMONS. No; I will differentiate it a little bit if I am correct. Am I not correct?

Mr. HARRISON. It provides in the alternative. They may either purchase them or they may make advancements on them, but in either case it must be done at the request of the Federal Farm Loan Board. If they make no request, it certainly will not be done.

Mr. SIMMONS. The second paragraph of the amendment would seem to indicate that the idea in the mind of the draftsman of this amendment was that these loans would be made in the nature of advances secured by bonds instead of by the purchase of the bonds. Now, I want to call the Senator's attention to this situation: Just at this particular time the farm land banks are practically out of funds. I have in my pocket now a letter referring to a statement issued by Mr. Lever, a member of the Federal Farm Loan Board, in which the statement is made, if Mr. Lever is correct as to the amount that has been apportioned to North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, and Florida, that the three hundred and odd association districts in those four States will each be entitled to only $7,000. Practically, therefore, the farm loan banks at this time are out of funds for the purpose of helping the farmer.

Mr. SMITH. I recognize that, Mr. President—

Mr. SIMMONS. I beg the Senator to let me finish this statement. The board can not, as the Senator has very properly said, sell their bonds at the present rate of interest. When that rate is increased, as is contemplated and provided in the act which has passed the Senate and which is now pending in the House, permitting the rate of 5½ per cent, I am told by Mr. Lobdell, the chairman, that they have very little doubt about their ability to sell those bonds. But, even assuming that the bill is passed in the House during this week, and that it has no trouble in conference—

Mr. FLETCHER. It has been passed by the House, and has been reported to the Senate.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator from Florida says it has been passed and has been reported to the Senate; but they have, then, not only to rely upon the receipts from the sale of the bonds, but they have to negotiate the sale of those bonds in the market, and that will require time. Does the Senator think there would be any objection to allowing this corporation, which we are now clothing with additional powers, while they are selling those bonds to borrow money from that corporation upon the security of their bonds? It may be the 5 per cent bonds. That makes no difference, because when the advances made are paid out of the proceeds of the sale of the new bonds they will simply take those bonds in and cancel them. I think it would help, and I do not think it would hurt.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, my whole idea is that the emergency is very great, and it is the object of Senators here to get legislation which will relieve the present acute situation as far as we may do it by legislation and by authorizing the War Finance Corporation to do the thing set forth in this bill. I had hoped that we would restrict the bill to that purpose and not divert the attention of the War Finance Corporation by adding to it other functions, subsidiary and corollary. I am just as anxious as is the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] or the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] to see that this Farm Loan Board functions to its fullest capacity.

I can see some reason why it might be advantageous temporarily to allow them to accept these bonds as collateral for a loan. But the question then arises at once, Where will the War Finance Corporation get the money? It has only $400,000,000 now of paid-in capital. It must sell its bonds to do the things set forth in this bill, and if we load it up with farm-loan bonds and they advance out of their present capital they in turn will have to sell their bonds to replenish their treasury to meet the things set forth in this, and I was hoping that we might confine it to the objects set forth in this.

Since I have been on my feet I have been informed that the amendment changing the rate of interest provided in the farm loan act to 5½ per cent has been agreed to in the House and is back in the Senate.

Mr. KENYON. I think the Senator will find that that applies to only the joint-stock land banks, not to bond issues of the farm-loan banks.

Mr. SMITH. I was under the impression that allowing them to raise the rate of interest to 5 per cent on their bonds pertained to the Federal farm-loan as well as to the joint-stock banks. It simply relates to the joint-stock land banks?

Mr. KENYON. Simply to the joint-stock land banks.

Mr. SMITH. And has no reference whatever to the Federal farm-loan banks?

Mr. KENYON. No.

Mr. SMITH. I shall look into the matter to which the Senator has called my attention. But, be that as it may, I was hoping, and still hope, that this measure can pass, restricted to the objects for which it was drawn.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I agree with what the Senator from South Carolina has said, that irrespective of the merits of this measure it ought not to be voted for by those who desire that the present emergency be taken care of at the earliest possible moment.

But before discussing that I wish to say just a word regarding the speech of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK]. A weaker, more pitiful attempt to inject politics into a matter that has been and is purely nonpartisan I have never witnessed in this Chamber. The Senator from Nebraska must know that before this bill was prepared Senators upon both sides of the aisle were consulted, freely consulted, and suggestions made, and I do not believe the President of the United States ever saw the bill until it had been agreed to by a number of Democratic as well as Republican Senators. The Senator from Nebraska ought to have known that, and the Senator from Nebraska, if I may be permitted to say it, throughout his discussion made it very evident that he was trying to make a political speech. In his attempt to do so he served neither his party nor his country.

The Senator from Nebraska, too, Mr. President, refuses to tell the Senate and the country whether he is in favor of the major proposition in the Norris bill, which he denounces the Republicans for not accepting. He refuses to state to the Senate, he refuses to state to his constituents through the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, whether he is in favor of the Government going into the business of buying and selling farm products, as is proposed by one provision of the Norris bill.

Now, Mr. President, with reference to this amendment, irrespective to its merits, Senators will remember that last winter the Senate passed as a separate proposition a bill embodying provisions similar to those embodied in the amendment now pending before the Senate. The House declined to consider that bill, and it died with the session. Now we are faced by a great emergency and are considering a bill that is directed to this particular emergency. This bill from beginning to end relates to personal credits, and if the Senate is going to attach to it this proposition or any other amendment which does not deal with the subject matter in the bill as pending, the Senators who vote for such amendment must take the responsibility of delaying for 30, 60, or perhaps 90 days, or even longer, the relief which will be granted by this bill as it stands.

I am very hopeful, Mr. President, that if this bill is passed, together with such amendments as may be adopted which relate to the subject matter of the bill as reported, that the bill may never need to go to conference at all and that it will receive very prompt action from the House.

On the other hand, if this amendment to the bill or the so-called Borah amendment be adopted, we may be very sure that there is going to be delay, and great delay, in the House of Representatives in the consideration of this bill.

So with the present emergency, considering the crying need for immediate action, I hope that every friend of the agricultural interests of the country will vote against the amendment, however meritorious it may be considered as a separate measure.

Mr. KING. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. LENROOT. I yield.

Mr. KING. Let me ask the Senator whether, if this amendment were adopted, the effect would not be to diminish the funds which it is thought will be available for immediate use by those in whose interest it is alleged this bill is drawn?

Mr. LENROOT. Just to that extent $100,000,000.

Mr. KING. So to that extent it would prove injurious to the farmers?

Mr. LENROOT. Certainly; so far as this present emergency is concerned.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I do not believe that anyone will say that I am or possibly could be in favor of delaying action on this measure. It so happens that I was on the subcommittee which helped to draft the committee amendment. I want to see it enacted, because I believe in the principles incorporated in the Kellogg substitute, as well as in the Senate committee substitute.

The amendment I have offered has been considered by the Senate before. It was reported once out of the Committee on Agriculture, and was tacked on an agricultural appropriation bill. At the same time the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate attached it to one of the big appropriation bills, and its report came in before the report of the Committee on Agriculture came in, and so the general appropriation bill was considered first; I have forgotten whether it was a deficiency bill or a sundry civil bill. The amendment passed the Senate, I think, by unanimous vote. It provided that the Secretary of the Treasury could purchase a hundred million dollars worth of these bonds this year, and a hundred million dollars worth next year. That was not the first time we had done that. We did it, I think, at least on one occasion before, and I am under the impression twice before, when the Federal Farm Loan Board were unable to sell their bonds. The reason why we passed through the Senate upon the appropriation bill the provision for the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase a hundred million dollars worth of the bonds the last time was that a case had been pending in the Supreme Court for a long time to test the constitutionality of the farm loan act.

The bill carrying that provision went to the House. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] would have the Senate believe that the House would tie up this bill if we should incorporate this provision in it. That is a far-fetched statement, and I do not know on what the Senator bases it. It is unfair to the House to say that it is not as good a friend of the farmer as is the Senate. The farmers have as many friends over there as they have in the Senate—many more, probably—and they will adopt this amendment if it is placed in this bill by the Senate.

The reason why the House did not adopt the Senate amendment before was because a few days after we had incorporated it in the bill the Supreme Court, after months of labor, finally handed down a decision in the matter, holding that the bonds would be good, upholding the constitutionality of the law; and the word went from this Chamber to the other end of the Capitol, from the leaders on both sides of the Chamber, and by the friends of those who had incorporated the provision in the general appropriation bill, that it would be unnecessary then to incorporate it in the law. It was for that reason, and that reason alone, that that provision did not remain in that appropriation bill.

The Federal Farm Loan Board offered their bonds for sale. They thought they would be taken up quickly; but it took over nine weeks to sell the last issue of $40,000,000 of those bonds. They desired to sell many more than that, because there are now pending applications for loans amounting to $150,000,000 before the Federal Farm Loan Board. They have on hand, as I understand, about $15,000,000 to take care of the needs of the farmers who want to take advantage of the provisions of the Federal farm loan act, and I submit that if you are real friends of the farmer, as some pretend to be—and I know the Senator from Wisconsin is—you will not oppose this proposition, because it is right in line with the purposes of this bill. It will not delay it one moment. It will render a great service to the farmers of the country, who really need it, to those men who are farming away out in the rural sections, who have had their applications for loans pending for months and months, and because there were no funds to take care of them in the treasury of the Federal Farm Loan Board, they have not been able to obtain the money. I submit that the Senate would be taking a backward step, in view of the circumstances, and in view of the obstacles which have arisen against the sale of bonds by the Federal Farm Loan Board, if this amendment were defeated, and I submit that we ought to adopt it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will suspend while the Chair calls the attention of the Senate to the unanimous-consent agreement entered into on the 1st of August and modified on the 2d of August, "that after 2 o'clock p. m. on the calendar day of Wednesday, August 3, 1921, no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than 10 minutes upon the bill or any amendment offered thereto."

Mr. HARRISON. Have my 10 minutes expired?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No; the Senator's 10 minutes have just begun.

Mr. HARRISON. I thank the Chair very much.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. LENROOT. I should like to make a parliamentary inquiry of the Chair as to whether the Chair's construction is that that means 10 minutes on the bill and 10 minutes on each amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the Chair's construction. Under that construction the Chair would assume that the Senator from Mississippi is entitled to speak for 20 minutes.

Mr. HARRISON. I shall not even occupy 10 minutes more. The question is so simple to me that it would seem that those who wish to render some real aid in this instance ought to do it.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. HARRISON. Gladly.

Mr. LENROOT. I should like to ask the Senator from Mississippi, who is on the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, in view of the Senator's suggestion that this matter is so plain and so simple and the emergency is so great, how it happens that in reporting two bills here to the Senate the committee of which the Senator is a member never included that amendment?

Mr. HARRISON. I will answer the Senator's question. The committee of which I am a member once unanimously reported a provision similar to this. I offered this proposition in the committee at this time. It was voted down by 1 vote. One or two members of the committee told me afterwards that they would have voted for it if they had understood it clearly, so I suppose I am to blame for not making it clear. I did not call for a record vote in the committee. I expressly reserved the right in the committee, which was unanimously agreed to and accepted, that I should offer the proposition upon the floor of the Senate. That is the reason why it is not here in the committee substitute.

Now, Mr. President, under the committee substitute and the Kellogg substitute there is attempted to be given to the War Finance Corporation the right to purchase from domestic banks, bankers, or trust companies their notes, drafts, bills of exchange, and so forth. I call to the attention of Senators that if they vote against the proposal which I have offered they discriminate against the farmers who have applications on file with the Farm Loan Board by denying to them exactly those things that are being granted through the War Finance Corporation to corporations, banks, bankers, and trust companies of this country.

Mr. LENROOT. Will not the Senator be entirely accurate and state that those advances are advances which have been limited to the banks for agricultural purposes?

Mr. HARRISON. Of course, for agricultural purposes; but what I propose to do by the amendment which I have offered is to have the War Finance Corporation loan to the Federal Farm Loan Board not on notes and collateral, but on their bonds, bearing interest, may I suggest to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], at 5 per cent or 5½ per cent, if need be, if the bill be amended as it passed the House yesterday.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President—

Mr. HARRISON. Will the Senator permit me just a moment? The Senator said for agricultural purposes. This goes for the improvement of the farms of this country. I now yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LENROOT. But the Senator said there was a discrimination against the farmer by reason of allowing these advances to the banks, and now he admits that advances to the banks are limited to advances made by the banks to the farmers. How can that be discrimination?

Mr. HARRISON. Of course, if we permit advances to be made to the banks and bankers and export companies even to the extent of purchasing debentures and notes of all kinds that eventually go to the farmers for agricultural purposes, but the amendment which I propose provides that the advances go to the farmers, too, to help improve their farms, and help them out of their very deplorable and present stringent circumstances.

Mr. LENROOT. But the Senator said unless we adopt his amendment we would discriminate against the farmers. How could that be?

Mr. HARRISON. The farmer will think you are discriminating, and it will take you a good while to explain that you are not if you vote against my amendment. I have offered this in entire good faith. I know it is not going to hold up the legislation. I know that applications to the amount of $150,000,000 are pending and that the Farm Loan Board has approximately $15,000,000 with which to take care of them. If we want to render some real aid, let us go a step further. I am not criticizing the bill. It is a wonderful piece of constructive legislation.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President—

Mr. HARRISON. Even if the Kellogg substitute be adopted or if the Senate committee substitute be adopted I consider it a splendid piece of constructive legislation. Let us take the situation which we are now facing and remedy it. I yield to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. CURTIS. Will the Senator consent to modify his amendment to the extent of striking out the word "directed"?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; I will do that and let it provide "empowered and authorized." Then it authorizes them to do it if the Federal Farm Loan Board requests it.

Mr. CURTIS. I ask the Senator to so modify his amendment.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that my amendment to the substitute be modified by striking out the word "directed," so that it will read "authorized and empowered."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Senator's amendment will be modified as indicated.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] to a statement that he made a moment ago that the 5½ per cent rate was restricted to the Federal farm-loan bonds. I find that it refers to section 20 of the farm loan act and that contemplates all the bonds, and that section 20, as it now appears in the law, restricts the rate to 5 per cent. I was subsequently informed that, so far as the Federal farm-loan bonds were concerned, they have the power already to increase the interest rate, but I find that by this law they are restricted to 5 per cent. The proposed amendment, as it has now passed the House and is before the Senate for action, gives power to the Federal Farm Loan Board to increase the rate of interest on these bonds and on all bonds, joint-stock and Federal farm-loan bonds, to 5½ per cent.

Mr. KENYON. It may be that I am in error. The whole theory was the other way and the hearings all proceeded on the other basis. If it does what the Senator has said, I shall be very glad.

Mr. SMITH. There can be no manner of doubt in the world about it. Section 18 pertains to joint-stock land banks. Section 20 covers the entire bond issue that may be made by the Farm Loan Board. That bears out what I said a moment ago.

I do not care to go any further in a discussion of the proposed amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi. I can not see just what good purpose, in view of this legislation, can be served by it, but I can see under the amendment that we are attempting to pass that it may have an unfortunate effect.

I do not propose to stand here and allow any man to place me in the attitude of trying to block anything that would help the people whom I am trying at this time particularly to represent and to help. The Senator said that those who oppose his amendment are discriminating or making a discrimination between the banker and the farmer.

The Farm Loan Board stands in relation to those who get this money just as the banker does. The rate of interest is restricted as to the farm-loan bonds and is not entirely restricted uniformly as to the money that we are providing the farmers shall have. There is this distinction, that whatever money goes to the Federal Farm Loan Board goes to the farmer who owns his land, while whatever money comes through this plan goes to the poor devil who is farming, even if he does not own any land. It means help for any tenant on my farm who has a crop that he has not disposed of and that he desires to dispose of. It means relief to him. Every dollar subtracted from the cash on hand by the War Finance Corporation for the purpose set forth in the substitute is left to meet the emergency that is now confronting us.

Mr. FERNALD. Mr. President, inasmuch as I am not in entire sympathy with the proposed amendment or the bill, I suppose I may be assumed to be an enemy to the farmer. Although a farmer myself, I wish to say that I believe the man in the Senate who opposes this class of legislation is the greatest friend of the farmer.

I was deeply interested in the speech of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK]. He uttered so many truths that I find myself in rather an awkward position at this time for the first time to come to the defense of the Democratic Party. I never expected to be drafted into that service. However, Senators on the other side of the Chamber have stated that the farmers were in such a condition in this country that it was necessary that some one come to their aid, and even that they were going to have some dread disease in the South that the Government must make some appropriation to stop, until the whole country has been up in arms and demanding that something should be done for the poor farmer.

Up to a very recent time the farmer—

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. FERNALD. I yield very gladly.

Mr. SIMMONS. Does the Senator from Maine say that this uproar about the distressed condition of the farmer comes altogether from Senators on this side of the Chamber? Most of us on this side of the Chamber are particularly interested in cotton, but I have heard just about as loud complaints in this Chamber about the condition of the stock raisers of the West and the wheat and corn growers of the West as I have heard about the cotton growers of the South.

Mr. FERNALD. But the Senator has not heard any complaint from New England and I have not had a single letter from any farmer in my State urging this sort of legislation.

Mr. SIMMONS. Well, Mr. President—

Mr. FERNALD. I have only 20 minutes and I have a big speech in me.

Mr. SIMMONS. Just one word, if the Senator please. We know that New England is so barren, its soil so barren and so unproductive, that I do not think anyone interested in farming as we really view it would be found there.

Mr. FERNALD. We have no land down there which, tickled with a hoe, will laugh with a harvest, but it responds bountifully to hard work; and we stub along and in an old-fashioned way try to work out our own problems in our own way, managing as best we can to get a living.

The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY] in a splendid speech the other day became engaged in a colloquy with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], during the course of which the Senator from Missouri said that the farmers were in a worse condition than any other class of people. The farm profits of this country during the administration of Woodrow Wilson advanced 90.8 per cent. In the Senator's own State—

Mr. CARAWAY rose.

Mr. FERNALD. Just a moment, if the Senator please, and then I will yield to him. In the Senator's own State of Arkansas the mortgages increased from $8,000,000 to $38,000,000 and the value of farm property in the State of Arkansas increased $500,000,000 in that time. That same thing is applicable to every farming State in the Union.

Mr. CARAWAY. Will the Senator now yield to me?

Mr. FERNALD. Certainly.

Mr. CARAWAY. The Senator knows that we did that under Woodrow Wilson's administration, but we have lost it all under the present administration.

Mr. FERNALD. Oh, the present administration has been in existence only a short time and they still have some well-filled barns out there.

My friend from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] is from one of the great agricultural States of the Union, and it is well worth while to read into the Record something with reference to the value of farm land in his State. I wish my Democratic friends would take notice of this because they will need this part of my speech in the next campaign.

On July 27 the Bureau of Census, Department of Commerce, announced the following preliminary figures from the 1920 census: Farm land and buildings, $77,000,000,000. Why, my friend from Iowa in his statement the other day said he understood that the value of farm property was $30,000,000,000, but it is growing so fast that I do not wonder he was in error about it. It is going up by leaps and bounds.

While during the period that I have mentioned the value of farm property in this country advanced more than 90 per cent, and in four great States of this Union the valuation of such property is more than four billion dollars, yet the statement is made that the farmers are in worse condition than is any other class of people in the country.

Mr. President, up to a few months ago we in this country were talking about profiteers, but if there was ever a time in the history of this Government when the people who labor ought to have a friend in the Senate of the United States it is right now. Four million five hundred thousand breadwinners are out of work in this country; they are unable to find employment at any price; and yet we talk about the distressed condition of the farmers! Sirs, the average value of the farm property per farm as reported in six States is about $25,000; and in the State of Iowa the average value of farm property is $39,942; yet we are asked here to advance the price of wheat to men whose average farm property is worth nearly forty thousand dollars.

If this bill means anything, it means that we are asking for a higher price of food products. If it does not mean that, it does not mean anything at all. I ask Senators who favor this character of legislation if they think the people in this country who labor are at this crisis in a condition to have an advance in the price of breadstuffs?

Mr. HARRISON. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. FERNALD. I yield.

Mr. HARRISON. Was the Senator of that opinion when he voted for the emergency tariff bill?

Mr. FERNALD. I had hoped that that legislation might give a little relief to the people in the cotton States and that they might have a market for their products, but just so long as this Government goes into the business of buying farm products we shall see lower prices on everything. The report in the press day before yesterday that there was a shortage in the cotton crop had more to do with advancing the price of cotton yesterday than anything we might do in this body by way of legislation for the next 20 years. We may legislate prices up; we may hold them up; the Government is able to do that. We may run the printing presses here and print bonds from now until the end of time, but it will be in vain; and if we commence now, in peace times, to advocate the purchase of farm products, we may continue that to the end of time without avail. Now, three years after the World War is over, we are undertaking to establish war schemes in peace times.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. FERNALD. I have only about three minutes remaining. I will say to the Senator. Otherwise I would be glad to yield to him.

The very trouble with the market to-day arises out of the fact that the Government owns some of the products of the farm. I hold in my hand and will read to the Senate a statement issued by the Government. Senators who come from the wool States ought to listen to it and pray over it from now until the last pound of wool is disposed of. The statement is as follows:

JULY 21, 1921.

PUBLICITY STATEMENT NO. 462.

Subject: Army auction sale of wool for August 4, 1921.

The War Department authorizes publication of the following from the office of the director of sales:

The director of sales announces that another sale of surplus Army wool will be held by the quartermaster supply officer, Ford Hall, Boston, on Thursday, August 4, 1921, at which approximately 5,000,000 pounds low-grade South American wool will be offered to the public at auction. The sale will begin at 2 p. m.

The offerings will consist of approximately 1,000,000 pounds of pulled wool, 2,000,000 pounds of South American combing wool, 25,000 pounds of West Coast wool, and 925,000 pounds of scoured wool.

Samples will be on display in Boston beginning Monday, August 1, and continuing through the date of the sale. All wool will be re-weighed by the quartermaster supply officer at Boston.

Catalogues are available on application to the Boston depot.

Senators, that sort of publicity has been going on ever since the close of the World War. The Government owns great quantities of the products of the American farmer which it has purchased. The very fact that the buyers knew that this wool was held by the Government and would be sold kept them from purchasing wool in the market. Just as soon as the Government goes into the business of buying farm products and holding them off the market, just so long the market will be depressed, because the buyers understand the situation very well. While we may legislate to purchase goods, we can not by legislation compel the buyer to buy goods. He will buy when he thinks it is for his interest to buy.

I have referred to the value of farms; I have read to Senators the fact that in four great States of this Union the average value of farms is about $25,000 each. The reason for the passage of this bill is that the bins are so filled with plenty, and there is so much of wheat and corn and oats and cotton on the market that the price must be advanced. What is needed, however, is a greater market. Higher prices for farm products can not be obtained unless the price is raised to the consumer, and I say, Mr. President, that this Government is in no position now to bring about higher prices for bread to the laboring man who is out of work on the streets. I repeat, what we need in this country is a market of our own, in order to start the wheels of industry going and keep the people at work, to start the looms and the factories all over the United States.

Senators talk about the export trade. The bonds of many foreign Governments to-day are almost worthless. I have a list of them here; I have not time to read them, but many of them are worth about 12 cents on the dollar; yet we have already loaned to foreign Governments more than $10,000,000,000, on which we can not collect and have not up to this time been able to collect a single cent of interest. We ought to be getting something back instead of talking about increasing our foreign trade.

As the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] so well said this morning—and I was in sympathy with very much of his speech—if any foreign people to-day are able to put up anything in the shape of bonds or security, they can go to their own bankers and borrow the money. The United States Government can not afford to give any further credit to foreigners or to foreign nations. I will go as far as anybody in the way of charity; if there is anyone who is poor and distressed and sick I am glad to help him in the way of charity; but when it comes to a business proposition, for this Government to undertake to extend credit to foreign Governments, particularly after the experience we have had, I say is a foolhardy proposition.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President—

Mr. FERNALD. I am sorry I can not yield to the Senator; I only have a few minutes, although I should like to speak an hour.

Mr. President, I have referred to the great advance in the value of farm property from $40,000,000,000 to $90,000,000,000 in the last 10 years. Let me compare some of the other industries with that of agriculture to show what has happened to them. In 21 of the leading industries of this country there are not as many establishments as there were in 1914. Boots and shoes are about the only exception. That industry shows an increase in the number of establishments in the last five-year period, there being 1,355 such establishments in 1914 and 1,441 in 1919; but in industries such as carriages and wagons, copper, cordage, twine, linen, engines, including steam, gas, and water engines, essential oils, fertilizer, flour and grist mills, and many others which I might mention there has been an actual decrease in the number of establishments in the last five-year period, whereas in the same time there has been the marvelous increase in the value of farm property to which I have referred.

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON], with whom I sometimes agree—we do not always agree; we did not agree, for instance, on the so-called packers' bill, but we do agree sometimes—said the other day that the issuing of tax-exempt bonds must stop. We have talked about profiteers here for more than three years, but do not Senators realize that by this very bill we are legislating in behalf of profiteers? We hear it mentioned now and then that there are $400,000,000 in the Treasury for the War Finance Corporation.

I assert that there is not a single dollar except paper money to their credit. It is like my saying that I had a credit at the Riggs National Bank in Washington of $100,000 provided they would take my note if I should send it to them. There is not a single dollar in the War Finance Corporation except what is authorized by the United States Government. There is no use to talk about buying things without money. If we buy property and have to pay for it, the Government must provide for the payment of the bill. As my friend from Iowa has said, the continual issuing of tax-exempt bonds makes profiteers.

If it is essential for one to have money, he must go where the money is. If any business man wanted to raise $1,000,000 or $10,000,000, the first thing he would do would be to start for Wall Street, because there money is to be found. So, when the Government issues tax-exempt bonds Wall Street stands ready to take them. Every time we provide for the issuance of tax-exempt bonds we are legislating for the benefit of profiteers. There are, as the Senator from Iowa said the other day, about $20,000,000,000 of tax-exempt bonds which have been issued in this country, paying from 5 to 6 per cent, the average rate probably being 5½ per cent, which is more than any industry in the United States can afford to pay. The money invested in such bonds is being withdrawn from the industries of the country and from commerce. The profiteers of Wall Street encourage, I believe, this character of legislation. It is time that the people of the country should understand and the farmers of the country should understand that the creation of commissions and bureaus and the issuing of bonds is not in their interest. The man who stands here to oppose this kind of legislation before one year shall have elapsed will be thought more of, possibly, than he is thought of at this moment. I am opposed to this class of legislation.

At one stroke of the pen we destroyed a commerce that had been established, because it was felt that it could be done, I suppose, more easily by some legislation. Let me read from the Chicago Journal of Commerce of July 12, as follows:

In the suit brought by the Government against the large packers a decree was entered not many months ago which prevented the packers from buying and selling canned fruits and vegetables. It is related that in California and the Southwest approximately $40,000,000 worth of fruits and vegetables were annually canned, nearly all of which was purchased by the large packers and by them carried in their refrigerator cars and shipped to the various markets of the world, where they were disposed of to the mutual advantage of all concerned.

Now, however, that decree having been entered, that business has been stopped; and when a legitimate business of that kind, which, through economic processes and methods has been long established, has been stopped there has been taken from the farmers of the section immediately concerned the market for their products. Through the instrumentality referred to in the quotation there was created a market in California and a few of the Southwestern States for more than $40,000,000 of canned fruits and vegetables. If the same situation should be applied to the whole country, it would involve about $150,000,000 worth of products, which do not cost a single cent to market, because the packers have to send their cars with meat all over the country, and when they can not get a full carload of meat they can place in their cars canned goods that are distributed at little, if any, cost, and they are sold at little, if any, cost, because when a man sells beef he can sell canned goods at the same time. One of the best distributing agencies in this country was destroyed by that decree. I have not time to read the entire article, but it is stated that those interested are going to ask that the decree be set aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Maine has expired.

Mr. FERNALD. Have I exhausted my time on the amendment, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has used 20 minutes in all, 10 minutes on the bill and 10 minutes on the amendment.

Mr. FERNALD. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD some statistics and statements without reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE,
BUREAU OF THE CENSUS,
Washington, July 27, 1921.

VALUE OF FARM PROPERTY IN THE UNITED STATES.

The Bureau of the Census of the Department of Commerce announces, subject to correction, the following preliminary figures from the 1920 census of agriculture for the United States, with comparative figures for 1910:

The value of all farm property in the United States on January 1, 1920, according to the Fourteenth Census, was $77,925,989,073, as compared with $40,991,449,090 in 1910. The increase in the value of all farm property during the decade was thus $36,934,539,983, or 90.1 per cent.

Four States reported farm property valued at more than $4,000,000 in 1920, as follows: Iowa, $8,525,270,956; Illinois, $6,666,817,235; Texas, $4,461,579,497; and Nebraska, $4,193,825,242.

The average value of all farm property per farm in the United States as a whole in 1920 was $12,085, as compared with $6,444 in 1910.

In six States the average value reported per farm in 1920 was above $25,000. These States were Iowa, with $39,942; South Dakota, with $37,833; Nebraska, with $33,707; Nevada, with $31,546; California, with $29,158; and Illinois, with $28,109.

VALUE OF FARM LAND.

The value of farm land alone in the United States in 1920 was $54,903,453,925, as compared with $28,475,674,169 in 1910, representing an increase of $26,427,779,756, or 92.8 per cent. This value was obtained by subtracting from the value reported for farm land and buildings together (total real estate value) the value reported separately for buildings.

The average value of land alone per farm in 1920 was $8,514, as compared with $4,476 in 1910.

FARM BUILDINGS.

Farm buildings in the United States were valued at $11,430,855,631 in 1920, as compared with $6,325,451,528 in 1910. This represents an increase of $5,105,404,103, or 80.7 per cent.

The average value of buildings per farm in 1920 was $1,773, while the average in 1910 was $994.

IMPLEMENTS AND MACHINERY.

The value of farm implements and machinery in 1920 was $3,595,317,021, as compared with $1,265,149,783 in 1910, representing an increase of $2,330,167,238, or 184.2 per cent. This large increase is due in part to the fact that prices of farm implements and machinery were unusually high at the beginning of the year 1920.

The value of implements and machinery per farm in 1920 was $558, as against $199 in 1910.

LIVE STOCK.

The value of live stock on farms in the United States in 1920 was $7,996,362,496, as compared with $4,925,173,610 in 1910. This represents an increase of $3,071,188,886, or 62.4 per cent.

Nine States reported live stock valued at more than $300,000,000 in 1920, as follows: Iowa, $614,326,268; Texas, $589,321,953; Illinois, $446,154,064; Missouri, $389,839,045; Nebraska, $328,460,991; Wisconsin, $322,312,115; Kansas, $318,025,292; New York, $313,554,695; and Minnesota, $305,163,825.

The average value of live stock per farm in 1920 was $1,240, as against $774 in 1910.

PACKER REGULATION BILL CONTRAVENES HARDING AXIOM.

In the suit brought by the Government against the large packers a decree was entered not many months ago which prevented the packers from buying and selling canned fruits and vegetables. It is related that in California and in the Southwest approximately $40,000,000 worth of fruits and vegetables were annually canned, nearly all of which was purchased by the large packers and by them carried in their refrigerator cars and shipped to the various markets of the world, where they were disposed of to the mutual advantage of all concerned. During the past year approximately $40,000,000 worth of vegetables and fruits were canned in the Southwest, but, as the packers were prevented from buying and selling such products, the producers thereof found themselves deprived of their markets to their very great financial loss; and it is further related that many of these individuals are now contemplating presenting a bill to Congress to have a law enacted which will in effect annul the decree and permit the packers again to buy and sell canned fruits and vegetables. Not only have thousands of individuals engaged in packing fruits and vegetables been practically ruined by such regulation, but the business of many others such as those who pack fish and other products has been seriously interfered with.

Our citizens engaged in the business of packing meat, poultry, milk, and egg products must have refrigerator cars and vessels to carry their products not only to all sections of our own country, but to many foreign lands. Many of their refrigerator cars carry their own products west to California and could return to the East loaded with fruits and vegetables produced in that country. It is an economic wrong for the Government to interfere with the proper conduct of such business.

Not only are the business men of this section of the country deeply interested in the so-called "Packer legislation," but they are watching the progress of many other bills pending in Congress, such as the "Federal coal commission act," the "Coal industry stabilization act," the "Grain future sales act," the "United States cold storage act," the "Maternity bill," and the Pinchot-Capper "Taxation of forest products act."

This Congress was convened in special session by the President of the United States for the purpose of revising our tariff and tax laws and not for the purpose of enacting all sorts of socialistic legislation which will transfer the conduct of various business enterprises our citizens are engaged in from their own localities scattered throughout the United States to bureaucracies at Washington.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I regret, as I know all of the Senators do, the illness and the absence of the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS]. The bill that he introduced and that was considered by myself and other members of the committee was the forerunner of the legislation now about to be enacted. I want to say for the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry that he rendered great service to the farmers of the country, and he is entitled to their commendation for the work that he has done in bringing this important matter to the attention of the Senate and the country.

I supported the bill as originally reported by the committee with the hope that certain helpful amendments would be offered and adopted in the Senate.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. HEFLIN. I do, for a question.

Mr. SIMMONS. I think the Senator might make some important addenda to his statement with reference to the Senator from Nebraska. I sympathize very much with the Senator in his statements with respect to the credit due the Senator from Nebraska, but the Senator did not say, and I think he ought to say, that there is in this substitute very much of the important part of the original bill prepared and proposed by the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. HEFLIN. That is true, Mr. President. I was coming to that.

Mr. SIMMONS. And if the amendments that were agreed upon in conference with members of the Agricultural Committee are adopted—and I think all of them will be adopted—the substitute will further include important suggestions coming from the committee of which the Senator from Nebraska is the chairman.

Mr. HEFLIN. Yes, Mr. President; I was just about to state what has been so well stated by the Senator from North Carolina.

A great deal of the bill as originally reported to this body by the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry [Mr. NORRIS] is now in the bill reported to this body by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY], a member of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. The Senator from Nebraska designated the Senator from Oregon to present this measure to the Senate. We asked the Senator from Nebraska, our chairman, to present the bill himself. Because of certain changes that were made, he preferred not to do so. Then we asked him to designate some one to present it. This was what he desired to do. I do not want the impression to go out that he has been overruled in this matter by the committee, or that the committee is hostile to him, because such is not the case.

I want to say here and now that the legislation that we will get upon the subject of financing the exports of farm products will be due to the efforts of Senators from the South and West who have worked upon this proposition persistently and insistently for many weeks.

Mr. President, we are seeking to aid the farmers of the country not only in exporting their products but also in keeping them off the market here at home until the price would yield them a profit.

The provisions of this amended measure will greatly benefit the distressed farmers of the whole country.

My good friend, the distinguished Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD], does not seem to think that the farmers are in distress. I know that the Senator is a big-hearted man, and a man of large sympathies. The Senator is fortunate in being blessed with a goodly share of this world's goods, and I am glad that he is, and I want the facts regarding the condition of the farmers of the country placed fully and fairly before him.

Why, Mr. President, I understand that not long ago the Irish-potato farmers of Maine were in such dire distress that they were making their potatoes into fertilizer because there was no market for them; and yet the Senator reminds us that statistics show how prosperous the farmers of the country are—an average of $25,000 or $30,000 to the farm. I called to the attention of the Senate a few days ago an instance where a man with a farm worth $90,000 was unable to borrow $20,000 in order to retain his farm, and because of his failure to obtain it he killed his wife, his four children, and himself. Some Senators do not seem to understand that this great distress really exists amongst the farmers of the country.

Mr. President, I regret that there are five or six million people unemployed. I would, if I could, this minute put every one of them to work. The most pitiful object you can look upon is an industrious man or woman able to work and wanting to work, but who is unable to find work to do. What is the matter when such a situation exists in the country? A few money kings have cornered the money supply of the country, and they sit like vultures waiting for the whole agricultural and industrial structure to fall so that they can pounce upon it and profit by the distress that they have deliberately produced.

What is the situation to-day in the West? The cattlemen are unable to get the money that they need to carry on their business, and yet they must furnish the meat supply to a hundred million of people. What is the matter with the grain growers of the West? They are unable to obtain the money necessary to carry on their business, and yet they must furnish the bread supply to a hundred million of people. What is the matter with the cotton-growing States, the States that must produce two-thirds of the world's cotton supply? They are in dire distress. They can not get the money necessary to carry on their business. They are not able to hold their produce from the market until the price will yield a profit.

I want to say to my good friend from Maine that while the price of cotton went up day before yesterday a little more than $4 a bale it went down yesterday nearly $2 a bale, because they said it resulted from profit taking, whatever that is, in Wall Street. Profit taking in Wall Street, on a little spot on earth less than 1 acre of ground, affects 30,000,000 people by knocking down the value of their cotton $2 a bale because one gambler takes profit from another gambler in Wall Street. That is the situation now, Mr. President.

I want to say to my good friend that the farmers of the South to-day are forced to sell their cotton—I use the word advisedly; they are forced to sell their cotton—at 18 to 20 cents per pound under the cost of production. Now, Senators, when that situation exists I submit that there is a very serious and distressing condition amongst our farmers in the cotton-growing States. This Government owes it to those who produce that which feeds and clothes the world to see that economic laws are permitted to operate so that those who produce may derive a profit upon their toil and investment.

Why, Mr. President, Wall Street is sitting back enjoying the situation that exists in the South and West to-day. The situation is working admirably for Wall Street. She does not want aid given to the cattleman, because she is feeding on his distress. She does not want aid given to the grain growers, because she is fattening upon their substance. She does not want money aid to reach the cotton producers, because she wants to continue to flourish upon the low price of cotton. But some Senators tell us that just such legislation as this is what Wall Street wants. I want to say that legislation like this drives a dagger to the heart of Wall Street and takes her foul fingers off the throats of the producing classes of this country. Wall Street wants to be let alone. She is having her own way to-day. She seems to be controlling the Federal Reserve Board and making out of that system a central banking system.

We never intended that that should happen. We intended that the 12 regional banks should operate in the interest of productive industry and honest business the country over. Whenever credits were scarce in one section and money ran low, we intended that it should be obtained from another or other regional banks. We intended that there should be 12 reservoirs of credit for the American people that would defy the agents of Wall Street to paralyze business or produce a panic.

But, strange to say, every time Wall Street takes snuff now the Federal Reserve Board sneezes.

Mr. President, good will come from this measure. I am going to vote for the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi and the amendment of the Senator from Florida. Both of them are in the interest of the American farmer. I want the good effects of this measure to reach as many of them as is possible to reach. They are in distress, and under the peculiar circumstances that exist to-day it is the duty of the Government to extend a helping hand to them.

I am glad to say that I took some part in the revival of the War Finance Corporation. The trouble now is that you can only get financing for products intended for export.

I repeat that this bill seeks to aid the farmer in keeping his produce away from the market here until the price is profitable. We want to put the producer in position to obtain money from the War Finance Corporation, so that he can hold it and obtain a fair price for it.

I submit, Mr. President, that that is a valuable provision in this bill. It will be of great help to our farmers. They are certainly entitled to have this aid extended to them. No fair and just man wants to see the producer sell his produce below the cost of production. Every fair man knows, and will admit, that he is entitled to have a fair profit. If the operation of this law will bring that about, why not pass it and extend a helping hand to our greatly distressed farmers.

Mr. FERNALD. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield.

Mr. FERNALD. I regret exceedingly to interrupt the Senator, because I am always delighted to listen to him. He is a real orator, and I am delighted to listen to him. We do not always agree, but he is such a charming speaker that I regret to detain him for a single moment. But I want to make an inquiry, because I know he is interested, with me, in the farmer, and in the welfare of all the people. I wanted to ask my friend if he thought the farmers would take these bonds we must issue?

Mr. HEFLIN. The Senator asks me if I think the farmers would take them?

Mr. FERNALD. Yes; whether they would take the bonds we are likely to issue to carry on this great proposition, involving several billion dollars?

Mr. HEFLIN. They would if they had anything with which to buy them.

Mr. FERNALD. As a matter of fact, they will have to go into the bond market, and the same profiteers that the Senator and I both agree about, the same profiteers who have been purchasing these tax-exempt bonds for the past three years, will go right into the market and purchase these bonds, because they are the men who have the money.

Mr. HEFLIN. I do not care who purchases these bonds, just so we sell them. Our farmers are in dire distress, and when a man is drowning he is not particular about who saves his life. The main thing with him is to get him out of the water and up on a rock. Then he can discuss the matter as to who saved his life and decide as to whether or not he wants to go back and be drowned.

Mr. FERNALD. We should not find fault with the man who furnishes the money. If we are going to legislate for that sort of thing, we must expect Wall Street to furnish the money.

Mr. HEFLIN. I want to say to my good friend that what we want now is to sell the bonds. When the Government offers them, it does not propose to say who shall and who shall not buy them. If we had done that heretofore, we would never have sold our Liberty bonds. The Government encouraged everybody to buy them, and a great many people, I am sorry to say, have, because of the Federal reserve bank's deflation policies, had to sell them at a loss of $15 and $20 on the $100.

Senators, let us pass this measure to-day and send it over to the House for what I trust will be speedy action on the part of that body.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. HEFLIN. Just for a question. My time is getting short.

Mr. CARAWAY. I introduced a bill at the beginning of this session to close that exchange, and it is now in a committee of which the Senator is a member.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Alabama has expired.

Mr. CARAWAY. Will the Senator vote with me to report the bill out?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] to the amendment reported by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry in the nature of a substitute.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for just a moment?

Mr. CARAWAY. With pleasure.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I have talked with the Senator from Arkansas about his bill, and I am not sure that I will not support it. I know how anxious he is to stop gambling in cotton futures, and I am introducing a resolution to-day to give the Secretary of Agriculture power to close the exchanges of the country whenever as many as two commissioners of agriculture in the cotton-growing States and two governors shall object to certain conduct and make complaint to him; which provides that the Secretary of Agriculture shall request that the conduct be suspended or cease at once, and under it he shall have power to enforce the provision and at the conclusion of the hearing to close up the exchange. I am offering that resolution to-day, and in our efforts to bring relief to the farmers of the country I am going to urge the passage of the resolution at once.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, I am not sure how far the proprieties permit Senators to discuss what took place in the committee at the time of the reporting out of the Norris bill, and the discussion of the so-called McNary amendment which is now before the Senate. I do know that, if my memory serves me correctly—and I have a very vivid remembrance of what occurred—some Senators who have undertaken to explain what did occur are mistaken. I remember positively, though I do not say that I agreed with the chairman of the committee in that, that the chairman was against the McNary substitute and voted against reporting it. I do know that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT], when he said the reason why they did not discuss with the Senator from Nebraska, the chairman of the committee, the so-called Kellogg amendment, was that the people interested in the Kellogg amendment took up with the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture [Mr. NORRIS] an amendment to strike out of the Norris bill the provision conferring upon the Government the power to buy and sell agricultural products, and that the Senator from Nebraska refused to consider it. Therefore it was not thought wise or not even reasonable that they should continue to discuss the amendment with him. I do know that when that amendment was suggested to the Senator from Nebraska, instead of rejecting it he immediately polled the committee by telephone. He said that if the committee was willing to accept the amendment, he was.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I think the Senator will agree with me that that was upon a Saturday, and the time to which I was referring was the previous Tuesday. I was informed that the Senator from Nebraska did say positively that he could not consider the striking out of that provision.

Mr. CARAWAY. I am sure the Senator from Nebraska did not tell the Senator from Wisconsin that.

Mr. LENROOT. He did not.

Mr. CARAWAY. And therefore the Senator is merely repeating what he heard. I do know that immediately upon the suggestion of that amendment—or at least the Senator from Nebraska said it had just been made to him—he called me over the telephone and asked me if I thought he ought to accept that amendment. I felt flattered that he should have done that. I asked him if he believed that the people who were offering that amendment would support the bill if he accepted it. He said he did not know. I said, "If they will, let us accept it." He said, "I will."

I know what he afterwards said about it, but I am not going to detail private conversations. I rather imagine that if the Senator were here himself he would tell what happened.

Mr. President, we are talking about this measure as a farmer's bill. The Norris bill was in the interest of the farmer. I do not know whether it was workable or not. When I discussed it before, I expressed a very grave doubt as to whether it would prove helpful. But I do know that the intention was to help the farmer find a market for his product. I do not know whether it would have done it or not. However, it was the first bill that has come into Congress since I have been a Member of either House which undertook to extend relief to the farmer without compelling him to pay tribute to local banks.

I do not care what the gentlemen who are supporting the McNary amendment may say, but they are in error when they say that it undertakes to relieve the farmer. It does not, except indirectly. It is designed to relieve banks and trust companies who have extended credit to farmers. It also will help people who own or control farm products, but always compelling the farmer to pay tribute to the local institution, bank or trust company. There is not a line in it anywhere which would relieve a farmer as a farmer. It extends credit to his commercial agents, through which he heretofore may have borrowed money, but not a line in it anywhere extends aid directly to the farmer. It was not intended to do that. It is intended to relieve banks which may have found themselves overburdened with farmers' paper; it will do that.

But there is something else about that. I should like to read it. I was impressed very much by the ardent enthusiasm of a Senator from a cotton-spinning State in supporting this bill. Here is a provision I call to the attention of the Senate. It is paragraph (a) of section 22, found at the top of page 3, which tells to what persons and institutions aid may be extended. It reads:

To any person engaged in the United States in producing, dealing in, or marketing any such products—

That is, farm products; now listen to this—for the purpose of assisting such person to carry such products until they can be exported or sold for export in an orderly manner.

If the farmer wanted to carry cotton—and I speak most frequently of that because I know most about it—if he wants to carry cotton, and he expects any relief under this bill, he must be able to show that that cotton is being held by him for the purpose of exporting. If he wants to carry cotton to be sold to a local spinner, he can not get one penny on it, not a penny.

He must be able to satisfy the War Finance Corporation that that cotton is being held by him, or by those to whom he has sold it, for the purpose of exporting it. But if some local spinner wants this cotton and the farmer is going to be compelled to sell to some local spinner, the so-called McNary substitute leaves him and the bank which has advanced him the money without redress.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. CARAWAY. I yield.

Mr. SIMMONS. I wish to ask the Senator if there is any question about a farmer who wishes advances for that purpose getting them under the twenty-fourth section?

Mr. CARAWAY. There is absolutely no more possibility of his getting relief under the twenty-fourth section than under paragraph (a) of section 22. He can not get a penny. It was not designed to give him a nickel.

Mr. SIMMONS. Suppose, Mr. President, a farmer who wishes to hold his cotton goes to a bank and secures advances upon that cotton so that he may be able to hold it. Is there any trouble about the bank securing a loan from the War Finance Corporation to cover that advance?

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes, sir; it can not aid the bank unless the cotton is to be exported.

Mr. SIMMONS. Would not such loan be made by the bank "for agricultural purposes"?

Mr. CARAWAY. Oh, for agricultural purposes—

Mr. SIMMONS. And is not that the language of the law?

Mr. CARAWAY. Money loaned to Armour & Co. in Chicago is loaned as much for agricultural purposes as money loaned to a cotton grower in North Carolina.

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not agree with that statement.

Mr. CARAWAY. Read the bill.

Mr. SIMMONS. I have read it.

Mr. CARAWAY. I know; I heard the Senator's speech, and I remember with what enthusiasm the Senator was supporting the Norris bill, but then suddenly discovered it was bad. I am not holding out any very great hope to the farmers of my State that they are going to get much relief under the bill, because they are not.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CARAWAY. Certainly.

Mr. LENROOT. I should like to ask the Senator whether the provisions were any different in the original Norris bill with reference to making advances to producers than they are in the McNary substitute as reported by the committee?

Mr. CARAWAY. They were not, but the Norris bill, if the Senator from Wisconsin ever read it, did this: It undertook to constitute the Government an agent of the farmer to find a market for his products in foreign countries. It, the Government, was to come to him, buy his products, and sell them abroad. The question of advances to enable him to hold his corn or cotton was secondary, if considered at all in the Norris bill, because the thing the Norris bill aimed to do was to enable the farmers of this country to find a foreign market for the crop which is being carried over so that it might not weigh down and destroy the crop that is about to be harvested.

Mr. LENROOT. But in neither bill could any advances be made to enable the farmer to hold unless approved by the board.

Mr. CARAWAY. Of course, that is conceded. I said that a moment ago, because the Norris bill was not a bill to enable the farmer to hold only as a secondary proposition. It was intended to enable the farmer to sell his crop.

There are 6,000,000 bales of American cotton or something like that in the markets now. This is carried-over cotton. The present crop is estimated at 8,000,000 bales. It was hoped that we might export the 6,000,000 bales, so that the 8,000,000 bales could find a ready market. The bigger the crop, and everybody knows it, the less the farmer gets for it. He actually destroys himself by producing more than the world requires. There is nothing so fatal to the cotton grower as to grow more cotton than the world can consume. If I had the figures before me, I could show that for the 6,000,000 bales of cotton in round numbers exported in 1919 he got nearly a billion dollars more than he got for practically that number of bales exported in 1920-21. He got nearly three times as much for the smaller amount of cotton than he did for the larger amount. That is the law of supply and demand.

The Norris bill was designed to aid the farmer to get rid of that very condition—overproduction.

The McNary substitute in some respects is a better bill than the Norris bill, but in many respects it is a very much worse bill. There is a provision in the Norris bill that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] waves aside by saying he did not favor and the subcommittee did not consider, that gave to this proposed board the power to have the Interstate Commerce Commission reduce freight rates on farm products exported on railroads. It likewise compelled the Shipping Board to grant reductions. I do not know whether it is true or not, but reputable men testified before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and no one disputed it, that there were millions of dollars worth of food and feed stuffs which were rotting on the farms because it would not bring enough to pay the cost of transportation. Notwithstanding that there were people in the world starving, these products could not be sent them because of excessive freight rates.

The Norris bill gave power to the Interstate Commerce Commission to grant a reduction in freight rates so that these food and feed stuffs could be moved. Why was not that a good provision? It went further than that and provided that if these products were to be exported the ships of the Shipping Board flying the American flag, if they had space for which they had no cargo, could be used to carry them at cost so they might find a market beyond the seas. Why was that a bad provision?

We were not making permanent law. We were undertaking to relieve a situation, a desperate situation, and were therefore supplying drastic means. If we really desire to relieve the farmer, I think we should have retained that provision. If we desire only the relieving of banks and to aid them in making money, either the Kellogg substitute or the McNary substitute will accomplish what you are trying to do. If relieving the banks was the object of the legislation, it will prove successful; but I am rather inclined to imagine the genuine farmer will wait a long time for his relief. I think the kind of farmer my friend from Maine [Mr. FERNALD] proclaimed himself to be a moment ago will get relief under this bill if he needs it; but the man who actually produces the farm products, who tills the soil, and has the corn and cotton to sell is going to wait a long time before he sees a dollar under the McNary amendment.

He will receive only what the banks and other institutions may graciously permit him.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I wish to take my 10 minutes in presenting a few observations on this subject. I hope the amendment presented by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] will be agreed to. I think it ought to be helpful and useful.

The first optimistic note that I have heard with relation to the American farmer or American agricultural conditions for a long while has come from the genial Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD]. He is always an optimist. He speaks of being a real Maine farmer. There is something about the climate of Maine, the environment of Maine, that makes an optimist out of a man. Its air is like champagne; its wonderful hills, forests, lakes, and rivers, the music of the waves of the sea as it comes through the pines, all tend toward optimism. There is nothing like Maine for climate.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President—

Mr. KENYON. I am not quite through; I have just reached a good point. Please do not interrupt me.

On top of all that, for a man to live near where the wonderful Poland Springs water comes from makes a thorough optimist out of him.

I now yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. STANLEY. I was just curious to know how the Senator from Iowa discovered the resemblance between the air of Maine and champagne.

Mr. KENYON. I was a guest at one time when a young man at a Kentucky banquet in Kentucky. [Laughter.] That is the only way I know anything about it.

The Senator from Maine said that legislation of this character means an increase in the price of farm products, and he protests against it. I hope it does mean an increase. I have not as much faith in it as I might have, but I hope it does. Farm products will have to reach a higher level of prices in this country to bring real prosperity.

I wonder if the Senator from Maine knows that in a study and survey made by the Agricultural Department of 36 standard farm products, taking the prewar four-year period, that the purchasing power of those 36 standard farm products—and we must measure them by their purchasing power—is now less than the average for the prewar period? The farmer can not go on in that condition. On the other hand, everything that the farmer has to buy is up around the region of 100 per cent more than he must pay. There is a relativity about that that is not right. If this does not mean an advance in the price of farm products, it does not mean anything. An advance in the prices of farm products means greater prosperity to all, even to the laboring men in the country.

I think the wisdom of the Senate in not adjourning about four weeks ago is exemplified by the present situation. There was some criticism of those from agricultural States because they were against an adjournment. Now, Mr. President, if we had adjourned, not one particle of this agricultural legislation would have been passed by the Congress. There has been an advance of thought by men in this Chamber on the agricultural situation. When we commenced this session of Congress the distressing condition into which agriculture had been brought was not fully realized, but lately even men from industrial centers have come to see the situation, and have been ready to join with those from agricultural communities in helping to remedy the situation.

I believe when this special session shall have closed there will have been a record here of accomplishment along legislative lines for agriculture that never has been equaled. I am not one of those who believe we can cure all these things by legislation. We can no more cure many of the ills of agriculture by legislation than we can change the tides of the sea. There are certain great economic laws that we can not change. It is simply proposed to ease it along a little. The great need of the farmer has been and is now markets and transportation, coupled also with a credit proposition. The farmers of my section of the country are suffering for all these reasons.

I wish to read into the Record a letter showing what the farmer has to pay in the Middle West in the way of commissions on the money that he borrows. Here is a letter from a mortgage brokerage house, reading as follows:

Replying to your letter of the 19th instant, if the 155-acre farm you refer to is high class and will show up well to an inspector we will consider the loan of $18,000 at 6½ per cent interest, payable semi-annually, for a term of five years, with a cash commission of 7 per cent net.

That means a commission of $1,260 that the farmer is compelled to pay. I do not know that in every instance that high a commission is charged, but that is the condition of the prosperous farmer in the Middle West, so when anyone speaks of his having large holdings that does not help the situation if he can not get any money to carry on his work.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. KENYON. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. Was that a land bank?

Mr. KENYON. No; that is a farm-mortgage broker.

Mr. WARREN. Organized under the State laws?

Mr. KENYON. Yes; organized under the State laws.

Mr. WARREN. And subject to State examination?

Mr. KENYON. I will not say under State laws, because it may have been a private institution. The name of the writer is given, and it is a letter from that concern.

Mr. WARREN. I was interested in knowing whether the State of Iowa would counsel that method of business.

Mr. KENYON. We have an 8 per cent usury law. This just about brings it up around the 8 per cent.

Mr. WARREN. Except it is a large amount several years in advance.

Mr. KENYON. Yes; that is true, but that illustrates the situation the farmers are in.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President—

Mr. KENYON. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. From the reading of the letter I wondered whether the 7 per cent is on the total amount, or interest at 7 per cent, one-half per cent for each year.

Mr. KENYON. No; the interest is at 6½ per cent, and in addition to that there is a 7 per cent straight commission for all the loan of $18,000.

Mr. FERNALD. Mr. President, may I suggest to the Senator—

Mr. KENYON. I do not want the Senator to take my time.

Mr. FERNALD. I will only take a second. I wish to suggest to the Senator that it seems to me the State of Iowa ought to get busy and not permit any such usury as that. We would not permit that in the State of Maine.

Mr. KENYON. I do not know about that. I go to the State of Maine once in a while, and I find they are pretty good on farming the summer tourists in Maine. They are good at that species of farming. It is impossible to kill off the Shylock, and they will find some way to get around the usury laws. They are doing it in every State in the Union. This is the situation in the country—lack of markets, transportation difficulties, credit difficulties. We were in that situation when this bill was born.

I wish to say just a word about the unfortunate situation into which the bill has gotten. If there is any one man in the whole United States entitled to the credit for any legislation here on this subject it is the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS].

He took these things up when other men were doing other things, when some of those who have criticized him were indulging in the pleasures of fishing at resorts or possibly chasing the festive golf ball. He worked days and nights on this, and worked himself out, shattered his nerves. His committee brought in this bill. I know he had committee meetings—I plead guilty of not being able to attend many at the time—when there were very few members of the committee present, day after day. The Senator from Nebraska never faltered in the matter, but brought out the bill. There were things in the bill that a good many of us in the committee did not thoroughly believe in. It was experimental. I do not think the committee ever would have brought such a bill here in any time except a time of dire emergency. We were willing to try nearly anything. The provisions in the bill as to buying and selling were stricken out by the committee. The Senator from Nebraska made the fight. He made it here on the floor. I have to some extent watched public men in the time I have been in public life, and I have never seen a man more devoted to the interest of the everyday folks of the United States than is the Senator from Nebraska. He never wavers and never falters, but with courage and ability goes straight ahead even to the point of wrecking his health.

He conceived the idea—and there was some foundation for it—that the way the new bill was brought in was not fair to him. I do not think it was. I do not think for one instant that the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] would grieve or wound a human being; I do not think it is in his system to do so; but the substitute bill came in in some mysterious way. It never went to the committee. Some of us thought, that being the situation—whether it was the intention to slap the Agricultural Committee or not, which is one of the committees, at least, of the Senate that is not packed—that it was the duty of the Agricultural Committee to take up these matters regardless of feeling or of pride that anybody might have in any bill and bring out the best that we could of both these measures.

Personally, I am perfectly willing to go down in any righteous cause with the Senator from Nebraska. I do not think, however, that does any good, as a general thing. The main thing is to get what is best for the country and the committee tried to do that. We have before us the best features of the Kellogg substitute and, I think, the best features of the Norris bill. The situation may be changed by amendments. I have not felt entirely above suspicion over some of the banking propositions which are embodied in the substitute. There is a marked difference between the manner in which the Norris bill deals almost directly with the producer in its benefits and the safeguarding provisions in the substitute bill under which everything is done through banking institutions.

The other fundamental difference is that the Norris bill provides a separate commission to administer the act. I believe this matter is important enough to have provided for carrying out its provisions a commission which will be interested peculiarly in agriculture. The substitute does not provide for that. That is the main objection I have to the substitute. The administration of the legislation is to be put into the hands of the War Finance Corporation. I do not share in the belief of some apparently that there is any divinity surrounding the War Finance Corporation. I do not like the amount of lobbying it has been doing for this substitute.

Senators have objected to organizing a new bureau or a new agency for the administration of this proposed legislation. If the work proposed to be carried on by this measure shall be carried out, so that it will be effective, there are going to be thousands of employees under the War Finance Corporation. I asked one of the members of the War Finance Corporation if he thought they could get along with 17,000 or 18,000 employees. His answer was rather evasive; but if that corporation is to do all of this work, it will be necessary for it to have a great number of employees. So there is not much in the argument that we already have an agency established and that it will save money to use that agency for the administration of this proposed law. I, myself, think that it will be a mistake. The War Finance Corporation is almost peculiarly a banking institution. I had rather the proposal for the establishment of a separate commission should be put into force and effect.

On the other hand, the strong point of the substitute—and that is not contained in the Norris bill—is the credit proposition as embodied in section 24 and the provision for the producer. I think that is vastly stronger than any provision in the Norris bill for credit. So, of those two bills, as I analyze them, the substitute is stronger than the Norris bill in that it provides in section 24 for a system of credits which will be of great value to agriculture, and is weaker in that it places the administration of this proposed legislation in the War Finance Corporation.

I can support either one of these measures unless amendments change the situation, believing that they are going to do some good, though not so much good as we expect, for the legislation may be a failure. It will depend entirely on how it is administered. If it shall be administered for the benefit of the bankers instead of the farmers it will be a calamity, and retribution of outraged agriculture will quickly follow.

Mr. President, my time has nearly expired, but I wish to say further that if we had adjourned as was proposed, as I have previously said, we would have had none of this legislation. This bill, whether the substitute be passed or whether the Norris bill be passed, marks the high tide of legislation which we believe and hope will be helpful to agriculture. This Congress is going to finish the session with a record of accomplishment along this line that will, I am sure, be pointed to with pride in the future.

I call attention to what has really been done: In the first place, we have passed the Curtis bill proposing originally to deposit some $50,000,000 in the Federal farm loan banks—though, I think, that has been cut down now to around $40,000,000—for the use of the farmers. That is helpful. Second, the change of the law by a bill, which just passed the other House yesterday but which passed the Senate some time ago, proposing to increase the rate of interest on the bonds of the Federal Farm Loan Board. That legislation will release a great deal of money in the country, which will be for the benefit of the farmers. Next comes the packer bill, which has been agreed upon in conference and will be taken up, I assume, and disposed of within a short time. Next is the pending bill—which will be passed either in the form of the substitute or the original bill—a relief, as it is hoped it will be, for agriculture. There is also the grain exchange bill, which will be on the program here within a short time; also the cooperative marketing bill, and the bill giving to agriculture representation on the Federal Reserve Board. These measures constitute a great program of legislative accomplishment for agriculture. I think this beneficent result has been accomplished by reason of the fact that men who may be sneered at because they assume to speak for farmers have been persistent in trying to get through, regardless of politics, an agricultural program.

Mr. President, one other thing should be brought about, if possible. This country can not stand the present high railroad rates. The farmers can not stand them. The case involving many of these rates is to be heard by the Interstate Commerce Commission commencing on the 15th day of August. That case is known as the Kansas case. The other Middle Western States have joined with the complainant in that case. That will be the occasion to make a drive for the reduction of freight rates on agricultural products.

If these objects can be accomplished, if we can help to take care, as proposed in the pending bill, of the surplus, if we can help to create markets, if railroad rates can be lowered by the action of the Interstate Commerce Commission, we will have agriculture on the way back to prosperity; and when agriculture gets back on its way to prosperity the entire country will again be prosperous.

We have got to couple with it legislation, I believe, in the days that are to come, some system of rural credits for the American farmer. When we have done all of these things we shall have done a great deal for agriculture.

The things I have enumerated, that will be accomplished before this season is over in all human probability, will be pointed to with pride, I presume, next year by the Republicans, who will claim credit for them; but I wish to say that in all of this legislation there has been no politics; it has been just as much to the credit of the Democrats as to the credit of the Republicans, and it will be a creditable showing for the American Congress.

Mr. President, I believe that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] is not going to delay the pending bill. As he has said, there are just as many friends for that kind of legislation in the House as there are in the Senate. If it were going to delay this measure, I would not feel like voting for it, but I believe it will go through the other House without much trouble and will be of great help.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON].

SEVERAL SENATORS. Vote!

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that the amendment be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi to the amendment in the nature of a substitute reported by the committee will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 6, after line 21, it is proposed to insert the following as a new section:

SEC. 25. (a) The corporation shall have power and is authorized and empowered, upon request therefor by the Federal Farm Loan Board, created by the Federal farm loan act approved July 17, 1916, as amended, to make advances to Federal land banks, at a rate of interest not exceeding the rate of interest charged by Federal land banks for loans under the provisions of such Federal farm loan act, as amended, and to accept as security therefor farm loan bonds issued by such Federal land banks maturing within five years of the date of issue, or to purchase such bonds from the capital, earnings, reserve fund, or other assets of such corporation to the amount of $100,000,000 during the calendar year ending December 31, 1921, and $100,000,000 during the calendar year ending December 31, 1922.

(b) Every Federal land bank shall have power, subject to the provisions, limitations, and requirements of the Federal farm loan act approved July 17, 1916, as amended, and of this section, to receive and pay interest upon such advances, to issue farm loan bonds as security therefor, to issue and sell farm loan bonds, to buy the same for its own account at any time, and to retire any or all of such bonds at or before maturity.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the Senator from Oregon, as amended by the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, as I gave notice yesterday, on behalf of the members of the subcommittee, I desire to move an amendment. On page 3, line 2, of the so-called McNary amendment, I move to strike out the word "producing," and in the same line, after the word "products," I move to insert "or to any association composed of persons engaged in producing such products." I offer that as one amendment because the two branches of the amendment pertain to the same thing.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina to the amendment in the nature of a substitute reported by the committee.

Mr. SMOOT. I have not seen the amendment, Mr. President. I should like to know what it is.

Mr. SMITH. It simply substitutes for the word "producing" the words "or to any association composed of persons engaged in producing such products," because it has been argued here that it will not be possible for the War Finance Corporation to deal, as we had hoped they might deal, with individuals. So we desire to strike out "person producing" and insert "any association composed of persons engaged in producing."

Mr. POMERENE. May I ask that the provision be read as it would stand if the amendment were adopted?

Mr. SMITH. I will ask the Secretary to read it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 3, line 2, it is proposed to strike out the word "producing" and the comma, and at the end of line 2, after the word "products," to insert the words "or to any association composed of persons engaged in producing such products"; so as to read:

(a) To any person engaged in the United States in dealing in, or marketing any such products, or to any association composed of persons engaged in producing such products for the purpose of assisting such person to carry such products until they can be exported or sold for export in an orderly manner.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina to the amendment in the nature of a substitute.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] presupposes that there is something sacred or valuable in an association of individuals which does not exist in connection with an individual producer. It also presupposes that there is some difficulty about determining the credit of an individual that does not pertain to determining the credit of an association.

It is hardly worth while to talk about the first proposition. There is nothing sacred about an incorporation of individuals into a stock company. There is nothing sacred nor in itself profitable about an association of individuals who are called upon to deal with a financial question over and above the individuals forming the association; and as to the difficulty of determining the credit, it is very much more difficult to determine what ought to be the credit of a farmers' voluntary association necessarily composed of individual farmers, each one of them constituting a factor in the problem, than it is to determine what should be the credit of the individual farmer producing the cotton or the wheat or the live stock.

I can much more easily in my county determine whether I, as a capitalist—if I were a capitalist—should extend credit to an individual farmer raising cotton or live stock than I could determine whether I should extend credit to an association composed of him and other people with limited liability. I know that when I extend credit to the individual producer I have a right at law to go against everything in the world that he owns—his crop and his stock and his land and his mules and his choses in action—but when I am to deal with this association, which necessarily is one of limited individual liability, then I am to deal only with the amount of cash that they have paid in in order to form the incorporation; and I can not deal with their credits, because their credits are quite uncertain.

Mr. President, I do not know whether this proposed legislation, either in the shape of the Norris bill or in the shape of the bill of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] or in the shape of the Agricultural Committee's bill, is going to do very much good or not. I do not pretend to know. It depends altogether upon how the individual flesh-and-blood men who are going to handle it are going to handle it. It depends altogether upon the administration of it; but I protest that if the assumed object is to help the farmer, the producer of agricultural products, he shall not by name be excluded from the benefits of the bill.

I am not sure that there will be very many individual farmers applying for credits under this proposed legislation. As one of them, I would not apply, although in a better condition financially than most of them; but if it is known as a psychological proposition that the man can apply, then it will satisfy him infinitely more to have that knowledge; and it is absolutely child's play and puerility to say that just because he has joined an association he is entitled to public help, and because he has not joined an association he is not entitled to it. He is entitled to it under either of these bills upon an exact equality with any corporation in the United States, to wit, provided that he puts up the necessary and satisfactory security, the necessary and satisfactory collateral; and if he can not do that as an individual or as a corporation, then if the thing is rightly administered he will get no credit, and if it is rightly administered, and he can put up the proper security and collateral, he will get the credit.

This whole Republic was founded upon the idea of individuality. It was its beginning; and now we are gradually coming around to the point where a farmer as an individual is tabooed by the legislation of the Federal Government, but when he forms some sort of an association, called the Molehill Washout Association, or something else, he may be recognized by the Federal Government.

As I said a moment ago, I would not apply under this law or any other for any sort of public help of any description; but I do know that my credit is better than that of any association that would be formed in Yazoo County if I wanted credit from the Federal Government, and I resent the idea that I am to be discriminated against because I propose to act individually, and do not propose to act in cohort with somebody else; and I do know that the credit of an association where every man's individual liability is limited to the amount of stock he has taken is less good than my credit where everything I am and everything I own and everything I am worth goes behind my note.

Mr. President, you are either sincere or else you are playing with the farmers. If you want to play with them, why go ahead, of course; play with them; and if they are asses enough to accept the play, you will win. If you are not playing with them, however, I beg you not to make a distinction upon the very face of the bill between the producer and some middleman handling his product, because after all has been said and done—all that can be said about an association of farmers—you will find when you come to execute this law that it will not be an association of farmers, but it will be an association of middlemen and of bankers or of somebody else who will be the recipients of the credit extended by the United States Government under either one of these bills. Besides that, my friend from South Carolina knows and I know that it is exceedingly difficult and almost impossible to bring about an association of farmers where one farmer makes himself responsible for another farmer's debt. You can bring about that association amongst banks and amongst merchants and amongst people accustomed to financial operations; but as a rule you can not make one farmer promise to go in and stand responsible for another farmer's debt. He lives by himself. Some of them live, as I do, 25 miles from a railroad, or from a telegraph, with nothing to bother their individual existence except the telephone. Some of them even have not that. The farmer is raised as an individual from the time he is born until the time he dies. He is seldom a member of anything except a church, and you can not appeal to him to surrender his individuality.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do.

Mr. McLEAN. The Senator from Mississippi, if I understand him correctly, as a disciple of Jeffersonian Democracy, believes that if the Government is going into the business of extending special privileges it should prefer the farmer to the banker.

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; I did not say that. The Senator knows I did not say that. The Senator must be violating his usual and rather consistent character and becoming a humorist. What I was saying was that he must be put upon the same ground of equality, and not that there should be a special privilege.

This bill gives every opportunity to an association of bankers, it gives every opportunity to an association of jobbers, it gives every opportunity to an association of wholesalers, it gives every opportunity to an association of warehousemen, and then it wants to deny it to the individual who is the producer of the thing that you are pretending to try to help export and find a foreign market for. Of course the Senator knew when he asked me that question that he was playing with my sense of humor, even if he were not exploiting his own.

Mr. President, I doubt whether there will be 500 applications, I very seriously doubt whether there will be 10,000, from individual farmers, the producers of cotton, wheat, or live stock, if this bill is passed as the Agricultural Committee brought it in, and without this amendment; but I do know that if the bill bears upon its face this potentiality, as it bears upon its face the possibility of the individual producers getting credit, it will exercise a very salutary effect upon all these associations of middlemen and of bankers in their dealing with the producer himself.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CURTIS in the chair). The time of the Senator from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I hope the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina will be agreed to. This is not a question of psychology; it is a practical business proposition. It has been considered very carefully by many Senators, and by the War Finance Corporation.

To commence with, it is an impossibility, as explained by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], for the War Finance Corporation to loan directly to farmers or producers. It could not do it with any organization which it could get. It could not furnish the credits necessary for it, if it could do it, because it requires all the credits of the local banks and dealers to make these direct loans. The object of this bill is to market the surplus products of the country in foreign countries, to keep up our foreign trade, furnish ready markets, and to aid in carrying the products until they can be exported, and to aid in exporting them.

Mr. President, the association of farmers was put in by the Senator for a very good reason. All over the country they are organizing farm-selling agencies, like the fruit-selling agencies in California, and already the War Finance Corporation has been advancing money to associations of stock producers, to aid in carrying it and marketing their product. There is no use whatever of authorizing a corporation to go into a business which it would be impossible for it to execute.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I am not willing to be put in the attitude of offering an amendment which would discriminate against the very class I come from, and hope to represent. This is a mere matter of practical common sense. It is absurd to suppose that a few men whom we have authorized and empowered to deal with this vast problem can deal with forty or fifty million individuals. The wise men who founded this Government said that two men should stand in this body and represent every individual in their respective States. Reduced to the last analysis, the argument of the Senator from Mississippi would be that to deal fairly with the voter, every man who can vote should sit in the United States Senate. It can not be done. They could not be housed. You have to use common sense sometimes, even though it seems to go against individual rights and equities.

That is all this is introduced for, to enable a body of men to act organically, swiftly, and for the relief of the individuals, as I hope we, representing every sovereign State, are doing. That is all as to that.

I had hoped that I would not have to rise and explain this amendment. I thought it was so patent on its face that every man would see at a glance that it would take a vast army, costing a great deal of money, and having agents everywhere, to meet individuals and pass upon their qualifications; and, as the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANDELL] suggests, there would be so much time consumed that there would be practically no benefits accruing from it.

We are doing the best we can to relieve this situation, and we have digested and thoroughly weighed the provisions of this bill. We have organized bankers in our State, or allowed them to organize, for the purpose of meeting the convenience of the people. We did not prescribe that every man in a State, simply because he is a voter, should be a banker. We provide rules and regulations which govern the circulating medium. I have confidence in some of our bankers, and I think they are earnestly desirous of affording means of aiding, through the laws of the State and of the Union. I think they are earnestly and honestly hoping that this means will be adopted.

Mr. President, the Senator from Mississippi has attempted to inject into this the idea that those who are proposing this amendment are inveighing against the farmer and for the bankers. The bankers are somewhat like some other professions or avocations; they are a necessary evil, if they are evil, and in this amendment we are trying to use them to the betterment of the people we are hoping to reach.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Before the Senator sits down may I ask him, if he is trying to use the bankers for the betterment of the producers, why does he not insist that the producers themselves shall be used for their own betterment?

Mr. SMITH. I merely desire to reply to that, Mr. President, by saying that we provide that if the producers can get themselves into such units so that they can avail themselves of the aid of the War Finance Corporation and not necessitate the absurdity of giving forty or fifty million men the right to come and apply for these loans, they may do so. The Senator himself admitted that he did not believe 500 of them would come, which in itself was tantamount to saying it would be an absurdity to think that they would come. I might call his attention to the fact that the farm loan act will not permit the individual to go directly to the Farm Loan Board and get his money, but he must organize, and through his organization get the money.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi has had the floor.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The time of the Senator from South Carolina has not expired.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator is asking the Senator from South Carolina a question, and he yields, the Senator may have the floor for that purpose.

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I have not contended for anything as absurd as that suggested by the Senator from South Carolina. I have merely said that, provided the producer could furnish exactly the same security and exactly the same collateral, to exactly the same satisfaction, of exactly the same board, he should be admitted upon an equal ground; and the number of them who may apply under that is, of course, entirely speculative.

Mr. SMITH. I want to ask the Senator if, in this emergency, in the limited time within which relief must come, if it shall come at all, he believes that if every man had the security they could accept, it would be physically possible for the War Finance Corporation to pass upon forty-five or fifty million claims?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, of course I do not believe that; nor do I believe, nor does the Senator believe, that there would be forty-five or fifty million claims; nor do I believe, nor does the Senator believe, that there would be 20,000 claims; nor do I believe, nor does the Senator believe, that there is anything sacred about the word "association" or the word "corporation" which enables credit in the name of an association or corporation to take precedence of the same credit in the name of an individual.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, I see much to commend in the statements made by the Senator from South Carolina and by the Senator from Mississippi. They are both right, in a way. There is no reason why a producer with large holdings should be denied the right, with sufficient collateral and sufficient security, to obtain aid from the Government. I see no necessity for forcing him to form an organization of some kind in order to reach the Government.

On the other hand, I am firmly convinced that in order to utilize this advantage you are bound to give to associations an opportunity to come as an individual would come.

The Senator from Mississippi has not followed the history of farm organizations if he is under the impression that they are afflicted by the same infirmities which exist between a large planter and a great many tenants. It is not a question of one farmer loaning to another. The citrus-fruit growers of the Pacific coast, the citrus-fruit growers in another association of Florida, the truck-market gardeners of the east coast of Maryland, and any number of associations of tobacco growers in the South have demonstrated the fact that they can, to a greater or less extent, protect a product by cooperative marketing. At this time cooperative marketing is impossible without the ability to hold the assets of the association until such time as the market conditions will warrant the sale of the products.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, did the Senator from Kentucky understand me as objecting to the formation of associations and their getting credit from this Finance Corporation?

Mr. STANLEY. No; I did not so state.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Senator did, there is nothing in what I said or thought that would justify that conclusion. I have merely contended that they should stand upon an equality with the individual. Of course, the more they associate, the better.

Mr. STANLEY. We are agreed, then, on that point. For that reason, Mr. President, I do not think it is necessary to exclude the individual in order to take care of the association. The corporation can deal with those it prefers to deal with first, and those who have large claims upon it, of course, can be reached before it would deal with the individual. I think they can exercise the proper discretion in that matter.

More than that, if this legislation is to be of avail—and I sincerely hope it will be of avail—I can see no great difficulty, after the rules and regulations have been established, in giving to any number of people or any number of employees the right, on the furnishing of sufficient or solvent securities, to make the loans required.

For that reason I propose to amend the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina by adding the words "or persons," so as to read "any person or persons engaged," and so forth.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment. Will the Senator suggest where his amendment is to be inserted, in what line and on what page?

Mr. STANLEY. On page 3, line 3, I move to amend by inserting, before the words "or association," the word "person," so as to read "any person or association of persons."

Mr. HARRISON. May I suggest to the Senator that I am in entire agreement with the suggestion, but if he will note, on the first page, under the definition of "person," it is stated that the word "person" includes partnerships, corporations, and associations, as well as individuals. Consequently you would not have to add "person or association," because the word "person," which is already there, includes associations of persons.

Mr. STANLEY. Does the Senator from Mississippi believe that an individual could avail himself of the benefits of this act under the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. HARRISON. I do not, and I am opposed to it. I am for standing by the action of the committee.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I do not wish to take more than a few moments of the time of the Senate. I do hope that the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] will not prevail. I am as much interested in the individual farmer as is the Senator from Mississippi or any other Senator in this Chamber, and I would not do anything which in my judgment would hurt or embarrass him in his business affairs, but I am strongly convinced that the amendment would make this legislation impracticable and unworkable in the first place, and, in the second place, I am convinced that the amendment would be of no benefit to the farmer.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, merely for information, what amendment is the Senator talking about, the one offered by the Senator from South Carolina or the one offered by the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. SIMMONS. I am talking about the one extending the privilege of lending directly to individuals.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is in the bill reported by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, is it not?

Mr. SIMMONS. I understand the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina will change that.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But in the bill as reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry individuals are allowed to make advances.

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Very well; then the Senator does not mean the amendment. He means the committee substitute.

Mr. SIMMONS. I have explained what I mean and I think there is no question about what I mean. I hope the Senator will not further interrupt me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina declines to yield further.

Mr. SIMMONS. I mean that I think to extend the loan powers of this corporation to individuals will make the legislation unworkable and will not be of any benefit to the individual farmer.

Why do I say that I think it would make it unworkable? First, I say that because Mr. Meyer and Mr. McLean, two directors of that corporation, stated that in their judgment it would be absolutely impossible for the legislation to be administered and that it would break down of its own weight if they were required to deal with individuals in making these loans.

In the second place, it is perfectly apparent to me, in the absence of any statement by those gentlemen who have had experience in dealing with this corporation, that it is absolutely impossible for a corporation located at the Capital, composed of five directors, only four of them active directors, to efficiently perform the functions and duties of bankers for the entire agricultural population of these 48 States. I know from experience that a small bank dealing only with the citizenship of a single county has the greatest difficulty in transacting that business without calling in outside aid for the purpose of investigating details and investigating the financial standing of their customers. Now, it is suggested to impose upon this corporation the duty of making the original investigations that are necessary to determine whether or not a loan shall be granted and whether the security of the borrower is adequate and sufficient, as applied to every man engaged in agriculture in any State in the Union. How can it be done? Mr. President, it is preposterous.

Not only that but it will make it impossible for many farmers in the country to secure relief through these banks. The time that would be required to make the investigations would run through the months, and probably before they had ascertained the facts that were necessary to enable them intelligently to decide, under the duties and powers imposed upon them, the applicant would have no further necessity for the loan.

If a farmer goes to his local bank and borrows money for agricultural purposes, that bank can immediately go to the corporation and get a loan upon that farmer's obligation. The security which the farmer in that instance has to give is a very different kind of security from that which he will have to give if he comes direct to this Federal corporation from a distant State, himself not known to a single member of the corporation. Having no personal credit himself, his loan will have to be made, if made at all, upon the showing of his property values and holdings, which would have to be investigated often from a distance of thousands of miles. On the other hand, if he goes to his local bank, credit will be extended to him not only upon the basis of his property but upon the basis of his standing as a man and a citizen in that community.

Mr. President, I would not have said this much about the matter if I did not feel that the amendment would encumber and embarrass and endanger the legislation.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, does the Senator mean the amendment or the substitute?

Mr. SIMMONS. I mean the extension of the right to lend to individuals. I can not for the life of me see any benefit that the farmer will secure through it. I trust that we will not put on this bill an amendment that will delay its passage in the other branch of Congress.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator let me ask him a question?

Mr. SIMMONS. I hope we will not put on this bill any provision that will delay its passage through the House, and I know if we put this on we may not hope for the passage of the bill as it passes the Senate without having to go to conference and there will be long delay there.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, this was reported by the committee, and if there be a committee that is a diligent committee, and most of them are, though not all, it is the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. We have been told for four or five days that the work of this committee is sacrosanct and infallible. Now, it is proposed that the farmer individual shall not get a loan—

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, will the Senator let me explain?

Mr. ASHURST. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH. A subcommittee was appointed for the purpose of taking these bills and agreeing on something. We had incorporated the present form in full committee. I do not know that there was any particular vote on it, however. After the facts were laid before the subcommittee that was appointed we then amended it so that it would deal as therein provided.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Who amended it, the subcommittee or the entire committee?

Mr. SMITH. The subcommittee.

Mr. WILLIAMS. So that the report of the entire committee as it stands is for the individual, and it is only the subcommittee that is demanding this change?

Mr. SMITH. We did not poll the committee, on account of the shortness of time, but I am quite sure the full committee, with one or two exceptions, would heartily concur.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It would be a very easy matter to call them together and ascertain.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I am told here—

Mr. SIMMONS. Of course, Mr. President, this is all taking place in my time.

Mr. ASHURST. That is true, and I shall say nothing further.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WATSON of Indiana in the chair). The time of the Senator from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I wish to take only a few moments of the Senate's time, as I desire that a vote be taken as soon as possible. I do not believe there is a Senator here who will not vote for the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina if he understands just what would happen if that amendment were not agreed to. I say now that if the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina is not adopted, and the substitute is passed as it was reported to the Senate, 250,000 employees will not be able to do the work that it will involve. If Senators want any assistance to the farmer to come from this legislation, they had better agree to the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina.

Think of what will happen to the War Finance Corporation if the bill is passed in its present shape. As one Senator said to me just a moment ago, the result will be 250,000 letters within a very few days from his State alone. Who is going to answer those letters? Who is going to make the investigation? Who is going to pass upon the titles? Mr. President, it seems to me almost preposterous to think that every individual in the United States should have the right to make application to the corporation for a loan and expect the corporation to answer those letters and consider those applications unless we provide for that corporation 100,000 or 200,000 employees, if they expect to get relief within a year or two years.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President—

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. SIMMONS. A Senator just stated to me that one of the trust companies in the city of New York has a personnel of 2,500 to transact the business of that one institution.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President—

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Of course, as the Senator suggests, it might be possible that 250,000 people would write to the War Finance Corporation, but it is not at all necessary that the War Finance Corporation should consider any letter, nor would they consider any letter, unless on the face of the letter there was a prima facie right to a credit. That letter must be accompanied by the security. It must be accompanied by the offer of security at any rate and by the offer of the hypothecation of whatever it may be. Of course there are not that number of people capable of writing to the War Finance Corporation and inclosing securities.

Mr. SMOOT. There is nothing in the bill to prevent any individual making application for a loan. Any such letter certainly ought to be answered, no matter whether it is a plain application or a letter requiring a reply as to what would be necessary for the writer to present to the War Finance Corporation in order to obtain a loan or even consideration of an application for a loan.

As I understand it, and as I think every Senator here understands it, the pending legislation is an emergency matter. If we are going to do anything we ought to do it at once. It is our desire to give relief immediately. If we leave this provision in the bill and the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina is not adopted, I tell you, Senators, it will be a long, long time before very many farmers in the country will receive any relief under the provisions of the bill.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I share the views expressed by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] and the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] to the effect that if we desire to make the bill unworkable we should extend the privileges to the individuals. It is not necessary to do that. If we are going to give the privileges to the individual, it can be done through the banks and other associations. There are about 8,100 national banks in the United States. There are between 25,000 and 30,000 banks all told. That means there are between 25,000 and 30,000 banking agencies, to say nothing of others in the United States through which this board can act and reach the individual.

Some of the distinguished Senators here have suggested that we ought not to extend any privilege to the banks that were not extended to the individuals. These privileges go through the banks to the individuals. It may be that it will cost the individual a little bit more money by way of commissions. I am not sure about that, but it is necessary for safety. If some Senators are of the opinion that the rate of interest which will be charged is too high, let them go to their legislatures and have the rate of interest in their States reduced.

Why should we limit these privileges to associations rather than to the individual? It is because we know the financial responsibility of an association is better generally than that of an individual. If we are going to say that there should be no privileges extended to an association which are not extended to the individual, let us be consistent, wipe out the member banks and their power to discount, and let the individual go directly to the Federal reserve bank. If we were to adopt such a course how long would our financial system continue to serve the people?

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President—

Mr. POMERENE. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the argument of the Senator from Ohio about loaning to individuals is strong, but the Senator will recall that this measure provides for loaning to any person dealing in or marketing agricultural products. If we are going to lend to the individual middleman, on what theory can we exclude the individual producer?

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, that is a fair question, and I will give the Senator a frank answer. I will say that I do not like that part of this bill at all. It seems to me that if we want to relieve everybody who is in distress—and we can find plenty of them; we can find them in all the walks of life—let us extend the privilege to everybody; let everybody come here with their chattel mortgages, their pledges, and so forth, and let the War Finance Corporation hang out three golden balls before its door and open up a real pawn shop. It would be an interesting kind of national financing, but it would result in the wrecking of the entire financial system, and instead of serving the farmers we would be doing them a positive disservice by ruining the whole country without saving them—

Mr. RANDELL. Mr. President, I should like to try to answer the question which the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] asked the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] as to a provision of the bill with which the Senator from Ohio said he was not satisfied. I am perfectly satisfied with the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], because I always try to be practical. I want to say on that point that it is not practical to carry out the provisions of the proposed act in any other way.

Let me refer to the Federal reserve system and ask Senators how it operates? It operates through 12 branches, and those branches operate through their member banks throughout the country. They do not deal directly with individuals. How does the farm-loan bank system operate? Twelve banks throughout the United States constitute that system. Those banks do not deal with the individuals. That would be impractical. Each farm-loan bank deals with associations of farmers. In the little parish in which I live we have one association of white people and another association of colored people who borrow from the farm-loan banks. That great organization, the farm-loan bank, could not deal directly with every farmer in the United States.

I understand that the War Finance Corporation, which it is intended shall administer the bill now under consideration, has 15 employees. The farm-loan bank, I presume, has thousands of employees, as has the Federal reserve system.

Senators, this is emergency legislation, as has well been said by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], and the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT]. If we wish to get any benefit from it, let us be practical men. Theoretically it is all right to deal with the individual, but practically it is not all right. Let me call attention to one provision in the substitute, as proposed to be amended on the motion of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], which says:

(a) To any person engaged in the United States in dealing in * * * such products.

Whom does that take in? That takes in every merchant who furnishes money to those who raise agricultural products. There are several in my town who would come in under that provision. It also takes in every commission merchant who furnishes money to those who deal in agricultural products; it takes in a large number of people in the United States. Under the term "person" it takes in partnerships, associations, and corporations which deal in agricultural products. We do not limit it. There are a great many men who will come in under the terms of this measure as amended.

Keeping in mind that this is emergency legislation, if it is to do any good at all it must be done in the next few months, and I say the War Finance Corporation will work wonders if it succeeds in dealing with all the people and all the associations and all the partnerships which will come in under the terms of the act as proposed to be amended on the motion of the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, when we analyze this provision, the apprehensions which Senators entertain are somewhat amusing. Under the act as amended any person engaged in dealing in or marketing farm products—

Mr. CURTIS. I rise to a question of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. CURTIS. Under the unanimous-consent agreement, as I understand, a Senator is limited to one speech of 10 minutes on an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair so understands the agreement. Has the Senator from Kentucky previously spoken?

Mr. STANLEY. I spoke on an amendment which I offered, but I wish now to address my remarks to the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair, with all due respect, thinks that the Senator from Kentucky is not in order. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky to the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I am opposed to the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH]. If adopted, it would deny to the farmer the right to receive aid from the War Finance Corporation, to enable him to hold his crop for a limited period in order that he may secure a better price.

This legislation was originally proposed solely in the interest of the farmer, and yet this amendment would exclude the farmer from all direct benefit under it.

Senators who support the amendment, denying the farmer the right to borrow money from the War Finance Corporation, upon ample security to be approved by that corporation, assert that the corporation would be swamped by the numerous applications of individual farmers. But other provisions of the bill will permit every grain dealer and every middleman handling agricultural products in this country to file individual applications for money with the War Finance Corporation. Like provisions in the bill permit every bank and every individual banker in the United States to borrow money from this same Government agency—the War Finance Corporation—to loan to farmers, taking their rake-off of interest from the farmers. But these Senators express no anxiety that the applications of the individual middlemen and the individual banker will swamp the War Finance Corporation.

Is this bill originally proposed in the farmers' interest to be converted into a measure solely for the benefit of the middlemen, the speculators, and the bankers?

Is the farmer to be wholly eliminated and excluded from its benefits?

Mr. ASHURST. We have done so already.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Then, if the farmer is to be denied all aid under its terms it will be converted into legislation for the benefit of those who are leeches and parasites upon agriculture.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. No; if the Senator will excuse me; I have but a few minutes.

Mr. McKELLAR. Certainly.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, it does not seem to occasion any anxiety to Senators who are supporting the amendment to deny the farmer the right to borrow money to carry his crops over the period of depression that the vast army of individual middlemen and speculators shall be permitted to besiege the War Finance Corporation for Government loans to enable these favored parties to carry their holdings in agricultural products over for higher prices. They are to enjoy the favors of the Government under this bill, but the farmer is to be cut out. We are to take care of everybody but the farmer in a piece of legislation that was at the outset to preserve the farmer from destruction.

Mr. STANLEY. The owner of a peanut stand can apply, but the man who raises the peanuts can not apply.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Exactly; the owner of the peanut stand is a "dealer in agricultural products," but the farmer, unfortunately, is a producer, and he is to be denied.

Mr. President, if every individual dealer and every speculator in agricultural products and every bank and every private banker can be taken care of by the War Finance Corporation without overburdening that Government agency, then it does seem to me that it would be just and fair to retain the provision that would insure the individual farmer a direct benefit.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, the pending bill is the most peculiar piece of legislation which has been brought before the Senate in 10 years, and its parliamentary history is mystifying. It was reported from the Committee on Agriculture by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], an earnest, faithful Senator who, with many others, labored diligently to perfect the bill, but at the appropriate time he was parliamentarily submarined, and he now lies on a bed of sickness. Then substitutes were proposed, and with gestures like those of undertakers signaling to pallbearers, Senators were urged not to vote for any amendments to the substitutes, although those doing the signaling were themselves offering amendments.

I then proposed an amendment providing that farmers under Federal reclamation projects should have the benefit of the Federal farm loan law, and Senators said, "No; this is an emergency matter; do not do this; do not try to amend this bill." Strange words from the lips of the very Senators who themselves were proposing amendments to this bill which they say "must not be amended."

Now it is discovered that the farmers are so numerous in the United States that we must eliminate them altogether from the bill.

In other words, we are quite busy trying to do something to relieve the producer by making easier the pathway of the "middleman." We are told that this bill is an emergency measure; I remember that during the war a bill was brought before us appropriating $740,000,000 for an emergency. The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWENS] arose and directed some questions as to how the $740,000,000—for an aircraft—should be expended, and he questioned those in power as to how the appropriation was to be spent and attempted to put some words into the law that might restrict or guard the expenditure of that huge sum; he was politely but emphatically told to "Sit down; this is an emergency; do not ask questions; can you not trust other people?" We trusted other people with $740,000,000 to build an aircraft, and from that appropriation nothing ever flew but the money.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President—

Mr. ASHURST. I regret I can not yield at this moment. And we are told that this bill is one which we must not amend, as it is sacrosanct, and then one of the most distinguished members of the Committee on Agriculture himself moves to amend it by thrusting a glittering blade into its bowels because the farmers, forsooth, are so numerous that we can not deal with them individually. The end and upshot of this bill seems to be to provide for the care of banks which have made improvident loans; to allow banks which are engorged with loans made at high rates of interest to liquidate those loans. If we could adhere to the original Norris bill I think possibly the farmer might get some benefit out of this legislation. I shall support it, however, because I am willing to do, as Gladstone always did, accept a compromise, but I deplore that it has been refined away and whittled away to a point so fine that it can not now be called a farmer's bill, but is almost a "middleman's" relief bill; hence I must oppose the amendment proposing to eliminate the farmer.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, until within the last few days it never has been suggested to my knowledge by anybody, upon any bill, that the Government, through the War Finance Corporation, the Federal reserve bank, or otherwise, should make direct loans to farmers; and it was not suggested with reference to this bill, it was not in the thought of the chairman of the committee, the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], that loans should be made directly to farmers under his bill. I asked him that direct question in his speech, and I want to read to the Senate what the Senator from Nebraska said about making loans directly to farmers.

I asked him this question:

Does the Senator admit that under his bill no producer can receive advances unless that producer is either an exporter or a member of a cooperative association that is an exporter?

This is the Senator's speech of July 28. In reply, the Senator from Nebraska said:

I never had an idea that a producer, an ordinary individual farmer, was going to get a direct loan under the bill. I do not think that is contemplated by anybody. I do not suppose the Senator contemplates that by this amendment. This corporation, no matter what it might be or how it might be constituted, would not be able to advance money to all the individual farmers of the country. I am not asking that. I am not claiming that. I do not want that, although even if the law goes far enough to give them the authority to do that, it might be, when you have to make a law general, that it would include a good many people who under the practice of carrying it out would be in effect excluded.

That is the view of the chairman of the Agricultural Committee; and now it is pretty nearly time, Mr. President, that a lot of these pretended friends of the farmer who are now making these claims that nobody ever thought of making a little while ago should understand that instead of being friends of the farmer they are trying to destroy this bill. It will be destroyed, in my judgment, unless this amendment be adopted.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, it is natural that the Senator from Wisconsin should take the position that he has taken; but anyone who reads the Norris bill can see that its purpose is not only for the corporation to act as the agent for persons—and they are classed as individuals and corporations and associations—but to buy from persons throughout this country agricultural products, and to make advances to persons; and, as one member of the committee, I understood that we were going to the original producer.

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] and the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] wrote a substitute, or some one else wrote it and handed it to them for correction, and it was presented here, and it was because of that substitute that the Senate Agricultural Committee substitute was presented here. We amended the Kellogg substitute, and the Kellogg substitute eliminated the producer, although, as stated by the Senator from Wisconsin it took care of the individual if he be a banker, either in the matter of advancements or in the matter of coming to the War Finance Corporation and selling his collateral. So I can not understand how the Senate can go on record as being in favor of the individual if he is a banker and not in favor of the individual if he is a producer. So it was the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry that took the Kellogg substitute and extended to the producer the provision that dealt with persons dealing in agricultural products.

From the remarks made by the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] and others, one might think that the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry had eliminated the producer. The Committee on Agriculture and Forestry has taken care of the producer, and those who vote against the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Carolina will be voting with the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. This is an individual amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina. The committee's substitute takes care of the producer. If you vote for the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina, you vote to eliminate him.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY] to the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. ASHURST. Let it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment to the amendment as proposed by the Senator from Kentucky will be again stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The Senator from South Carolina proposed the following amendment:

On page 3, line 2, strike out the word "producing" and the comma and, at the end of line 2, after the word "products," insert the words "or to any association composed of persons engaged in producing such products," so that, if amended, it would read:

"(a) To any person engaged in the United States in dealing in or marketing any such products, or to any association composed of persons engaged in producing such products, for the purpose of assisting such person to carry such products until they can be exported or sold for export in an orderly manner."

And to the words proposed to be inserted by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY] proposes, before the word "association," to insert the words "person or," so that it will read:

Or to any person or association composed of persons engaged in producing such products.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York will state it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Has the Chair ruled as to whether or not this is an amendment in the third degree?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that under former rulings it is not an amendment in the third degree, because the original amendment is a motion to strike out and insert. It is what Vice President Marshall used to call "an amendment in the third degree under Rule XVIII."

Mr. HARRISON. Did the Chair rule that this amendment is not in order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No; the Chair ruled that it is in order.

Mr. HARRISON. May I ask the Senator from Kentucky if it is not true that the definition of "person" in the Senate committee substitute takes in individuals, associations, firms, or corporations; and that being so, it would be useless to offer his amendment?

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, after examining the bill very carefully, I feel assured that under the wording of the bill as drawn persons will be taken care of as well as associations. For that reason I withdraw the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky withdraws his amendment. The question recurs on the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] to the substitute proposed by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY] on behalf of the committee.

Mr. McKELLAR and other Senators called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CARAWAY (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. McKINLEY]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON], and will vote. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. REED. I am paired on this bill with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. NEWBERRY], who is absent from the city. I learn, however, that I am at liberty to vote on this matter, because if my pair were present he would vote as I shall vote. I vote "yea."

So Mr. SMITH's amendment to the amendment, in the nature of a substitute proposed by Mr. McNARY on behalf of the committee, was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY] on behalf of the committee, as amended.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I am going to offer an amendment which is in the nature of a rider; and I am frankly stating it because I am generally opposed to that character of legislation. But it is a matter which is very pertinent to the pending measure.

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] has offered an amendment intended to accomplish the same purpose. The Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] has also offered an amendment for the accomplishment of the same purpose. It is to amend the Federal farm loan act so that the Federal Farm Loan Board may extend credit to farmers within irrigation projects.

In the Western States, where projects have been in existence under the reclamation act for a number of years, our chief farm production comes from those projects. They are not speculative enterprises any longer; they constitute the chief farming of our Western States. These farmers, under the irrigation act of 1902, have patents to their lands. In most of the projects all of the land is in cultivation, and yet, by reason of the inadvertent wording of the farm loan act, those lands can not be accepted as security for loans under the farm loan act. All these amendments have for their purpose the remedying of that condition.

I am only offering it as my opinion, but I do not think that the amendments submitted by the Senator from Arizona and the Senator from Idaho go far enough. They remove the restriction placed on the Farm Loan Board as to lending money on these lands, but they do not give any security to the Farm Loan Board. The farm loan act reads as follows:

SEC. 12. * * * First. Said loans shall be secured by duly recorded first mortgages on farm land within the land bank district in which the bank is situated.

It is well known that under the act of 1902, the reclamation act, the Government has a prior lien on these same lands for construction costs and maintenance, and therefore the Farm Loan Board would have to take a second mortgage if money was loaned on that land.

The amendment of the Senator from Idaho and the amendment of the Senator from Arizona expressly make an exception of that character of lien. That is well and good. But the farm loan banks will not, in my opinion, lend money on those lands, even with the restriction removed.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator from Nevada if he is speaking to an amendment of his own, or the Borah amendment?

Mr. PITTMAN. An amendment I am about to offer.

Mr. McNARY. Would it not be better to have it read, so that we can understand it in connection with the other proposals?

Mr. PITTMAN. The only reason I do not have it read is that I do not desire to have it read in the few minutes I have. It can be read later.

Mr. McNARY. I ask that the amendment be read by the Secretary.

Mr. PITTMAN. I trust the Senator will not ask that it be read in my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from Nevada that if the amendment is read, it will not be read in anyone's time.

Mr. PITTMAN. I will try to explain it first. The amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] and the amendment offered by the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] relieve the farm loan banks from the restriction of a first mortgage, as far as these lands are concerned, and that is all well and good; but the lands are subject to forfeiture. Under the act of 1902, if the entryman does not pay his monthly rate, or if he does not pay the construction charges, or the maintenance charges, the Government has a right to cancel the entry. No bank is going to lend money on a title of that character.

I add to the amendment of the Senator from Idaho and the amendment of the Senator from Arizona provisions subrogating the Federal land banks to the rights of the entryman in the event of the cancellation or forfeiture of his rights. In other words, I am giving to the Federal land banks the same right that is granted in most States to a creditor in the event of a foreclosure—to step in and pay to the mortgagee the money owed on the first mortgage and take the security primarily for the second mortgage. That is the object of it.

Mr. BORAH. Could not the bank do that without an amendment providing for it?

Mr. PITTMAN. In some cases it could.

Mr. BORAH. I have no objection to the Senator's amendment at all, but I thought that the object could be accomplished without that provision. Perhaps not.

Mr. PITTMAN. I will say to the Senator that under certain State statutes that may be true. This land might not be subject to State statute. It is Government land. The Government can sell the land under any condition it wants to impose. It reserves the right of cancellation without redemption if it sees fit. I attempt to amend the act so that the right of redemption does exist not only in the entryman, but in the second mortgagee, which is the Federal farm loan bank.

Mr. KELLOGG and Mr. SMOOT addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. KELLOGG. I ask the Senator if this subject, which seems to be somewhat complicated, has been considered by any committee and reported to the Senate at any time?

Mr. PITTMAN. No; but I have absolute confidence in the Senate, and particularly in the Senator from Minnesota, and that is the reason why I am presenting the matter in the best way I can in the limited time I have.

Mr. KELLOGG. It is offered on the floor as an amendment, and no one has had an opportunity to study it or to examine it.

Mr. BORAH. It has been before the Senate for two days.

Mr. KELLOGG. I did not even hear of it until to-day.

Mr. BORAH. That was not our fault; it was the Senator's fault.

Mr. KELLOGG. The amendment has just been offered, and it has not even been read.

Mr. BORAH. The amendment was offered here two days ago and read, and there is no reason why the Senator from Minnesota, with his regularity of attendance and his acumen, should not have known of it and understood it.

Mr. KELLOGG. The amendment of the Senator from Nevada, which is being offered now, has not even been read to the Senate, I understand.

Mr. PITTMAN. I assure the Senator from Minnesota that I will see that he has ample opportunity to read it, and I assure him of another thing, that it is not capiously offered, nor offered as a surprise to the Senate. It is an old subject of discussion, and has been before the Senate for years. It has been brought up numerous times. It is intended to cure an inadvertence in the drawing of the original farm loan act. It was never intended to prevent farmers within reclamation projects from having the benefit of that act. As I said before, those farmers constitute the most prosperous and most active farmers in the West. I am only trying, by an amendment, possibly to add to the encouragement of the farm loan banks to lend the money. The amendments already offered by these other Senators allow the banks to lend the money, but I want to go further, and, if I can think of anything which will encourage them to lend the money, to put it into this amendment. If I have not gone far enough, or if I have not covered the subject, I welcome amendments by Senators which will cover the subject.

I know that no bank, whether it be a Government or private institution, is going to lend money on land, even if it has a right to lend it, unless it is secured in the title.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. PITTMAN. I ask that the amendment may be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada offers an amendment which the Secretary will now read.

The READING CLERK. At the end of the amendment, proposed by Mr. McNARY, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, as a substitute, it is proposed to add the following new sections:

SEC. —. That the first paragraph of section 12 of an act entitled "An act to provide capital for agricultural development, to create a standard form of investment based upon farm mortgages, to equalize rates of interest upon farm loans, to furnish a market for United States bonds, to create Government depositaries and financial agents for the United States, and for other purposes," approved July 17, 1916, known as the Federal farm loan act, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"First. Said loans shall be secured by duly recorded first mortgages on farm land within the land bank district in which the bank is situated, except that loans may be made and secured by duly recorded mortgages on farm land within reclamation projects established and existing under the provisions of the act approved June 17, 1902 (32d Stat., p. 388), known as the reclamation act, and acts amendatory and supplementary thereto, subject to prior liens upon said lands and the water rights appurtenant thereto expressly reserved to the United States in said act."

SEC. —. That, in the event that a loan is so made to an entryman upon said land and the United States shall thereafter determine that said entryman of said land under said reclamation act has forfeited all rights under said act and that the entry is subject to cancellation, then the Secretary of the Interior shall so notify said Federal land bank making such loan to said entryman. Said Federal land bank shall have the right, within 90 days from and after a cancellation of said entry, notice of which cancellation shall be given to it at the time, to redeem the land and the water rights appurtenant thereto by payment of all moneys due the United States by such entryman or on account of said entry. The said entryman, within 90 days from and after said redemption by said Federal land bank, shall have the right to redeem said land from said Federal land bank by payment of all moneys due said Federal land bank together with the sum of money paid by said Federal land bank to the United States in the redemption of said land and water rights. If the said entryman shall fail to so redeem said land within the period designated, then his right of redemption shall forever cease, and the said Federal land bank shall be treated as an entryman of said land with a right to perfect title thereto and dispose of the same, subject, however, to the payment of any charges upon said land or water rights subsequently accruing to the United States and the lien upon said land therefor under said reclamation act.

SEC. —. In the event of the sale of said land under foreclosure procedure or otherwise by the United States said Federal land bank may become a purchaser of said land and water rights at such sale and may bid therefor a sum of money equal to the total amount due to the United States by said entryman under said reclamation act and costs of procedure plus the amount due said Federal land bank. If the land at said sale is bid in by said Federal land bank, then it shall pay to the United States that portion of the purchase price due the United States by said entryman under said reclamation act, and shall credit said entryman with the balance of said purchase price upon the said loan and mortgage. If another than said Federal land bank shall become a purchaser at said sale, then the United States, after satisfying its charges, claims, and demands against said entryman, shall pay said Federal land bank the amount due it by said entryman and said bank shall give the said entryman credit upon his said loan from said Federal land bank, and the balance, if any, shall be paid to said entryman.

SEC. —. In the event that said Federal land bank shall foreclose its mortgage upon the land of said entryman, said bank, or the United States Government, or any person qualified to be an entryman, may become a purchaser at said sale. If the said Federal land bank shall become the purchaser at such sale, then it shall be subrogated to all the rights of said entryman upon paying to the United States the amount then due by said entryman on account of any charges, claims, or demands of the United States under said reclamation act. If the United States becomes a purchaser at such sale then, after discharging all the obligations due to it by said entryman, it shall out of the balance pay said Federal land bank the amount due it by said entryman, and the balance, if there be any, shall be paid to said entryman. In the event of a purchase by another party other than the United States or the Federal land bank, then such purchaser shall be subrogated to all the rights of said entryman in and to said land and the water rights appurtenant thereto upon paying any accrued charges due the United States and qualifying as an entryman. From the purchase price there shall first be paid to the United States all charges, claims, and demands due the United States at the date of said sale by said entryman. The balance remaining of said purchase price shall then be applied in discharge of the said loan by said Federal land bank to said entryman and any balance remaining shall be paid to said entryman.

SEC. —. All rights of redemption and subrogation under the respective State statutes are expressly reserved to the entryman, the United States, said Federal land bank, and other parties entitled to redeem under such statutes.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, as this is a long and an important amendment and a number of Senators have expressed a desire to talk upon it either to-night or in the morning, I wish to ask the acting chairman of the committee [Mr. McNARY] if he would be willing that we take a recess now until to-morrow? We have been in session since 11 o'clock this morning.

Mr. McNARY. I think that is a very proper suggestion.

RECESS.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 3 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Thursday, August 4, 1921, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, August 3, 1921.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon, and was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore, Mr. TOWNER.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Heavenly Father, in Thy holy presence, without reservation of heart and with willing lips, we make humble confession of our sins. The remembrance of our delinquencies is grievous unto us. But may they all be lost in the depths of Thy infinite grace. Grant, O Lord, that where the heart is burdened, lift the weight; where the outlook is obscured, let in the gentle light; and where there is great joy, lead them to the knowledge that the pleasures at the right hand of God are the pleasures forevermore. And enable us all to fall in love with goodness. In the name of Jesus of Nazareth. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks on the so-called "Sweet bill."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks on the Sweet bill. Is there objection?

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman expect to revise the remarks he put in a newspaper yesterday morning, which outrageously attacks the authors of the Sweet bill?

Mr. FISH. If those remarks affect the gentleman, he can put the shoe on.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks on H. R. 6611, known as the Sweet bill, creating a veterans' bureau. I have no desire to enter into the controversy regarding the article which appeared in the paper, I will say to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN], who objected to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. RAYBURN. General leave was objected to yesterday afternoon on this matter.

Mr. LINEBERGER. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his objection.

Mr. RAYBURN. If I withdraw my objection to the gentleman from California, I would withdraw it to everybody.

Mr. LINEBERGER. I understood the objection on the part of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN] to the gentleman from New York's [Mr. FISH] request was predicated on the fact that the gentleman from New York expected to include in his remarks a certain interview which had been given out in the Washington Herald on August 2, 1921, and to which the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN] objects.

Mr. RAYBURN. Unanimous consent was granted to everybody in the House when the bill was passed, and they had five legislative days in which to extend.

Mr. LINEBERGER. I hope the gentleman will reserve the objection. It is not fair to the disabled ex-service men of the country, after killing the Senate amendment to increase the nurse hire of the helpless disabled from $20 to $50 per month. I should have liked the opportunity to raise my voice in humble protest. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SWEET] moved the previous question yesterday to close debate and precluded all discussion at that time. I think the objection of the gentleman from Texas is manifestly unfair, and only demonstrates to the House the limits to which some will go to prevent a free and fair expression of views adverse to their own. I protest against any such tactics.

Mr. RAYBURN. I object to trying to divide this House into classes.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY CALENDAR.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This is Calendar Wednesday, and the Clerk will call the roll of committees.

DISTRIBUTION OF CAPTURED WAR DEVICES AND TROPHIES.

Mr. KAHN (when the Committee on Military Affairs was called). Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the bill S. 674, to provide for the equitable distribution of captured war devices and trophies to the States and Territories of the United States and to the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 674) to provide for the equitable distribution of captured war devices and trophies to the States and Territories of the United States and to the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This bill is on the Union Calendar, and the House will automatically resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill S. 674.

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. WALSH in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill S. 674, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 674) to provide for the equitable distribution of captured war devices and trophies to the States and Territories of the United States and to the District of Columbia.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

Mr. DYER and Mr. RANKIN objected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to apportion and distribute pro rata among the several States and Territories of the United States and the District of Columbia in corresponding ratio as the total number of men serving in the armed forces of the United States, as hereinafter provided, from each State or Territory and the District of Columbia bears to the total number of men so serving from all States and Territories and the District of Columbia, all cannon, gun carriages, machine guns, minenwerfers, mortars, bomb throwers, flame throwers, gas projectors, and other war devices and trophies captured by the armed forces of the United States from the armed forces of Germany and allied nations, with the exception of such cannon, gun carriages, machine guns, minenwerfers, mortars, bomb throwers, flame throwers, gas projectors, and other war devices and trophies as may be required for experimental purposes, or for actual use by the armed forces of the United States; and the further exception of such of the devices aforementioned as may be required for display in museums of a national character or for monumental purposes in Arlington National Cemetery and in other national cemeteries, national parks, and national monuments wherever situated.

SEC. 2. That the apportionment and distribution provided for in this act shall be undertaken and completed as soon as practicable after the return of the aforementioned war devices and trophies to the United States; and that for the purposes of this act the Secretary of the United States Navy, or such person as he may direct, and The Adjutant General of the United States Army, shall separately or jointly compile or cause to be compiled a report or reports, showing the number of men in the armed forces of the United States accredited to each State or Territory of the United States and to the District of Columbia, either by enlistment or by the process of the selective service act, or otherwise drawn into and becoming an integral part of the armed forces of the United States during the period hereinafter specified, and that such report or reports shall be laid before the Secretary of War as soon as practicable after the passage of this act, and in no event later than six months from date hereof, and shall serve as the basis for the pro rata apportionment and distribution among the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia, as hereinbefore provided.

SEC. 3. That in the case of the States and Territories the apportionment and distribution, as provided for in this act, shall be made through the governor or chief executive of each of the several States and Territories and in the District of Columbia through the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

SEC. 4. That for the purposes of this act the term "in the armed forces of the United States," wherever used in this act, shall be construed to include all men enlisted, drafted, or otherwise drawn into and becoming an integral part of the United States Army, the United States Navy, the United States Marine Corps, the United States Coast Guard, and all other armed forces of the United States whatsoever; and that the period of service in the armed forces of the United States, as hereinbefore provided, shall be construed to begin with the effective date of the declaration of a state of war between the United States and Germany on April 6, 1917, and to end on the effective date of the armistice between the United States and Germany, at 11 o'clock on November 11, 1918; and that the report or reports of men accredited to each of the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia shall be confined to the period between those two dates, inclusive.

SEC. 5. That all transportation charges on war devices and trophies, as indicated from point of shipment to point of central delivery within the congressional districts of the several States, the Territories, and the District of Columbia, shall be borne by the United States Government, but not the expenses or costs incident to erection in local communities.

SEC. 6. That on and after the passage of this act no award or distribution of war devices or trophies captured during the period specified shall be made except as herein provided, and all legislation conflicting herewith is hereby repealed.

SEC. 7. That to carry out the provisions of this act there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $400,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Also the following committee amendments were read:

Page 2, line 2, after the word "by" insert "or surrender to." Page 2, line 11, after the word "character" insert "at national homes for disabled volunteer soldiers."

Page 2, line 16, strike out all of sections 2 and 3, down to and including line 16 on page 3, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 2. That the apportionment and distribution provided for in this act shall be undertaken and completed as soon as practicable after the passage of this act. Said apportionment and distribution in each congressional district, or Territory, and to the District of Columbia shall be made as near as possible upon the basis of the number of men in the armed forces of the United States accredited to each State or Territory of the United States and to the District of Columbia, either by enlistment or by the process of the selective service act, or otherwise drawn into and becoming an integral part of the armed forces of the United States during the period herein specified. For the purposes of this act the Secretary of the United States Navy, or such person as he may direct, and The Adjutant General of the United States Army shall separately or jointly compile or cause to be compiled a report or reports, showing the number of men in the armed forces of the United States accredited to each State or Territory of the United States and to the District of Columbia, either by enlistment or by the process of the selective service act, or otherwise drawn into and becoming an integral part of the armed forces of the United States during the period hereinafter specified, and that such report or reports shall be laid before the Secretary of War as soon as practicable after the passage of this act, and in no event later than six months from date hereof, and shall serve as the basis for the pro rata apportionment and distribution among the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia, as hereinbefore provided.

"SEC. 3. That in the case of the several States the apportionment and distribution as provided for in this act shall be made through the Senators and Representatives comprising the State delegations in Congress from each State; in the case of the several Territories through the Delegate to Congress from each Territory; and in the District of Columbia through the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia: Provided, That any Senator, Representative, or Delegate may authorize the Governor of the State, or the district therein, or the Territory which he represents to make such distribution in lieu of said Senator, Representative, or Delegate.

"The Secretary of War is hereby authorized and empowered to make all rules and regulations to carry this act into effect."

Page 6, line 3, strike out the word "final" and insert in lieu thereof the word "central," and in the same line, after the word "the," insert "congressional districts of the."

Line 4, after the word "States," insert the word "the," and after the word "Territories" strike out "and counties thereof."

Page 6, line 16, after the word "necessary," strike out the words "to be administered by the Secretary of the Treasury."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] is recognized for one hour.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, this legislation is asked for by the War Department. Before we adjourned in the last Congress a similar bill, or a bill of similar import, was passed by the House of Representatives. It differed somewhat from the Senate bill. A great many of the Members of the House felt at that time, as they feel to-day, that this distribution should be made by the Senators and the Members of Congress. There are some, however, who feel that the governors of the States should take all this material and make the distribution in their respective States that they think best.

There is a considerable quantity of this material. There are nearly 2,000 large field pieces, cannon, minenwerfers, and so on. There are, as I recall, 40,000 rapid-fire machine guns. There are 100,000 German rifles to be distributed, and there are innumerable quantities of small things, like those contained in the case in front of the Speaker's rostrum, which are trophies of war. These materials are occupying a great deal of Government space, space that can be occupied to better advantage by the Government, and probably occupied in such a way that a good deal of rent can be saved to the Government by cleaning out material of this kind and filling the warehouses with goods stored in rented quarters.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman state to the committee about what expense there will be for the distribution of these guns and material, and so forth?

Mr. KAHN. The War Department notified the committee that it will not be over $400,000 and probably will be $396,000.

Mr. DYER. Heretofore when war trophies were distributed they were distributed at the cost of the municipalities or States that sought them. Is not that a fact?

Mr. KAHN. As I understand it, heretofore there has been no general distribution of war trophies, but any community that desired trophies would make a request, and if a bill were passed authorizing the gift or the loan of these trophies the communities did pay the freight.

Mr. DYER. In this case will the gentleman state whether or not, in his judgment, an equal amount of money will be saved to the Government in space that these trophies now occupy as the amount of the proposed transportation cost?

Mr. KAHN. I imagine that the rents that are being paid now for storage will be materially cut down, the pay for watchmen to protect this material will be cut down, and I believe that in a short while that same amount of money will be saved. We are now paying out large sums for storage.

Mr. QUIN and Mr. LAYTON rose.

The CHAIRMAN. To whom does the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. I will yield first to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. QUIN], a member of the committee.

Mr. QUIN. As I understand, this expense is to transport the material to some central point in a State, and from that central point the expense must be paid by the State or county?

Mr. MANN. A central point in the congressional district, not in the State.

Mr. KAHN. Yes. The central point is in the congressional district.

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. KAHN. I will yield first to the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. LAYTON].

Mr. LAYTON. Will the chairman of the committee please explain just what is meant on page 5 in the proviso—

Provided, That any Senator, Representative, or Delegate may authorize the governor of the State, or the district therein, or the Territory which he represents, to make such distribution in lieu of said Senator, Representative, or Delegate.

Mr. KAHN. Yes; I will tell the gentleman what is meant.

There are a number of Members of the House who themselves do not want to take the responsibility of making the distribution, and the War Department intended originally that the distribution should be made by the governors. This is a compromise proposition, so that those who themselves want to distribute the trophies can do so and those who do not want to distribute them can allow the governors to do it for them.

Mr. LAYTON. The gentleman has not answered my question. I will suggest a concrete example. The State of Delaware is one State and one congressional district. It has two Senators and one Representative. Now, who is who, and how will the trophies be distributed there?

Mr. KAHN. Under the bill the congressional delegation, which consists of two Senators and one Member, can get together and make the distribution if the congressional delegation desires to do so, but if any member of the delegation does not want to assume the responsibility he can turn his proportion over to the governor and let the governor make the distribution.

Mr. LAYTON. You do not say so.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman permit a question there?

Mr. KAHN. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman said "any member." The language is "may authorize the governor of the State, or the district therein, or the territory." There is no governor of my district, and there is no authority in my district to which I could turn it over.

Mr. KAHN. On what page is that?

Mr. MANN. On page 5. I think there must be some omission in the language of the bill. It is on line 20; "may authorize the governor of the State, or the district therein, or the territory which he represents."

Mr. KAHN. The words "or the district therein" should be stricken out.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to answer the gentleman from Delaware by saying that that clause in the bill means that if a Member or Senator gets weak-kneed and does not want to assume the responsibility, he can "pass the buck" over to the governor.

Mr. KAHN. The words "or the district therein" ought to be stricken out.

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Chairman, after all, I think if you look at the language you will admit that the language is very ambiguous. It says that any Senator or Representative or Delegate may do this, and if you take the literal language it means that any Representative can hamper or hog tie the other two if he does not.

Mr. KAHN. I do not think so.

Mr. LAYTON. Then put it in the way that would prevent it.

Mr. KAHN. It says "any Representative or any Senator."

Mr. SWEET. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. SWEET. Section 3 says "that in the case of the several States, the apportionment and distribution as provided for in this act shall be made through Senators and Representatives comprising the State delegations in Congress from each State." Now, the Representatives have districts. The Senators have the States. What portion do the Senators control, and what portion do the Representatives control?

Mr. KAHN. Well, those were matters that each delegation was expected to work out in a manner satisfactory to the members of the delegation. I am sure that the Senators of my State, meeting with the Members of the House from my State, will be able to arrange for a proper distribution for each Senator and for each Member.

Mr. SWEET. Then, as far as this bill is concerned, the question of distribution is dependent upon the Senators and Representatives disposing of the amounts to which they are entitled.

Mr. KAHN. That is very true; and that is what most of the Members of this House desire, as I am informed.

Mr. MANN. This is the only case where a Member of the House is on an equal footing with a Senator.

Mr. KAHN. And that is a very good thing.

Mr. MANN. Except that where there is only one Member from a State perhaps it is hard on him. [Laughter.]

Mr. MILLER. Is it not also the idea that the congressional delegation can take care of the distribution if there is a vacancy in any district?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CANNON. The delegation acts by a majority. Suppose there is some man who does not agree. Could he be overruled by the Senators and the other Representatives and thrown out in the cold?

Mr. KAHN. I imagine that there will be enough good feeling in this matter to allow an amicable distribution. My friend from Illinois knows and his long experience here has shown him that in the distribution of a great quantity of material of this kind there must be mutuality. Otherwise you will be all at sea.

Mr. CANNON. If my friend will allow me, replying to that proposition, the Senate is a small body.

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. And the House is a large body.

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. The Senate being a small body, the Senators can agree amongst themselves. I am not speaking disrespectfully of the Senators or any one of them—but how far are you getting now on patronage? [Laughter.]

Mr. KAHN. I will say frankly to the gentleman from Illinois that I do not know what the condition may be in the gentleman's State regarding patronage. [Laughter.] In California the Representatives do not have any patronage in the distribution of Federal offices. The Senators have it all, and as I understand it, that is the condition pretty generally throughout the country, so that we are all in the same boat. We do not have much to do with Federal patronage, so we shall be worse off when we pass this bill than we are to-day.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman from California yield?

Mr. KAHN. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. If the matter is left to the War Department, for instance, where senatorial courtesy and influence have far greater weight, owing to the methods of appointment and confirmation, than the influence of Members of the House, is it likely that the House would have as much to say about it as it will where each Member has an equal vote with a Senator?

Mr. KAHN. Why, certainly not; because the War Department depends upon the Senators a great deal more than upon the Members of the House.

Mr. MANN. Under this bill, as I understand it, each Member of the House and each Senator will have an equal vote?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. MANN. In my own State—I will not use invidious language—I have been here a long time, and I never had any Federal patronage.

Mr. KAHN. Neither did I.

Mr. MANN. And never expect any.

Mr. KAHN. Neither do I.

Mr. MANN. Because the Senators always grab it when we are in power, and the other side always grab it when we are not. [Laughter.]

Mr. KAHN. Exactly.

Mr. MANN. Under this bill the 25 Members of the House from Illinois will have twenty-five twenty-sevenths of the influence, including the two Senators in the total number.

Mr. KAHN. Exactly so.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. KINCHELOE. If I understand this bill, after this apportionment is made to the various States as set out in section 1, then, under the provisions of this bill, it is up to each State delegation, the Members of the House and the Senators, to get together and agree on the distribution?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Supposing the Senators and the Members of the House from any delegation can not agree on the distribution. Suppose the Members of the House wanted more than the Senators thought they were entitled to, or vice versa, and they could not agree at all. Who would be the arbiter in that case?

Mr. KAHN. I presume there would be no distribution in that State until they did agree; or they might allow the governor to make the distribution.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I understand the main difference between the Senate conferees and the House conferees on this bill heretofore has been that the Senators wanted the governors to make the distribution.

Mr. KAHN. Exactly so.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I am glad to see that the House conferees, including the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN], wanted the Members of the House to have something to say about it.

Mr. KAHN. Quite right.

Mr. KINCHELOE. All right. I do not want the governor of my State distributing anything in my district that I am entitled to. [Applause.]

Mr. KAHN. I will say further to the gentleman that in some of the States the Members of Congress are not altogether in accord with the governor, and the governor would make a distribution entirely unsatisfactory to the Members of the House.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I will say to the gentleman that that might happen in Kentucky.

Mr. LAYTON. Will the gentleman answer just one question?

Mr. KAHN. I will try to.

Mr. LAYTON. Under the language used in this bill could not the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] authorize the governor of the State of California to distribute all of the quota belonging to California?

Mr. KAHN. No.

Mr. LAYTON. It says so.

Mr. KAHN. No; it does not.

Mr. LAYTON. I will read the language to the gentleman. It says:

Provided, That any Senator or Representative—

Mr. KAHN. I have said already that the words "or the district therein" should be stricken out, and at the proper time I will offer an amendment to that effect.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Let me ask the gentleman regarding the situation in States where there are Congressmen at large. The gentleman understands that they have no districts?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Where will they distribute the trophies awarded to them?

Mr. KAHN. Where they want them in any particular State. Each Member has a right to distribute the trophies as he thinks best. Members at large will have the right to distribute them as they think best.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. For a question.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] spoke of the fact that the Senate would not permit the House to have anything to do with patronage. That is not very serious, but is not the most serious thing the fact that the Senate will not let the House have very much to do with legislation?

Mr. KAHN. That is the fault of the House.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. I will yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I want to ask the question, and it is a question put seriously. It seems evident from the action taken by the Senate that Senators are disinclined to participate in the distribution. Does not the gentleman think that probably the Senators would be quite willing to concede the distribution altogether to the Members of the House?

Mr. KAHN. I will say, frankly, to the gentleman that I had a talk with the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate, trying to get an agreement whereby this material could be distributed. Much of the material is contained in the warehouses up in Newark Bay, and a great deal of it is stored in the open, subject to the weather conditions. The War Department tells the committee that unless it is speedily removed most of it will be spoiled. Therefore, it is very desirable that we come to some immediate conclusion. But in speaking with the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate, he thought that probably an agreement contained in the House amendment could be accepted.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. The gentleman gathered from him that the Senate would not be willing to forego a distribution itself?

Mr. KAHN. I think so.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. It strikes me that from the position taken by the Senate it might be desirable to amend the bill so as to provide for a distribution by Members of the House.

Mr. KAHN. If the House adopts this amendment it goes to conference. If the Senate wants to accept the suggestion of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MOORE] it can authorize its conferees to agree to a change of the amendment so that only Members of the House will make the allotment. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California has used 24 minutes, but 4 minutes was used by the committee being in confusion. So that the gentleman has 40 minutes remaining.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McKENZIE].

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, I have the greatest admiration for our distinguished chairman, and I think in reporting this bill he represents the wishes of the majority of this House. However, this bill does not meet with my approval. I do not expect to make any fight on it. I am what you might call neutral; if the House wishes to pass it, well and good; but I fear that we are entering upon a field that is not within our province. These cannon and trophies now belong to the War Department; they are within the jurisdiction of the War Department; they can not dispose of them without legislation. It is the function of this House to legislate in order to enable the War Department to make some disposition of these trophies, but when we have done that, in my judgment we have done all that we have any real jurisdiction over.

I can not understand why we feel that it is necessary for us to assume the administration attitude, claiming the right to distribute trophies among our people. I feel that it would be infinitely better after we have proceeded with the legislation to turn the trophies over to our States to let the administrative officers of our States proceed with the distribution. I quarrel not with the man who feels otherwise about it, but I want to say to some of my good friends in this House that I fear and I have had the fear all along, and that was one of the reasons why I have not urged the reporting of the bill, that you will find that these harmless looking trophies are loaded with dynamite before you get through with them. I can understand how the gentleman from California who lives in the great city of San Francisco can distribute his cannon and his knives and spoons and other little trophies without any difficulty. But a man with 15 counties in his district, with six cannons to distribute, and every little city and hamlet wanting one of these big guns, I am afraid that when he gets through with the job we will have some one else here in his place representing them. [Laughter and applause.] There is no analogy between this and the seed distribution. I voted against the distribution of any seeds, but the department down here very wisely allots to each one of us so many garden seeds and so many flower seeds, and each one has an exact quota and sends them out, and it does not cause very much trouble. But in this matter you will find it otherwise, because there are not enough trophies to go around. I believe we are taking upon ourselves something that was never intended by the Constitution of our country, and something that will make us all kinds of trouble before we get through with it.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. After we have made this calculation and these trophies have been distributed to our respective districts would it not be a very gracious thing on the part of the Members of Congress to call to their assistance the ex-service men in their districts and have them help them distribute the trophies where they think they ought to be distributed, thus leaving to a large extent the distribution of these war trophies at last with the men who won them? The gentleman in that way might relieve himself of this responsibility.

Mr. McKENZIE. Oh, let me say to the gentleman from Texas that I think too much of our ex-service men to lead them into any such dilemma as that. They have done their share, and did it well.

Mr. SINNOTT. Does the gentleman fear it would be a case of—

Cannon to right of them,
Cannon to left of them,
Cannon in front of them
Volley'd and thunder'd;
Storm'd at with shot and shell.

Mr. McKENZIE. It would be more like cannon under them.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, for many years it has been the practice of Congress to pass special bills allotting cannon and other war trophies to different localities in the United States. It has never been thought desirable to leave the whole question of distribution of such trophies to the Secretary of War. There are some cannon in my district, placed there by virtue of a bill passed by Congress. There have been since the war with Germany 1,000 or 2,000 or more bills introduced into this House with respect to the distribution of war trophies.

Mr. KAHN. I would say 4,000.

Mr. MANN. Four thousand—I have not read all of them. [Laughter.] Some of them are mine. It being apparently the consensus of opinion everywhere that the distribution of these war trophies ought not to be left wholly to the Secretary of War, the Senate provided in this bill that the distribution shall be made by the delegations in Congress from the various States. My friend and colleague from Illinois [Mr. McKENZIE] fears that that will bring great disaster to the Members of the House. I come from a city district and there are as many localities in my district as there are counties in the gentleman's district, but I expect if this bill passes to be able to provide most of those localities with some kind of a trophy.

While I am not hankering for the job, I think on the whole I would rather have the power with the State delegation from Illinois to make the distribution than be compelled to hang onto the coat tails of the governor of Illinois begging him to do it for me. [Applause.] The people know that these are national trophies. They expect Members of Congress to provide for their distribution, and if you leave the matter to the governor your communities will ask you then to go to the governor. Why should we turn the power over to the governor and beg him to let us have our way about it? The question before us, if we are going to distribute these trophies—and perhaps they ought to be distributed—is whether we shall leave the matter with the governors of the States or with the State delegations in Congress. The only suggestion which I have heard here against leaving the matter to the State delegations is that we may be afraid to do the work. While there are lots of bills that I do not like to vote on, and I have seen lots of legislation that I would like to dodge, yet it is my belief that when a man assumes office he assumes with it the responsibility of that office, and he ought never to be afraid to exercise that responsibility which properly belongs to him. [Applause.]

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. QUIN rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Mississippi rise?

Mr. QUIN. To discuss this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. QUIN. No; I am in favor of the bill, but I am a member of the Committee on Military Affairs.

The CHAIRMAN. Is any gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized for one hour.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the bill. The bill proposes to distribute to the various States captured war trophies. I intend to offer an amendment that the Secretary of War be directed and authorized to sink in the deepest part of the Atlantic Ocean all guns, gun carriages, machine guns, and so forth. I think that would be the proper culmination of a war carried on by a great Republic.

History is replete with the glorification of war, of war heroes, of the soldier. We have no complete record of the progress of humanity, because even profound historians have neglected the course of philosophical thought, the trend of religious struggles, the action and reaction of social and economic forces, the progress of science, and have dwelt too much on warfare. Entire centuries of human history are a blank to us because of the emphasis laid upon military transactions. I would like to have the world begin to forget this war. In this, the greatest Nation of all nations, this most wonderful experiment in the history of the human race, this great melting pot of all ages, I would like to see every vestige, every trace, of hatred eliminated, forgotten, removed from the mind of men. Every cannon that we expose to the gaze of children, every military trophy, is an encouragement of war and a glorification of its deeds.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONDON. Yes.

Mr. KAHN. Does the gentleman think that we ought to pull down the statues in the city of Washington which show the officers of this country who did great service for the country in war because the sight of them might tempt some children to go into war?

Mr. LONDON. I would retain in this bill that portion of it which permits the distribution of these various articles to museums. I hope the day will soon come when not only the weapons of war but the men who advocate war will be looked upon as curiosities. The museum is a proper place for them.

It is because of this opposition to the fostering of the spirit of war that I would like to see this bill defeated. I do not know whether you will agree with me—

Mr. WARD of North Carolina. I doubt it.

Mr. LONDON. I doubt it, but I thought it would be a proper thing for me to give expression to my viewpoint. I want the United States to lead in the process of pacification. I want this country to lead along the broader and newer path, the path of humanity. Let us send these reminders of hatred to the bottom of the sea.

Mr. WARD of North Carolina. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LONDON. I will.

Mr. WARD of North Carolina. What does the gentleman think of the educational side of the question, the books on whose pages its record is written?

Mr. LONDON. I said our histories are mutilated. They speak of war as if war is the principal business of the human race, and the very reason for the existence of mankind. The military man occupies the front page in all our history. The real basis of human progress is overlooked.

Mr. WARD of North Carolina. I submit the gentleman is now at a point where he can answer my question.

Mr. LONDON. What was the gentleman's question?

Mr. WARD of North Carolina. What would he do with the books on whose pages it is written?

Mr. LONDON. History should explain the causes of war, instead of deifying its participants. I would pay as much credit to the heroes and brave men of all other nations as I would to our own. Most people are brave and particularly so when they are put in a position where they have to fight for their existence.

Mr. WARD of North Carolina. But the gentleman does not answer my question.

Mr. LONDON. The gentleman says I do not answer. Then I do not get the gentleman's meaning and it is my fault. Will the gentleman kindly repeat it?

Mr. WARD of North Carolina. The records of war are written on the pages of history—

Mr. LONDON. Does the gentleman mean of this war or of all wars?

Mr. WARD of North Carolina. What would the gentleman do with those histories? Would he burn them up?

Mr. LONDON. I recall that Lord Byron defined history as "that great liar." If the gentleman will try to get the truth of a contemporaneous event, say, for instance, the cause of a strike, he will find that a Wall Street paper, a paper published by the A. F. L., and a paper published by the I. W. W. will give three entirely different versions of the strike, of its causes, of the policy of its leaders, and the object of the strike. He will find it extremely hard to get at the real fact. It is particularly true when you deal with international affairs and with the past. It is not considered wrong to kill your enemy for your country, and it is certainly not considered wrong to lie for your country, and most historians take all sorts of liberties with historical facts. I said some time ago that I would like to see an international scientific commission appointed to review history and to systematize our knowledge of the past and present. A knowledge of the real causes of war would make war impossible.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONDON. I will.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. In the case of States which seceded from the Union, would the gentleman be in favor of letting them go?

Mr. LONDON. That question was answered by the Civil War.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I know; but what is the gentleman's plan to-day?

Mr. LONDON. The socialist movement of the world indorsed the North in its attitude in the Civil War and sent messages of congratulation to Lincoln. This is a fact not generally known, and I refer the gentleman from Michigan to a little book called "Lincoln, Labor, and Slavery," in which the author recites the correspondence between Abraham Lincoln and the International Workingmen's Association, the first socialist international. The socialists supported the North because they looked upon the secession of the South as an attempt to continue slavery and to break up a great Republic, which the socialists believed held out a great promise for humanity.

Now, gentlemen, I do not intend to use my hour, and I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be recognized for five minutes in opposition.

Mr. LONDON. I will yield the gentleman five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. All the time is in the control of the gentleman from California and the gentleman from New York.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to my colleague on the committee [Mr. QUIN]. [Applause.]

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, the gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON], my Socialist friend, has urged no legitimate reason why all of this old junk that has been captured from the foe of the United States in the late war should not be distributed over the United States at such points as the Congressmen and Senators of each State may agree on.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. QUIN. I will.

Mr. WINGO. How many large guns are to be allotted to each congressional district?

Mr. QUIN. There will be a few; we can not tell that, but they are all set out in this report. There will be three or four big guns to each congressional district—

Mr. KAHN. If the gentleman will permit, there are 2,197 large fieldpieces that will be distributed by this bill, and of course there are 435 Members of the House and 96 Members of the Senate who have this distribution.

Mr. WINGO. Are there any other guns—

Mr. QUIN. I do not want you to take all of my time. There are guns of all sizes. There are enough to go to every town. The truth of it is this bill is endeavoring to get all of these German captured war implements out of the places where they are costing the taxpayers a great deal to take care of them now. It is true this bill appropriates $400,000 to get these trophies out of the places where they are now stored and into towns and villages where they will be appreciated. But the $400,000 should not be considered an item of expense if you are going to keep these storage charges for 40 or 50 years. So it is a matter of economy. We did not think it ought to take over $100,000, but the Secretary of War showed us it would require about $400,000, and so our committee struck out the $1,000,000 inserted by the Senate and put it like the Secretary of War had suggested, inasmuch as he expected it would take about $400,000 to get all the different implements, all the cannon, and so forth, to each separate point in each congressional district in the United States.

Now, when the trophies reach those central points it will be obligatory on the town to transport and set up what it desires. The question of how it shall be distributed is a very important one. My good friend and colleague from Illinois [Mr. McKENZIE] said it would cause a riot. Well, a Congressman must assume some trouble and responsibility when he is elected to the great office of Representative in the United States Congress. You Republicans must decide on your postmasters and rural carriers. You are bound to get some people against you when they can not get an office. You assume that responsibility. You can not give a great big gun to every town in your district, but your constituents assume that you are going to exercise discretion and common sense and good judgment and place these mementos in towns where they will do the most good to the common mass of the people. That is all there is in this bill, namely, a measure of economy to get trophies of victory that are costing the Government too much out where the people will see them.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON] thinks these captured cannon, and so forth, ought to be framed up and put in a museum where people will have to travel thousands of miles at 6 cents a mile to see these German cannon. Of course, he wants nobody to see them. If all the people of the United States had been like the gentleman from New York during the war, my idea is that you would have a military government over here, with the Kaiser dictating to the people of the United States. [Applause.] On this matter of war he had some radical, irresponsible views before the war and during the war, and he is opposing this bill now for the same reason. The people of the United States are entitled to have these captured cannon. They are entitled to get them free of expense. The people in the rural sections of the United States can have no way, unless they can go into a big town, of seeing these German howitzers that were captured on the field of battle by the brave soldiery of the United States. I think, contradictory to my friend from New York [Mr. LONDON], that it is a matter of pride and that the coming generations of the United States can point with pride to these mementos, and the education of inspiring pride in the deeds of valor and heroism of our courageous soldiers and sailors in the war against Germany and Austria, that the gentleman from New York objected to, will be inculcated in the boys and girls here now and of the generations yet unborn. And as a matter of common decency and respect to the soldiers who won this war we owe it to them to see that these trophies, these captured cannon, shall be distributed throughout the United States in a sensible and fair manner.

And that method which this bill provides, allotting them to the congressional delegation of the House and the Senate combined to say where those cannon shall go, is the best and most sensible one for this House to adopt. Some say they ought to go to the governor and allow him to say where they shall go.

Where is the Congressman here that is afraid to do his duty and wants to go and poke some responsibility on his governor's shoulders? Have you more confidence in the governor of your State than you have in yourself? I believe the people of my district who elected me thought I had manhood and courage enough to assume all the duties of this office, and I believe this feature of the bill that puts it on the congressional delegation of each State to say where they shall go is a good feature and should stay in this bill. [Applause.]

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CLARKE].

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I had no intention while serving my novitiate here to intrude for one moment where matters of state and great importance were being considered by this body, but when I heard the insinuation and misstatement of the gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON] that the great deeds of history, the great memories of great men, the inspiration to our youth, should be taken out of our histories, as well as that these mementos that were purchased at a price that seems to me incalculable and immeasurable should be sunk at sea, then, indeed, I felt it was up to me to break forth and give you my viewpoint. [Applause.] Think for a moment of what, after all, is the purchase price of what we enjoy and that you, Representative or misrepresentative from New York, enjoy along with us. George Washington and those noble heroes of Valley Forge under his leadership struggled and fought for principles that guarantee to you the rights of life, and liberty, and property. Their names and their deeds are written into our history, and God save us from the day when a single one of the names of those heroes is taken out or when the trophies of the Revolutionary War or the World War are destroyed. You preach to us of taking these trophies, captured on Flanders field and in the North and the South, and sinking them in the sea. God forbid!

Think for a moment of the message they speak to us. Think for a moment of the purchase price that they mean to us, guaranteeing to you safety of skin—and where were you, MEYER LONDON, all the while?—by guaranteeing to us the right of self-respect and the respect of our wives and children. We are now marching on, not in any slinking and cowardly way, but marching on under the Stars and Stripes and, under God, commanded by men right here in front of me, the boys who were leading the van in the Argonne and to the south of it. [Applause.]

Gentlemen, what are we thinking of if we can not have these trophies of the war? Unafraid to do our duty? Believing that our constituents will recognize the fact that all can not have some trophy, we know that on the greens of some of our villages and at the county seats some trophy can be erected that will speak to us the message of your deeds. We must be unafraid to uphold your deeds, to hold up your memories, and to venerate and revere and remember and keep floating the old Stars and Stripes under which you fought. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York yields back one minute of his time.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I have no use for socialism. For 10 years I have not permitted a Socialist to speak in my district without answering him before my people. But we men who know MEYER LONDON know that MEYER LONDON is a sincere, honest man, a man of strict integrity and high ideals, according to his beliefs, and a student; and while I hate socialism and while I fight it and while I keep it down in my district, common justice to men prompts me to say that if all Socialists were like MEYER LONDON they would not be so bad after all.

Toleration is one of the greatest things in the world. A man must have toleration; a man must be able to stay in the House of Representatives and tolerate men around us of opposite views.

Mr. HERRICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield right there for a question?

Mr. BLANTON. In a moment.

I am tolerant of the opposite views entertained by the Member from New York without being too severe on him. He has his way of thinking, and I have my way of thinking, and the rest of us have their way of thinking, and yet we may all be honorable men, serving our constituents as best we may.

Mr. HERRICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. BLANTON. In just a moment. The gentleman should get time.

I want to say that I am in favor of this bill, and I am not going to shirk my responsibility with respect to the provisions of this committee amendment. It is economy for our Government to get rid of these cannon. It is costing us every day to rent buildings and guard them. I am willing to assume the responsibility, and I am willing to assume the responsibility of distributing the number of souvenirs or trophies that might be allotted under the act to my district.

We folks in Texas would not be in a bad fix if our governor should distribute them. He would make a proper distribution. He is a governor who always can be found at the capital of his State. I do not blame the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] for saying that he does not want to be compelled to hang onto the coat tails of his governor. [Laughter.] He would have to travel hurriedly over two-thirds of the State of Illinois sometimes, and just now he could not find him down at the capital. I do not blame him; and there may be others in a similar situation. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. I would much rather hang onto the coat tails of the governor of Illinois than to follow the governor of Texas. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANTON. Well, I want to say that if the gentleman from Illinois would follow the governor of Texas he would follow the hearts of the people of Texas, because the hearts of the people of Texas are behind their governor. He stands for the things that they stand for, and I am sure the gentleman can not say all that about his own governor. [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. HERRICK. Mr. Chairman, now will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield to my friend from Oklahoma.

Mr. HERRICK. The gentleman from Texas says he kept socialism down in his district. That is an awfully big order for one man. I want to ask the gentleman if his case is not parallel to the case of the flea who sat on the axle of the chariot and said "Oh, what a dust I am raising!" [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, being a Republican, the gentleman's party makes him feel that way, but if I were a member of the Oklahoma delegation I would move to make my distinguished friend [Mr. HERRICK] the chairman of it, because he ought to be at the head of it. [Applause.]

There were over 4,000 Socialist voters in my district eight years ago. There are not a thousand of them there now. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is recognized for two minutes more.

Mr. BLANTON. And I will tell my friend how we reduced them. We do not let them go out on the hustings there and speak without being answered. Whenever they go before the people we go after them. We show the fallacy of their arguments, and when during the war, in December, 1917, some of their misguided ones were preaching against young men enlisting in the war and against the prosecution and purposes of the war, I went down in my district and used an automobile, and I made a speech in every county, 19 of them, in the winter-time, in cold and freezing weather, and I told every audience in every county that it was all right for a man to be a Socialist in peace times, but in war times, when he was a Socialist and sought to hinder the purposes of the war, the thing they should do was to use the telegraph poles in that district. And then we stopped hearing from them. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman yields back one minute.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON] use the balance of his time. I have only one more speech.

Mr. LONDON. I do not intend to use the balance of the time. I shall reserve it until the gentleman from California is through.

Mr. KAHN. I have the right to close, and I shall close with one speech.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California is entitled to close.

Mr. LONDON. I do not intend to use the time. I yield it back.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York yields back the balance of his time. The gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] is recognized.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, as I said in the beginning of my remarks, a great deal of this material is stored in the open. The War Department informs me that it is being spoiled by the weather. Therefore we should make some distribution of this material as speedily as possible.

Mr. Chairman, I ask that the bill be read for amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to apportion and distribute pro rata among the several States and Territories of the United States and the District of Columbia, in corresponding ratio as the total number of men serving in the armed forces of the United States, as hereinafter provided, from each State or Territory and the District of Columbia bears to the total number of men so serving from all States and Territories and the District of Columbia, all cannon, gun carriages, machine guns, minenwerfers, mortars, bomb throwers, flame throwers, gas projectors, and other war devices and trophies captured by the armed forces of the United States from the armed forces of Germany and allied nations, with the exception of such cannon, gun carriages, machine guns, minenwerfers, mortars, bomb throwers, flame throwers, gas projectors, and other war devices and trophies as may be required for experimental purposes or for actual use by the armed forces of the United States; and the further exception of such of the devices aforementioned as may be required for display in museums of a national character or for monumental purposes in Arlington National Cemetery and in other national cemeteries, national parks, and national monuments wheresoever situated.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 1, after the word "by," insert the words "or surrendered to."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 11, after the word "character," insert "at national homes for disabled volunteer soldiers."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking whether the gentleman from California knows if any construction has been had or considered with reference to the meaning of the words "museums of a national character"?

Mr. KAHN. The National Museum here in Washington.

Mr. MANN. That is a plain case. Does it mean the National Museum? The language is peculiar. It says "museums of a national character."

The Field Museum in Chicago is certainly one of the greatest museums in the world.

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. MANN. It is of a national character, but it is not a national museum.

Mr. KAHN. While I have not had an explanation from the officials of the War Department, I imagine that in the soldiers' homes, for instance, they have museums where old relics of the Civil War and the Spanish-American War are kept.

Mr. MANN. It plainly would apply to a national museum of any sort.

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Owned by the Nation.

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. MANN. But the language is peculiar—"museums of a national character."

I judge from the gentleman's statement that there has been no construction of that language.

Mr. KAHN. No. It was the language sent to me by the War Department.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] is recognized in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I want to make an inquiry of some one. Under the authority given in section 1 to the Secretary of War to distribute a certain amount of trophies to museums, I suppose the tables contained in the report will have to be modified in accordance with that distribution. Am I correct in that?

Mr. KAHN. Does the gentleman ask me to answer his question?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes; anyone who can answer it.

Mr. KAHN. I understand that a certain percentage of all these things has been reserved by the Government for distribution to the organizations referred to in paragraph 1. I understand that there are about 1,000 additional cannon that can be distributed to these museums, and so on, and that the distribution to the districts will not be affected.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. In other words, the tables, as given in the report of the committee—

Mr. KAHN. Those tables refer to the things that can be distributed under this law.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Distributed among the States and Territories?

Mr. KAHN. Yes. These other things are taken care of out of the reserve that the Secretary of War is holding back.

Mr. MANN. In order that it may be in the Record, I understood the gentleman from California to say that, although Porto Rico is not named in the bill, it is expected that Porto Rico will be taken care of out of the reserve?

Mr. KAHN. That is my understanding.

Mr. MANN. It would be unfortunate to omit Porto Rico in the distribution unless it is understood that Porto Rico is to be taken care of otherwise.

Mr. KAHN. Porto Rico gave a full regiment of Infantry in the World War, and it certainly should be taken care of, but my understanding is that that Territory can be and will be taken care of out of the reserve left in charge of the Secretary of War.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Then if I understand it this bill proposes to distribute simply that which the War Department are willing to release.

Mr. KAHN. Quite so, and the War Department find themselves so cramped for space in their warehouses that they are exceedingly anxious to get legislation of this kind passed so that they can dispose of this material as speedily as possible.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I was wondering why Porto Rico could not be included in the bill, now that we have it up for amendment. Why can we not amend the bill and include Porto Rico, so that she will not have to depend upon any residue that may be in the War Department?

Mr. KAHN. It can be done; but you will have to change all the language referring to the Territories and the Territorial Delegates. If the gentleman will look on page 4 of the report, at the very bottom of that report, there is an allotment to Porto Rico of articles to be distributed.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] has expired.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Does this bill include all of the trophies which are in the War Department?

Mr. KAHN. Oh, no; it includes those that are subject to distribution. I stated a moment ago that I understood the War Department is still holding back about one-third of all the articles to distribute to the various institutions named in section 1 of this bill. I presume there will be demands made for the additional trophies from time to time by legislation, and, of course, they will be distributed.

Mr. DOWELL. The purpose of the reserve is for future legislation.

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. DOWELL. Why can not they be distributed now?

Mr. KAHN. The Government has always after every war held back a certain percentage of the materials, although as I understand it in the Civil War, the Spanish-American War, and in all the wars where we acquired trophies they were distributed by special acts of Congress. There has never been a distribution of the character of this distribution, but the War Department is exceedingly anxious to get rid of that quantity of the material, and they feel that it ought to be disposed of at this time.

Mr. DOWELL. Then, I understand about one-third will still remain in the War Department.

Mr. KAHN. That is my information.

Mr. DOWELL. May I inquire if the remaining part is of the same character as that which will be distributed by this bill?

Mr. KAHN. Absolutely.

Mr. GERNERD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Certainly.

Mr. GERNERD. Who is going to pay for the transportation of all these war materials?

Mr. KAHN. It will be paid for out of the Federal Treasury to the central part of each congressional district, and from that central part to wherever it is going it will be paid by the respective recipients of the trophies.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words. I want to call the attention of the committee and especially the attention of the gentleman from California to what I think is a little defect in the first section of the bill. The first section of the bill provides at the bottom of page 1, for the distribution of all cannon, gun carriages, and so forth, surrendered to the United States, and so forth, with the following exceptions: Such cannon, gun carriages, and other war devices as may be required for experimental purposes, or for actual use by the armed forces of the United States, and the further exception for display in the National Museum or National Soldiers' Homes or for monumental purposes in Arlington National Cemetery or any other national cemeteries, parks, and national monuments. That does not leave any reserve in the War Department "except for experimental purposes and for actual use for armed forces of the United States," and so forth. That does not leave any reserve in the War Department to do with it as they please. That does not allow the War Department to send cannon to Guam, Philippine Islands, Samoa, Virgin Islands, Porto Rico, all of which are listed in the report as entitled to receive these trophies. Unless the War Department violates the law—if this is enacted into law—they can not send trophies to Samoa or Porto Rico, because we make certain exceptions and they are bound by those exceptions. I think we ought to change that and I hope that some bright mind here, and there are lots of them, has been able to think of a change while I have been speaking. There ought to be a provision giving the War Department some reserve or else make special provisions for these possessions of the United States.

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. KAHN. Of course, Porto Rico and Hawaii are Territories of the United States—

Mr. MANN. Hawaii is, but Porto Rico is not. It is not represented by a Delegate in Congress. Hawaii and Alaska are Territories, but there are no other Territories in the United States.

Mr. KAHN. In speaking with the officials of the War Department about the bill when it was first sent down in the last Congress, I was assured—

Mr. MANN. Oh, I know, but let us get some language in the bill to cover it and do not try to evade it.

Mr. KAHN. But I want to explain the situation if I am allowed. If the gentleman objects, I will do it in my own time.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman can do it in his own time, I am trying to help the gentleman and he is trying to evade it.

Mr. KAHN. I only want to make a plain statement of facts.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman wants to explain to the House why the bill is in a bad condition. Everybody in the House knows it, but what we want to do is to try to correct it.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois has been very courteous and kind, as he generally is, but sometimes he loses his temper.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from California has lost his temper.

Mr. KAHN. Oh, no; I never lose my temper. This bill was sent to me in the last Congress. I went to the War Department to take up the matter with the officials of the department. I was assured positively that every effort was being made to give to these outlying possessions a suitable number of the trophies. Of course, they could have put into the bill originally language to give to the outlying Territories and possessions of the United States some of these trophies. They could have written into the bill a provision to give to the Philippine Islands some of these trophies, but they did not deem it advisable at that time to put those sections in the bill. In working out the distribution, as will be seen by the tables cited in the report, it is stated specifically how many of these trophies will be given to each one of these outlying possessions, and I take it that the War Department in good faith will make every effort to live up to these figures which are so plainly and clearly set forth in the report.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. DOWELL. The reserve which the gentleman referred to a while ago is about one-third of these trophies?

Mr. KAHN. As I understand it.

Mr. DOWELL. In what manner can they be retained under this provision?

Mr. KAHN. I imagine that they will give a certain number of them to all of these cemeteries and they will give a lot of them to the various museums and other public institutions.

Mr. DOWELL. And that will be an immediate distribution of them, permanently?

Mr. KAHN. It may not be immediate. As new cemeteries are opened, they probably will put in them some of these trophies.

Mr. DOWELL. Does not this bill provide for the immediate distribution of them?

Mr. KAHN. With the exception of those referred to in section 1, and I dare say, taking past experience as a criterion, they will hold enough out to take care of all of these other institutions.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. I notice on page 2, line 2, that different language is used to speak of the same exception; that is, on page 2, line 2, the following language is used:

and other war devices and trophies, captured, etc.

In the second exception, on line 9, of the same page, the following language is used:

and the further exception of such of these devices aforementioned.

Is it intended by the word "devices" to include everything included before?

Mr. KAHN. Yes; and I would have no objection to inserting the words "and trophies" after the word "devices"; and, Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, on page 2, line 10, by inserting the words "and trophies" after the word "devices."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 10, after the word "devices," insert "and trophies."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LONDON: Page 1, line 4, after the word "directed," strike out everything that follows up to and including the word "Columbia," on page 1, line 11, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "to send to the bottom of the Atlantic or the Pacific Ocean."

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment that it is not germane either to the section to which it is offered or to the bill. This legislation is for the purpose of distributing certain cannon and devices of war and trophies. The title reads:

To provide for the equitable distribution of captured war devices and trophies to the States and Territories of the United States and to the District of Columbia.

The proposed amendment would provide by law for the destruction of such trophies, and it is entirely foreign to the purpose of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. LONDON. No; I shall leave it to the parliamentary knowledge of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana makes the point of order that the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York is not germane. On examining the provisions of the bill it will be found it is to authorize and direct the Secretary of War to apportion and distribute certain trophies and devices captured by or surrendered to the armed forces of the United States, and the legislation provides the method to be followed and the manner in which the distribution and the apportionment shall be made. Also, there are provisions contained in the bill relative to transportation charges and delivery. The amendment of the gentleman from New York provides for the destruction of these devices by the sinking of them in the Atlantic or the Pacific Ocean, and provides an entirely new method of disposing of them. In the view of the Chair the amendment is not at all germane to the method fixed in the bill, and the Chair therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LEHLBACH: Page 2, line 15, after the word "situated" strike out the period and insert "and in the possessions of the United States overseas."

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey.

The question was taken and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were—ayes, 47, noes, 4.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 2. That the apportionment and distribution provided for in this act shall be undertaken and completed as soon as practicable after the return of the aforementioned war devices and trophies to the United States; and that for the purposes of this act the Secretary of the United States Navy, or such person as he may direct, and The Adjutant General of the United States Army, shall separately or jointly compile or cause to be compiled a report or reports, showing the number of men in the armed forces of the United States accredited to each State or Territory of the United States and to the District of Columbia, either by enlistment or by the process of the selective service act, or otherwise drawn into and becoming an integral part of the armed forces of the United States during the period hereinafter specified, and that such report or reports shall be laid before the Secretary of War as soon as practicable after the passage of this act, and in no event later than six months from date hereof, and shall serve as the basis for the pro rata apportionment and distribution among the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia, as hereinbefore provided.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

Strike out all of section 2 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

Sec. 2. That the apportionment and distribution provided for in this act shall be undertaken and completed as soon as practicable after the passage of this act. Said apportionment and distribution in each congressional district or Territory and to the District of Columbia shall be made as near as possible upon the basis of the number of men in the armed forces of the United States accredited to each State or Territory of the United States and to the District of Columbia, either by enlistment or by the process of the selective service act, or otherwise drawn into and becoming an integral part of the armed forces of the United States during the period herein specified. For the purposes of this act the Secretary of the United States Navy, or such person as he may direct, and The Adjutant General of the United States Army shall separately or jointly compile or cause to be compiled a report or reports showing the number of men in the armed forces of the United States accredited to each State or Territory of the United States and to the District of Columbia, either by enlistment or by the process of the selective service act, or otherwise drawn into and becoming an integral part of the armed forces of the United States during the period hereinafter specified, and that such report or reports shall be laid before the Secretary of War as soon as practicable after the passage of this act, and in no event later than six months from date hereof, and shall serve as the basis for the pro rata apportionment and distribution among the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. MANN. What is the committee amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state the Clerk read section 2 which is stricken out and section 2 inserted.

Mr. MANN. Well, the Public Printer as usual made an error in printing the bill. I expect that the committee would rather act upon the proposition to substitute section 2 reported from the committee than merely to strike out section 2. I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be stated to be to strike out section 2 of the Senate bill and insert the language of section 2 reported by the House committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the amendment will be reported in that form.

Mr. DOWELL. Reserving the right to object, that will also include section 3?

Mr. KAHN. No; there will be another motion.

Mr. DOWELL. But this is part of the same amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. DOWELL. I withdraw the reservation of the right to object.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears none, and the amendment will be so stated.

Mr. MANN. Now, the part stricken out has been read, but the part to be inserted has not been read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that both the language stricken out and the language to be inserted has been read. The question is on striking out the language of the Senate bill and inserting the language proposed as section 2 by the committee.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask recognition on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to take up that much time. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is usually correct in his statements, but yesterday he made the assertion that the Public Printer was guilty of certain errors, and again, just a moment ago, he stated that the Public Printer has erroneously printed this bill. Now, there is one thing about the gentleman from Illinois that I have found out and everybody else has found out, and that is that he is fair, and he should know that this bill is printed just exactly, word for word and line for line, as the committee sent it down to the Printing Office. Not a single typographical error appears in the bill.

I hold no brief for the Public Printer, but I am an admirer of any man who tries to clean up his department and put it on a business basis. Your Public Printer has cleaned up the Printing Office of gambling. He put out a lot of gamblers among the employees who were making a constant business of gambling there during business hours, and has stopped gambling there, and I am one man who admires him for it. He is a Republican—a Republican officeholder—and I am a partisan Democrat, but when a man is trying to do something and is working along the right line for his Government I have to say something for him when a Member jumps on him, especially when he does not deserve it, and the gentleman from Illinois ought not to keep on jumping on the Public Printer, who is doing the best he can.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I have no criticism of the Public Printer; on the contrary, I have very high admiration for him. In this case it is the fault of the Public Printer—of his office. I have had so many cases lately where it was impossible to get reported bills, reported into the House, where I have been compelled to take the original print of the bill because I could not get the reported bills promptly from the office of the Public Printer, and I am going to take a crack at him until he gets his office up to date in printing the work of the Congress. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 3. That in the case of the States and Territories the apportionment and distribution, as provided for in this act, shall be made through the governor or chief executive of each of the several States and Territories, and in the District of Columbia through the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

Strike out all of section 3, beginning in line 11, page 3, ending line 16, inclusive, and insert:

"Sec. 3. That in the case of the several States the apportionment and distribution as provided for in this act shall be made through the Senators and Representatives comprising the State delegations in Congress from each State; in the case of the several Territories through the Delegate to Congress from each Territory; and in the District of Columbia through the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia: Provided, That any Senator, Representative, or Delegate may authorize the governor of the State, or the district therein, or the Territory which he represents, to make such distribution in lieu of said Senator, Representative, or Delegate.

"The Secretary of War is hereby authorized and empowered to make all rules and regulations to carry this act into effect."

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I ask leave to amend the amendment by striking out, page 5, line 2, the words "or the district," and in line 3 the word "therein."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. KAHN to the amendment: On page 5, line 2, after the word "State," strike out the words "or the district," and in line 3 strike out the word "therein."

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to discuss his amendment?

Mr. KAHN. I do not.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. RAKER. I rise in opposition to the amendment. I wonder if that whole proviso ought not to go out, and what its meaning is if it remains in the bill. I am thoroughly in accord with the method of distribution if the amendment is amended. I want to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that as the section now reads it requires a meeting of members of the delegation. Suppose there are 11 members of the delegation in any particular State. Read lines 19 and 25, page 4. It does not say that each member of the delegation shall have the number of trophies that would belong to his district in proportion to the number of men of the whole State; but, as the amendment now stands, irrespective of what the intention is, there might be accidentally one member who did not agree with the rest of the delegation.

The delegation can vote and distribute all of those trophies. Is not that right?

Mr. KAHN. No; it is not right. Each member of the delegation is entitled to his proportion of those that have to be distributed in the State, and if one member does not desire to come in, of course the number of trophies to be distributed in his district will not be distributed for the time being.

Mr. RAKER. I know. Undoubtedly that is the intention. But I want to call the gentleman's attention to the language. It says that in the case of the several States the apportionment and distribution as provided for in the act shall be made. How? By the Senators and Representatives comprising the State delegation. That means the entire delegation shall dispose of the trophies, and the delegation must itself dispose of the trophies, and no one member can say he is entitled to one-eleventh of these trophies unless the delegation voted it.

Mr. LAYTON. And you can not obtain the consensus of the delegation without a majority vote in conference.

Mr. RAKER. Exactly. Now, you have gone beyond the power of the member to submit it to the governor, so the governor should sit in with the delegation and vote how to distribute these trophies.

Mr. KAHN. Oh, no.

Mr. RAKER. I know what the language is. The matter is just as clear as anybody can make it. It requires a meeting of the delegation and their determination of the distribution of the trophies.

Mr. KAHN. Exactly.

Mr. RAKER. Now, a majority can take the trophies and place them where they please. I say that a majority of the delegation can take all the trophies from the minority and give the minority nothing but a few little packages and retain the balance themselves.

Mr. KAHN. The gentleman is a member of the delegation of the State that I come from. He is a Democrat and I am a Republican. So far as I am concerned I will see that he gets as many of the trophies as I do.

Mr. RAKER. That is all right, but that is not the point. What I am trying to get at is this: The number of men that come from a State ought to have a representation in distributing these trophies, so that a Member of Congress might say to his people, "I am entitled after these are divided up to distribute in my district so many trophies," and I ought not to have to go to the majority of the delegation and say, "Gentlemen, will you not please give me these?" because the only way the minority Member will get them is in that way.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, is it in order to move to strike out the third section?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the question is on agreeing to the section, and the gentleman from California has offered an amendment to the committee amendment.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Would a motion to strike out be a preferential motion?

The CHAIRMAN. As the Chair understands the parliamentary situation, a motion to strike out will not be in order. If the committee amendment is not agreed to, the original language of the bill is restored.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I move to strike out the last word, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Vermont yield to the gentleman from California?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Yes.

Mr. KAHN. I want to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KAHN. Has the amendment which I have offered to this amendment passed?

The CHAIRMAN. It has not yet been voted on.

Mr. KAHN. It is pending?

The CHAIRMAN. It is now pending.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, I think we are all familiar, or we ought to be by this time, with the not flattering estimate of the House of Representatives or of the Congress that we occasionally read in the periodicals of the country, particularly the daily press, perhaps, as we see it in some facetious editorial paragraph, or as we see it in some cartoon. We need not debate among ourselves the fact that that estimate is very unfair and very unjust, because we know it is. But it exists, none the less, and it is fed and kept alive, quickened and revived from week to week by some—well, something in the way of an indiscretion, perhaps, that may attach itself occasionally to somebody that in the public mind may be remotely or indirectly identified with Congress, and unfortunately that is taken to mean that the whole outfit is after that sample.

Moreover, there is a popular impression, as you and I know, that we have rather gone the limit on such subtle devices as seed peddling and the distribution of documents and maps, and such stuff. I do not know that we give away boxes of chalk, or blackboards as yet. We do not peddle canary birds or goldfish yet, but we will come to it. However, in almost a literal sense we do peddle goldfish now out of the Bureau of Fisheries, and we may get around to peddling a good many other things.

In other words, we all know that, instead of abiding by the limits of our constitutional office and contenting ourselves with discharging our duties with dignity and self-respect as lawmakers, we have gone outside into this jockeying business for the last century with any kind of a little trinket thing to distribute around among our constituents, just as the missionaries and traders used to bring beads and hand mirrors and a few little colored combs and such truck out to the red Indians, trying to make friends with them. It is the same kind of a thing, and it just about befits our dignity to the same degree.

Here we start off in this same business again, going about peddling war trophies and cannon. I do not know that I want to picture myself as being seated on a tin peddler's cart going up and down my district tooting on a fish horn and peddling gas masks and cannon, and all that sort of thing, and I do not think it is a duty that devolves on the lawmakers of the Government.

Now, it is clear in my mind where the logic of this thing is. The troops were furnished by the States, and they were furnished through the executive department of the States upon the call from the executive department of the National and Federal Government. We did not have anything to do with the furnishing of those troops. We made the law that compelled both these executives to furnish them in the way they did. But we did not administer the law. We are not our own sheriff. Every judge has not yet become his own executioner, in spite of "The Mikado." There is some limit, it seems to me, to the duties we ought to undertake, and if we get laughed at by cartoonists and spanked by paragraphers it is just because we do turn ourselves into market men and peddlers on occasion and do just that same sort of thing. The public will never respect us a bit more than we respect ourselves. It will never respect our institution any more than we respect it ourselves.

I am not impugning the credit of the men who bring the bill in this way, and I am not impugning the honesty and the self-respect of the men who assent to it.

I am only undertaking to exercise the privilege of one of our association to point out what the situation is. When I look at myself in the mirror I see a peddler of seeds, and I see a peddler of war trophies, and it is questionable sometimes whether I am really engaged in the constitutional function of making law or not.

I fear it is hopeless to think of getting this paragraph stricken out, but it seems to me we ought to make a law that would turn these war trophies over to the States in the proportions set forth in the bill, the relative proportions to the number of troops of each State that furnished these glorious armies that brought back these trophies. And I contend that the executive of each State, being the man who is the titular head and chief of the State, and who in that capacity saw to it that the State furnished its particular quota, should in turn distribute to the several towns of the State their respective quotas of these trophies.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Yes.

Mr. MILLER. I was wondering if the gentleman from Vermont would have to go up and down his State and throughout his district with a fish horn to distribute these trophies among the people.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. No; I am not going to do it. I was just stating it as an illustration.

Mr. MILLER. And the gentleman is just as far from being a faker or a peddler as one could possibly be. [Applause.]

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I thank the gentleman very much for his compliment, but the gentleman ought to keep his face straight when he makes the remark. [Laughter.]

I think in our serious minutes—and when I say "serious minutes" I mean those minutes sometimes when we are not legislating—when we are sitting in the cloakroom and comparing our minds with one another very freely, when we are doing that which Cato referred to when he said, "I do not see how one soothsayer can look another in the face without laughing"—at such times, I say, I do not see how we seed peddlers can put up this kind of stuff through the law and get by with it. To my mind it is about the cheapest contrivance for getting votes that I ever heard proposed. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Vermont has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word of the committee amendment for the purpose of asking a question.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, as I understand it, there is an amendment to the committee amendment pending.

The CHAIRMAN. That has just been agreed to. The gentleman from Indiana moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The amendment was to strike out the whole thing, section 3.

The CHAIRMAN. It was to strike out and insert.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The committee amendment is to strike out section 3.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the amendment as stated is to strike out section 3 of the Senate bill and insert section 3 as reported by the Committee on Military Affairs. The gentleman from Indiana is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of inquiring of the gentleman from California (Mr. KAHN) if he thinks the language on page 5, lines 5, 6, and 7, is sufficient to authorize the Secretary of War to make the exception referred to in section 1. I notice in section 1 it is said that certain cannon, and so forth, shall be distributed, with the exception of certain devices that are necessary for experimental purposes. I suppose the general power of the Secretary of War would authorize him to make that exception. But the second exception is, "of such of the devices aforementioned as may be required for display in museums," and so forth. That is not a function of the Secretary of War, and unless the authority is contained in the language upon page 5, lines 5 and 6, there is no authority in the bill vested in any person to make this exception.

Mr. KAHN. The bill itself makes the exception, as I understand it.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. But it is left for somebody to determine?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. The bill makes the exception in this language:

And the further exception of such of the devices aforementioned as may be required for display—

The point I am making, if the chairman will bear with me, is that the exception is named in the statute in general terms, and the power to determine the matter is not left in any person's hands or in the hands of any authority.

Mr. KAHN. I take it that this language will give the Secretary of War authority to make rules and regulations to carry out the provisions referred to in the bill.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. That is the inquiry I am making. It seems to me the language is not quite broad enough for that purpose.

Mr. KAHN. I do not think that under this language he could do anything with regard to the exception in paragraph 1, except to make rules and regulations for carrying out that express provision of the law.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Well, exception 1 makes an exception which is in general terms. Some power or some authority must determine what that is.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will permit, the bill provides that the Secretary of War is authorized to apportion the distribution—

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Except certain things. It is up to the Secretary of War to determine under the law.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. He may have that implied power.

Mr. MANN. It is not an implied power at all. He must exercise the power. He is required to exercise it, because he can only distribute those things which are not required for other purposes under the language of the law. He must determine that.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Having the power to determine the positive act of distribution you think there would be nothing left.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. May the amendment be reported again?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the committee amendment as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out section 3 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"Sec. 3. That in the case of the several States the apportionment and distribution as provided for in this act shall be made through the Senators and Representatives comprising the State delegations in Congress from each State; in the case of the several Territories through the Delegate to Congress from each Territory; and in the District of Columbia through the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia: Provided, That any Senator, Representative, or Delegate may authorize the governor of the State or the Territory which he represents to make such distribution in lieu of said Senator, Representative, or Delegate.

"The Secretary of War is hereby authorized and empowered to make all rules and regulations to carry this act into effect."

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, may I inquire if section 3 of the original Senate bill has been disposed of?

The CHAIRMAN. Section 3 is involved in the amendment which is now pending, the motion being to strike out section 3 of the Senate bill and insert in lieu thereof section 3 as recommended by the Committee on Military Affairs, as it has been amended. The question is on the committee amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MANN and Mr. BLANTON) there were—ayes 65, noes 15.

Accordingly, the committee amendment as amended was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. That all transportation charges on war devices and trophies, as indicated, from point of shipment to point of final delivery within the several States, the Territories, and counties thereof, and the District of Columbia, shall be borne by the United States Government, but not the expenses or costs incident to erection in local communities.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 6, line 3, strike out the word "final" and insert in lieu thereof the word "central."

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I wish to ask the gentleman from California a question. Where is the "central" point in the ninth congressional district of Tennessee?

Mr. KAHN. The War Department have a point of distribution somewhere near the center of every congressional district, and they will send the material to that point. It is not always in the center of the county or in the center of the district, but they have some central point in every district to which they send material and from that point it is easy to send it to the outlying sections of the district.

Mr. LAYTON. It is generally a railroad center.

Mr. KAHN. Yes; it is generally a railroad center.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Does that mean the geographical center?

Mr. KAHN. Not necessarily.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. What does it mean?

Mr. KAHN. It means the nearest railroad center in a congressional district.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. If I understand it correctly it means that they are going to send the big Berthas and the guns of different millimeters, and the buckles, harness, and things of that sort down somewhere into the center of a congressional district.

Mr. KAHN. Near the center.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I think we ought to know where these things are going to be sent. I want to know where to go to get mine.

Mr. KAHN. The War Department officials can tell the gentleman.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. If the gentleman from California will pardon me, he has been dealing with the War Department officials on friendly terms so long that it becomes somewhat disturbing. If the gentleman wants the War Department to distribute these things, why does he not bring in a bill which says so? For instance, can the gentleman give us the specific information as to where the things that are to be distributed by the Congressman in the tenth congressional district of Tennessee will be sent? Will they be sent to Memphis, or where?

Mr. KAHN. I do not know the exact location of the tenth district of Tennessee. I know the State pretty well. I have been there many times, and like it very much, but I do not know where every congressional district in the State is. The War Department officials who favored this bill have told me that there is some point in every congressional district where there is a railroad center, and that the trophies will be sent to that railroad center to be distributed to the other sections of the district.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman from Idaho.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. If this amendment stands, will it not be necessary in most instances to reship these trophies from the central point to some other points in the district?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Whereas they could be delivered just as cheaply at the point of final destination. It seems to me this is a very unwise amendment which has been suggested by the committee.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Of course, I do not know.

Mr. KAHN. In hearing the testimony given by the officers who favored this legislation, they pointed out that in every district in this country there is some railroad point where this material can be shipped advantageously.

It was not intended that the material should be sent directly to each place to which it was to be donated, but was to be sent from a central point, the expenses from that central point to the place of final delivery to be paid by the recipients.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I am gratified that I am not alone in my ignorance.

Mr. KAHN. Oh, the gentleman is not ignorant.

Mr. SEARS. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SEARS. In the fourth congressional district of Florida it is nearly 600 miles from Jacksonville to Key West. If I select Jacksonville, Key West would have to pay the freight for 600 miles. If I select Key West or Palm Beach, all this material would go through Jacksonville and then Jacksonville would have to pay the freight back to Jacksonville.

Mr. KAHN. In a case like that, under the provisions we have just adopted, the Secretary of War would have the right to make the necessary regulations to cure a situation of that kind.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 6, line 3, strike out the word "central" and after the word "delivery" insert the words "designated by the Representatives in Congress."

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. The word "central" is a part of the committee amendment. Has that been adopted?

The CHAIRMAN. It has not.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. I call the attention of the gentleman from Idaho to the fact that the committee amendment has not been adopted, and that would leave it in bad shape.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I hope that this amendment of the gentleman from Idaho will not be adopted because it does not help at all. It leaves it in as bad a situation as ever the bill would be without the amendment. I am one of those who believe that if the Government is going to undertake to pay the expense of shipping out these various trophies and relics to the State, then it ought to pay the whole bill and not ship them to some central point of distribution and make the recipients pay the balance of the freight. I think it would create much discussion and much dissatisfaction. The War Department recognized that one town would get 150 millimeter guns, another one 200-millimeter guns, and another one a bayonet, and, of course, they realized they would have a good deal of a job shipping these things all out to these innumerable places, and therefore the committee came to the conclusion that it would be well to name a central place. Personally, I am opposed to that proposition, but if the Congress wants to take the additional burden on its shoulders, well and good. I hope the gentleman's amendment will be adopted and the committee amendment will be defeated.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Idaho if he offers his amendment as a substitute for the committee amendment or a separate amendment?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment until the committee amendment has been acted upon.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Idaho asks unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, the gentleman's amendment can not be acted upon after the committee amendment is adopted because it will be too late.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Idaho?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROACH. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 6, strike out section 5 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Sec. 5. That the transportation, packing, loading, and other charges on war devices and trophies as indicated from point of shipment to the point of delivery shall be borne and paid by the recipients of such war devices or trophies, but no distribution shall be made thereof until such charges have been satisfactorily arranged for with the Secretary of War."

Mr. ROACH. Mr. Chairman, I heartily approve of the distribution of these war trophies and relics, but I doubt the wisdom of incurring at this particular time a half a million dollars of expense for that purpose, especially at a time when the taxpayers of this country are bending every effort to meet the necessary operating expenses of this Government. The general purposes of this bill are very commendable and I am heartily in favor of the provisions of the bill and shall vote for it, except the provision that incurs this additional expense. I feel this way about it: That if there is any city, town, or village in my district that wants any of these trophies bad enough to pay the charges to get them over there, they can have them; but to saddle a half a million dollars expense upon this country for that purpose, I question and doubt the wisdom of it. Perhaps I shall not get much support in this position that I am taking, but that is my honest judgment and thought upon it, and I hope that the amendment will meet with your approval and support. [Applause.]

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, I rise to support the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ROACH]. I do this upon this ground: Each day during the past two weeks we have seen items in the newspapers pointing out the necessity for increased taxes on something that is not yet taxed, in order that relief may be given to already overburdened business of the country, and during all of that time every day we have been called upon here in this body to vote money out of the Treasury of the United States, in sums from $30,000,000 down now to $400,000, this last amount to be expended by the Treasury for the purpose of shipping some war trophy from cannon down to bridle bits out to the different sections of the country. I want to comment for a moment upon the idea of giving a community or an individual something for nothing.

There never was and there never will be an individual who got something for nothing who appreciated it one one-hundredth as much as did the man who got half as much who had to strive for what he got, and the same thing is applicable to a city or a village. Let the country know that any community may have these trophies for nothing, with all expenses paid, and every little hamlet in the United States, every school-house, every church, lodge, and everything else will want one of them, and they will want it upon the ground that it does not cost anything. This is nothing more than further carrying out the theory upon which we are making the central Government responsible for the good roads all over the United States, as well as the health and morals of the whole country, and there is an insistent demand that the United States Treasury bear the burden for States in education and from the present trend no one can tell where we will stop. All this is demanded on the theory that if the United States Government pays the bill, it will not cost the people anything. To have the United States Government assume the responsibility for these things which rightfully belong to the State is the most extravagant and wasteful way of getting them that could be devised. I noticed in my local paper that a woman from some Government department here in Washington had visited my city to ascertain the condition of the morals. My advice to her is to stay right here and she will probably find plenty to do. Anyway, is not it insane and assinine to assume that the central Government can supervise the roads, health, morals, and so forth, of a free people?

I want to say to you gentlemen that the American people are getting rather tired of this. Every little town in my district has asked me to introduce a bill to provide them with a cannon or other war trophy, and I have complied with that request; but I want to say this, that if they want a cannon or some other trophy and will not pay the transportation charges from here to the place of destination, then they do not deserve it, and I am ready to go right out and tell them that to their faces. [Applause.] I think it is about time we called a halt. If we are compelled to pay a stamp tax on the little check that we may give this afternoon, or some other afternoon, to pay for our groceries for a week, then I think it is about time to quit paying out money to send free throughout the country cannon, bridle bits, spoons, and harness breeching, and so forth, whether it be to New Mexico or Wyoming or some point nearer here.

I should think that about 50 per cent of the Ford automobiles out in my district are owned by the farmers. They are taxed as personal property and their owners are compelled to pay a State license tax and many times a city tax. Now comes the Secretary of the Treasury and says, "Let's tax them all $10 a head again so that we can get $4,500,000,000 in the Treasury in order to send war trophies out to the people of Podunk." I want to say to you that I would rather vote against the bill than vote to pay $1 of the expense necessary to ship these articles anywhere into my district. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired. All time has expired.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry: What is pending?

The CHAIRMAN. A committee amendment.

Mr. BURTNESS. Mr. Chairman, I rise to offer an amendment to the committee amendment.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Is not the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ROACH] now pending before the committee?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Has it not been reported?

The CHAIRMAN. It has been reported, but it will not be voted on until after the committee amendments have been disposed of. The question is on the committee amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, there are three committee amendments, and we can not tell which one we are voting on.

The CHAIRMAN. Only one has been reported.

Mr. GERNERD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the committee amendment be again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the committee amendment.

There was no objection; and the Clerk again reported the committee amendment, as follows:

Page 6, line 3, strike out the word "final" and insert in lieu thereof the word "central."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. KAHN) there were—ayes 50, noes 43.

So the committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 6, line 3, after the word "the," insert "congressional districts of the."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 6, line 4, after the word "States," insert the word "the."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 6, line 4, after the word "Territories" strike out "and counties thereof."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BURTNESS. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by changing the word "point" where it occurs the second time in line 2, page 6, to the word "points."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Dakota offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BURTNESS: Page 6, line 3, strike out the word "point" where it occurs the second time and insert in lieu thereof the word "points."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, what has become of the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. ROACH?

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from Missouri is pending, to be voted on after the text to the section has been perfected.

Mr. BURTNESS. Mr. Chairman, in support of my amendment I will say that in the larger districts of the western and southwestern and southern parts of our country we have in many cases two or three railroads running into one district, and each one of these railroads serves a substantial portion of the district. My own district, for instance, is over 300 miles long, and on an average from 50 to 100 miles wide. There are two transcontinental railroads through the district. If the word "point" can be changed to the word "points" the Secretary of War under the general provisions of the bill may make rules and regulations to designate two or possibly three central points, if there be any particular occasion or necessity for it, without causing any additional expense to the Federal Government.

In other words, the shipment could be divided in two and could be sent perhaps as cheaply as otherwise and be a great convenience and saving of expense to the communities.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BURTNESS. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think under the terms of the bill all trophies designed for one congressional district have to be shipped at one time to one point?

Mr. BURTNESS. The chairman of the committee, when he was asked for information, stated, if I understood him correctly on that point, that the point contemplated by section 5 was a particular place somewhere near the center of the congressional district.

Mr. MANN. Well, I know, but I wanted to get the judgment of the gentleman, who has offered an amendment, who says it could be shipped to two or three places in a district, and I wanted to know what the gentleman thinks, if under the language of the bill as it now stands everything shipped to a district would have to be shipped in one shipment to one point?

Mr. BURTNESS. I think under the language of the bill as it now stands it will all have to be shipped to one particular point within each district, and I take the position there ought to be a couple of points to which shipments could be made; that is, to either one of two or three points, as the circumstances warrant.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I think I would have no objection to the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Dakota; it does not mean anything. It is absurd to say that under the terms of this bill the Secretary of War is required to ship at one time in one shipment to one point all the trophies provided for distribution in one congressional district. The big cannon, the 75-millimeter—is that correct?—guns, and these little badges and other things that were here to-day, and if you allotted one to a school somewhere instead of being able to send that badge by parcel post at an expense of 10 cents or a little more direct to the school, under the construction proposed the school would have to send a delegation 250 miles to meet a railroad train—and God knows when it would arrive, no one could tell within two weeks' time—and board them while waiting, simply to get hold of this badge.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. If the gentleman will allow me to interrupt, according to the earlier terms of the bill, if the Representatives did not peddle in person they would not have to do that.

Mr. LAYTON. Will the gentleman yield for a question, please?

Mr. MANN. If I can answer it.

Mr. LAYTON. Now, in my State there is no question of the central part of Delaware; it is the capital of the State. Now, suppose in the distribution of these trophies there is a 175-millimeter gun by one shipment sent to Dover and by the allotment another 175-millimeter gun was for Georgetown, Sussex County, Del., which is 40 miles farther south. Under the terms of this bill all would have to go to Dover.

Mr. MANN. I do not think so myself. I think under the terms of the bill—and I would like to see section 5 stricken out so far as I am concerned—I think under the terms of the bill the Secretary of War has the power to send to a central point—and central point does not mean in the center of the district—a carload of these big guns and advise the people to come there and get them. But that is not requiring him to send everything to one point or all at one time. However, I rose principally to say while the estimate of the expense under this bill according to the bill is $400,000 I take it, although I may be mistaken, that no one familiar with the operations of the Government and the War Department will think that will ever be done for $400,000 if the Government pays for it. Of course I represent a city, and maybe I do not have quite the same viewpoint with some gentlemen who have large country districts, and I appreciate that, but it seems to me that if the people of a locality are not sufficiently interested to raise the money to pay the freight bill and actual necessary expenses they are not sufficiently interested to get the trophies. [Applause.] It never has been the policy of the Government to send these cannon throughout the country at the expense of the Government. It was always the policy to do it at the expense of the recipients. Now, these recipients have to do a great deal of work, spend more or less money in preparation for these cannon and other trophies.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. My God, if they are patriotic, let them pay the bill and not require Uncle Sam to do it.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Not just now. I have only got a half second more. I think it is time to pass some bill in this House which is not to extract money out of the Treasury. [Applause.] We have not had many lately. All of these little bills that come in authorize an appropriation. I want to pass a bill to give these trophies to people who are willing to be interested in the subject, who are patriotic enough to pay the expense to cut down the appropriations of the Government. Now, if I have any time I shall be glad to yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The gentleman from Illinois may be absolutely certain that, if the rules of the House are observed, section 7 will go out on a point of order, because I intend to make it.

Mr. MANN. Oh, but section 7 does not cut any ice. I am talking now about section 5.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired, all time has expired, and the question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Dakota.

Mr. ROSENBLUM rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. ROSENBLUM. To offer a substitute for the pending amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

Substitute offered by Mr. ROSENBLUM for the amendment offered by Mr. BURNES: Page 6, lines 1 to 7, inclusive, strike out section 5 and insert in lieu thereof the following as section 5:

"That in order to avail themselves of the provisions of this act the said Senators, Representatives, Delegates, or governors of the States or Territories desirous of securing such trophies shall guarantee to the Secretary of War the payment of all expenses in connection with the transportation of such trophy or trophies, and that no money shall be expended from the Treasury of the United States for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act."

Mr. KAHN. A point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KAHN. It is not a substitute for the pending amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BURNES].

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

I think the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is wrong in his position on the amendment. Section 5, as originally written, contemplated a delivery, using the States and the counties as the central points. But it did not have the word "central." It said "final" delivery, and it provided that all the transportation charges from the point of shipment to point of final delivery in either the State or county should be borne by the United States Government, and the expense of erecting, say, the gun and putting a proper platform or place on which to hold it, should be borne by the people of the community. But you amended this provision by changing the word "final" to "central," and inserting "congressional districts," and you cut out the words "and counties." If "central" does not mean a central point and you are using a congressional district as the unit, if it does not mean some central point in that district to which you send the trophies for the district, then the English language does not mean anything.

Mr. KAHN. The Senate bill also contemplated the distribution by the governors of the States.

Mr. WINGO. Yes. Now, Mr. Chairman, if the Government is going to bear the expense of the transportation it ought to bear it. If you are opposed to it, then you ought not to provide for any of it. If you provide that the expense of transportation to each town should be borne by that town, say from the point of shipment in the East, and you undertook to send one gun alone, then you will treble the cost of transportation. But it is a common-sense thing to let the department send all that is available for one shipment in one compact shipment to some central point and let it be distributed from there. That would be economy in transportation. The gentleman says if you undertake to do that you will have a delegation standing at a central railroad point for two weeks. In my mind I can picture my friend from Mississippi [Mr. QUIN] as such a delegation, who will be standing there with one of these surcingle properly adjusted to his handsome form, one of these lanterns in his hand, a pair of these spurs on, covered by the bill, and one of these Uhlan lances in his hand to stick into any man that wants to run against him for Congress, and with garden seed and bridle bits for free distribution in his pockets, he will be invincible. I think we ought to classify these guns and the cities and towns, and then we ought to have brought in an omnibus bill providing that one gun of one class shall be shipped to each of the following cities, and one gun of another class to each of the following cities. But this proposition to give to each Congressman for distribution folding forks, spoons, surcingle, bridle bits, breeches, lanterns, and things like that to distribute over his district is not only absurd but will give him a lot of trouble. If you are going to send these guns to be erected as monuments in public parks and courthouse squares you ought to do it in a sensible manner. You have no right to distribute surcingle and spoons, and things of that sort. Guns are the things that should be distributed, that can be placed as memorials in every district of the United States.

Mr. DENISON. Does not the gentleman think that it would take away a great deal of the pork-barrel feature of this bill if they would be required to pay the expenses?

Mr. WINGO. No. I have in mind in a district of one of my colleagues a place where the soldiers of the Civil War and their descendants, both of the Blue and the Gray, meet. They own it. I think if you left it to Tom, Dick, and Harry to take up a collection to pay for the transportation, it might be paid; but I think the Government ought to pay the expenses of that memorial, but let the people pay the expenses of erecting it in a permanent place.

Mr. McPHERSON. Does the gentleman figure how much it would cost to ship one of these guns to each of the 15 districts in Missouri?

Mr. WINGO. No; because one gun may be of one size, which will take a higher rate than a gun of another class.

Mr. McPHERSON. If the Government does not send these guns wherever we are going to give them, is it not likely they will all be distributed to congressional districts near the places where they are now stored?

Mr. WINGO. If you do not pay the transportation it will mean that Chicago and New York and other great cities throughout the country will get the great bulk of them, and the counties, cities, and outlying sections, where these memorials ought to be, will not get them. I regret that you have not brought in a proper bill to cover guns that would, when erected, be permanent memorials, and left out the surcingle, bits, breeches, and lanterns. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has expired. All time has expired.

The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BURNES].

The question was taken and the Chair announced that the yeas seemed to have it.

Mr. BURNES. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided, and there were—ayes 45, yeas 39.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now comes upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ROACH], which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ROACH: Page 6, strike out section 5 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"Sec. 5. And all transportation, packing, loading, and other charges on war devices and trophies as indicated, from point of shipment to point of delivery, shall be borne and paid by the recipients of such war devices or trophies, and no distribution shall be made thereof until such charges have been satisfactorily arranged for with the Secretary of War."

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to speak in opposition to this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized.

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Chairman, I think we who live away from the seat of government are just as anxious to cut down taxes as anyone, but if this amendment prevails one can readily see that only near-by towns can afford any of these trophies. Near-by districts will, in the very nature of things, get them all.

Mr. ROACH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLTON. Yes.

Mr. ROACH. Does not the gentleman know that under the provisions of this bill the stock in the hands of the War Department would have to be apportioned to the several States, and that the portion belonging to his State could not be assigned to some near-by State but would be held until they could pay the transportation on it?

Mr. COLTON. Yes; and you would continue your taxes, because the outlying districts can not afford to ship the trophies. The freight rates are so high that it would simply mean that only these towns that can afford to pay the freight rates will pay them, and you thereby defeat one of the main purposes of the bill—cutting off the expense of caring for the trophies—besides discriminating against the States that are far distant from Washington, which contributed their share to the winning of the war. These States sent their men. It was not too much for this Government to pay the expense of bringing their soldiers back here. Now, if we are going to give these trophies to the States for historical purposes and for sentimental purposes, let us be fair about it and let all share in the benefits, as all were asked to share in the burdens of the war. [Applause.]

Mr. ROSENBLUM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLTON. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. ROSENBLUM. Does the gentleman think it would be entirely fair, then, for these States that are close to the Government to pay the high expense of sending those out to the distant States?

Mr. COLTON. The matter of the expense of the war was borne by everybody, was it not?

Mr. ROSENBLUM. Yes.

Mr. COLTON. Now, you are making it so that the State or district far removed from the Capital here must pay several times the amount that near-by States or districts will pay for one of these trophies. The people far away will be discriminated against because of their geographical location.

Mr. ROSE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLTON. Yes.

Mr. ROSE. I want to say that, like other Members, I have received dozens of requests for these trophies or cannon. I do not know of a single district that would not be willing to pay all transportation charges.

Mr. COLTON. What is the gentleman's State?

Mr. ROSE. Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman know of a single city in his congressional district that would be unable to pay the transportation charges?

Mr. COLTON. I know that a town in my district would probably have to pay several times as much as a town in the gentleman's district would have to pay for the transportation, and that is not a fair proposition.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLTON. Yes.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. The gentleman realizes that this is merely a gratuitous undertaking. There is no obligation on the part of the Government to distribute these things. They are going to be sent out for quasi-sentimental purposes—largely that—historical and sentimental purposes. We are under no obligation to make the distribution, and towns that are hard up are under no obligation if they do not want to participate in it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Utah has expired.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to speak in opposition to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to continue for one minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Washington yield to the gentleman from Utah?

Mr. MILLER. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Utah asks unanimous consent to proceed for one additional minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COLTON. I just wanted to say in answer to the gentleman from Vermont that that is the crux of the whole matter. If we are going to distribute these things at all, let us be fair about it. Let us not make it so that towns near by may get one of these trophies for a mere song, a bagatelle, while another town that is equally anxious to secure a trophy will have to pay a large amount for it. If the Government is going to do it at all, let us be fair about it. That is the only point I make. [Applause.] We may question the advisability of the legislation, but if we are going to enact it let us make it so that all may share its benefits equally.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Utah has again expired. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. MILLER] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, this matter was thoroughly gone over in the committee. We considered it from every angle. We realized, as every Member of this House must realize, that some of the congressional districts and some of the States are situated near the source of supply, near where these war trophies are stored. Others are very remote, and it will cost those remote districts thousands of dollars to receive any benefit of this act should this substitute prevail. The State of Delaware, for example, could have its allotment delivered overnight to any point in the State, and at an insignificant cost, while the people in the far West and Southwest will have to bear the cost of transportation from the eastern seaboard. Does anyone believe that that is fair to the Pacific coast? How about Alaska and the Philippines and Hawaii? Does anyone believe the citizens of those far-away lands can bear this enormous expense? In effect, it will deprive them of any trophies of the war. The only fair way to do this, gentlemen, is to distribute these things pro rata, in proportion to the number of soldiers the community contributed toward this victorious war, and distribute them at public expense. That is the only way to do it. [Applause.]

States in the far West contributed their quotas, States remote from where these trophies are now stored. They are all stored along the Atlantic seaboard. Are you going to take the State of California, which was exceeded by only eight States in the American Union in the number of soldiers contributed to the war [applause], and force its citizens to pay the cost of the transportation of these war trophies to the Pacific coast? And are you going to do it to all these other States in the far West and Northwest and Southwest? The only fair way to do it is to distribute them at Government expense.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG], who made such a violent attack upon this method of distribution, who wants each State to pay the expense for itself, said that those States unwilling to do that were lacking in patriotism. Perhaps the people in his State would be unwilling to do it. Might it be possible that a man who can afford to pay the tax on his $6,000 automobile could go along the roads of his State with that $6,000 automobile and then hesitate to pay a little tax as his portion of the cost of the transportation and delivery by the United States Government to the people of the country of these trophies of a war in which 70,000 American soldiers laid down their lives? [Applause.] That is not the sentiment of the American people. My people want these trophies to be distributed fairly and honorably to the various localities in order that each locality may have its part. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. QUIN] is recognized.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is made for the purpose of defeating this bill. Can you conceive of a man being in favor of this bill, knowing that these war trophies are stored in the eastern part of the United States, who pretends to be honest with himself and with the American people, saying that the folks of this country shall not receive these war trophies unless they go down into their pockets and pay the expense of having them sent to the places where the people live? The people in the three States nearest the points where they are stored could get all of them practically for nothing, because the transportation cost would be so low, but out yonder in the far-away State of Texas and the Southwest the people would be deprived of these trophies because they could not afford to go down into their pockets and pay for the transportation of them while the people up here could get them for nothing. Out yonder in Utah and California and Oregon and the Pacific Northwest, and down in New Mexico it is not fair to expect those people to pay for the transportation of these war trophies, because the cost would be so great in comparison to the transportation cost in the States near by where the trophies are stored.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. QUIN. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Does the gentleman think the same argument would apply to the mileage of Members of Congress?

Mr. QUIN. The gentleman would not want that sort of thing when it touched his pocket. The gentleman offering the amendment is against the people of the United States having the opportunity to secure these trophies in the far distant localities as a memorial of the valor and heroism of our soldiers on the field of battle across the seas, and he stands in the same position in which the gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON] stands. He does not want the folks to have these trophies. You know there are some people in this country who do not want anybody to have anything except themselves. Every State in the Union sent out its quota of soldiers, and I want their friends and their posterity to be able to see the trophies of this Great War, and I want them sent to these communities in such a way that they shall all be on exactly the same footing. [Applause.] It will cost the great body of the taxpayers of the United States less than it costs to store and guard these trophies to-day, to have them sent to the most central points in each congressional district in the United States in order that the mass of the people can have in their county seat or home town some trophy of the war. My judgment is that those who are opposing the wish of the plain folks back home who are entitled to these trophies, those who are favoring this amendment and other similar amendments, are doing it in order to make this bill contemptible and in order to kill it on the final vote.

Mr. CARTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. QUIN. I have not the time. These gentlemen who are favoring this amendment would compel the folks back home to pay out of their pockets the expense of getting these trophies sent to them that were captured along the borders of the Rhine and the Moselle, the cannons that were captured by the heroism of our boys. [Applause.] The Government paid the packing and transportation charges on all of these things from the battle fields of Europe across the Atlantic Ocean to the storehouses in New England, where they are costing rent. Why not pay to get them to all the counties instead of letting them go to the few States near by? [Applause.]

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the amendment. There is one consideration that we seem to have lost sight of in this discussion. When the bill was first introduced I understood that the chairman of the committee [Mr. KAHN] gave us the absolute assurance that in the passage of this bill we would save the Federal Government a large amount of money, so that in the distribution of these war trophies we are not taking money out of the Federal Treasury without at the same time saving the Federal Treasury future expense.

I am in hearty sympathy with the position taken by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. MILLER] as to this amendment, but I do not like his reference to the State which I represent. [Laughter.] He made the remark that his district covers several times as much territory as the State of Delaware. That may be true; but, gentlemen, if any bill passes in this House which requires money to be spent by the Federal Government, the State that I represent will pay more money into the Treasury of the United States than 9 out of 12 Southern States put together, and will pay more money than 9 other States north of Mason and Dixon's Line.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman yield for a question? Did not the gentleman's State get more out of the Government during the war than any other State? [Applause.]

Mr. LAYTON. That seems to be a pertinent question, but the gentleman is ignorant and ill-informed. [Laughter.] He does not know what he is talking about. When the war broke out in Europe all the world wanted the powder that was made by that old company known as the Du Pont Co., that has been in existence in this country for 150 years and that has supplied this Government in the hour of its need with its explosives from the Revolutionary War down. In addition to that, a large part of the money that that company made was not made out of the Federal Government, but was made out of foreign Governments with which it had contracts entered into for three or more years in advance. I think it is poor stuff for any man in this House to be belittling one of the great corporations of this country, which typifies the industry of this country, and which, together with others, has made this country the greatest industrial country in the world and brought to its people the greatest measure of comfort and happiness ever known.

Mr. ARENTZ. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAYTON. Yes.

Mr. ARENTZ. I should like to say a word about the Du Pont Co. Before the war we paid 11 cents a pound throughout the West for powder for mining purposes. During the war the price went up on account of the high cost of glycerine, because fats were scarce. To-day you can get all the fats you want at a minimum price, while powder is selling for 19½ cents, and they have absolutely no excuse for holding up the price. [Applause.]

Mr. LAYTON. As far as that is concerned, there is no excuse for the high prices of everything in this country, from the food we buy at the delicatessen stores to the clothing that we wear; but that company is no more to blame than anybody else in this country. I hold no brief for the Du Pont Co., as everybody who is acquainted with me knows, but I will not stand here and see the State which I represent continually belittled in a way for which there is no justice or excuse. [Applause.] We are furnishing from our great establishments in Delaware honest and good money to support this Government, and during the war there was no State in the Union that gave more to the Red Cross or more to suffering humanity in Europe than Delaware gave for every humane purpose that this country demanded.

Now, Mr. Chairman, let me give you my ideas of this bill. Let us forget much of this discussion and look at the purpose of it. Gentlemen, this bill is one, in my judgment, of the finest conception that has followed on the heels of the war. [Applause.] I stand here to say that I felt this war. I had one of the dearest relatives I possessed who went down to death on the 18th of July, 1918, in that great drive.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Delaware has expired.

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LAYTON. My thought about this matter has been seriously and carefully considered. I desire to give it to the House, and ask their serious consideration of it. I live in a county town. If this bill should pass, it was my purpose to see that one of these great trophies was placed out in its public square and that upon that big cannon should be inscribed the names of every man in the county of Sussex, of the State of Delaware—every man, white or black, high or low, regardless of his wealth or station—who went to his death in the recent Great War, so that that cannon could be made a memorial to them and serve as an inspiration of the highest patriotism for all the people who dwell therein. It was my purpose that in inscribing these names upon that cannon not only those of this generation, but its children and its children's children down through the generations of time, should have an opportunity to see who died in that struggle, and so preserve not only the names of the dead in their hearts but keep in their memories a living idea as to the supreme sacrifice they made for their country. That ought to be the great purpose of every man here. If it is so determined in every county town of every State of this Union, there will be a permanent and inspiring monument of the glorious achievements and of the sacrifice of every community. As far as the rest of these trophies is concerned, my thought would be to distribute all of these things that should come as my share as a Representative to the armories of the State, and, if desired, to organizations of a civic character, whether composed of men or women, for an adornment of their halls, where they can be housed, and where anyone who desires may go and see the implements of every kind that were used during the war.

Mr. NEWTON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I think this amendment ought to prevail. I do not think this is any time to appropriate money for the purpose of defraying the cost of transportation of these trophies and relics. It is all right to make provision for their distribution, but when we are living in a time like this, three years, practically, after the armistice, when we have not yet reached the point where we can pay the interest on our public debt and the running expenses of the Government without hunting right and left to find something on which the tax shall be increased, it seems to me that our expenditures ought to go only for necessary things.

Gentlemen, I have had a little experience recently in this ordnance question. Whenever you start in with this proposition you will find that $400,000 is not going to begin to pay the expenses which this bill will incur. It is 60 years since the Civil War, and if you want a piece of ordnance that was used in the Civil War the community that wants it has to pay the cost of transportation. As far as I know that has been true always since the Civil War.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NEWTON of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. The ordnance to which the gentleman refers is not located at any one point on the east coast. Much of it is in California and different points in the United States, and it does not all have to be freighted 3,000 or 3,500 miles.

Mr. NEWTON of Missouri. I have not found any Civil War ordnance on the western coast. I will give gentlemen my experience. About two months ago I took up, at the request of a Grand Army of the Republic post in St. Louis, the matter of getting two 10-inch Rodman guns, to be used for ornamental purposes in that city. I found that the guns were located at Fort Knox, in Maine. I found that the post had to pay the expenses of transportation. I took up the cost of transportation, and do you know what it amounted to? I found the best bid I could get for transporting the two guns from Fort Knox to the railway station and loading them was $500. The freight from the railroad point in Maine to St. Louis was $2,500 additional. The unloading and delivery in St. Louis will cost at least $500 more, making a total of $3,500 for those two guns of Civil War type. When you come to the cost of loading and transportation of all the big guns and small arms left us from the World War I do not believe that $400,000 is going to begin to pay the expenses. This is only an opening wedge. I do not believe $5,000,000 will be sufficient.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NEWTON of Missouri. No; I have not the time. If I have any time, I will yield later. I will tell you another thing. The very minute the public finds that they can get this ordnance free, transportation paid out of the Treasury of the United States, you will find that every little community in your district is going to demand a gun. Now, what is there in this bill that requires that community after it gets the piece of ordnance to construct the proper base for it or to keep it in condition? If a community is not interested enough in getting a cannon to pay the expenses of transportation, the chances are that they will not be interested enough to take care of it when they do get it. [Applause.] But, as I say, if this ordinance is to go out all over the United States, freight prepaid, every community will want a piece, and after they get it they will find that it costs money to build foundations and properly mount it and to keep it painted and in proper repair.

What is there in the bill that requires care and protection and preservation of the ordnance after it is delivered? What is there to prevent it from being stored for a time and then junked? I do not think this is any time to start in to pay out five or six million dollars for a purpose like this, a purpose that does not produce anything for the community in which the ordnance is delivered. Let them have the ordnance if they want it and are willing to pay the freight. If not, let us hold it until the time comes when we can at least pay the interest on the public debt and pay some of the principal before we begin to spend millions for a purpose like this. [Applause.]

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, gentlemen talk to-day about free material, free cannons, free howitzers, and the other trophies named in this bill. I want to tell you there is not a community in the United States to-day that has not given the best blood of the community and paid the highest price in the way of taxation for that trophy. It is theirs, and it is theirs by right, and no man should say that it is a gift to them. They paid for it many, many times over. Who raised his voice on the floor of this House to-day or at any other time in opposition to the expenses that had to be borne in bringing these trophies and cannon from the fields of France and Germany to the ports of embarkation, which cost hundreds of thousands of dollars, to be transported from there to the eastern ports of this country, at an expense of other hundreds of thousands of dollars? Who raised his voice because of the expense of bringing those trophies here, which were won by our boys with their blood, to the end that they might be distributed where they belong?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. I yield for a question.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. How many bridle bits, assorted, does the gentleman think his district is entitled to?

Mr. RAKER. I do not know; bridle bits are not involved. There are these great cannon and other ordnance that the American people believe ought to be set up in museums, in the parks, and the public squares and courthouse squares, so that they may refer back to the time when our boys helped bring them to this country.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. RAKER. Yes; I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. How many buckles and hooks would be required in the gentleman's district in order that his people might remember?

Mr. RAKER. My dear sir, the buckles and hooks were scattered all over the fields of France and other places by the American boys that the gentleman sent over and that I voted to send over when we voted for the war resolution, to the end that we might save our country and have something to show for it after it was over. Now, the picayune and miserly question is raised, after your money has been expended to bring these trophies to the ports along the eastern shore of this country, of whether we shall further tax the people to send them back to the homes of the boys, where they ought to be, so that the fathers and the mothers might view them. [Applause.]

That is the most picayunish argument that has ever been made—that it is going to cost a few dollars in a proper, legitimate way. It is not all commercialism in this country. We have got to have a few ideals; we must have a few things of sentiment, and we must have a few things that the coming generation might look back to as evidence of those things for which the country has stood from the beginning.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. KAHN. I would inform the gentleman that the War Department announces that there are 170 different kinds of items contained in these materials, and the total number is 710,000.

Mr. RAKER. There are many, it is true, and it is true also that there are some minor things, but they will be properly distributed when the time comes.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. No nation could have been more grateful than this Nation was over the sacrifices that saved it in 1861 to 1865, and yet the law requiring trophies of that war is exactly what is proposed in this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute more, in order that I might answer the question of the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GREENE].

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, in answer to that question, I helped to get some of these Civil War cannon for various localities. The cannon of the Civil War were at convenient locations. They were all over the United States, and all the people had to do was to pay the expense from the nearest point on the railroad to the place where they were to be put up, so that, in effect, the Government had already paid the expense, practically, for those, and the communities paid a minor portion of it. All we ask in this bill is that the main expense might be paid so that the trophies may be shipped to a central point, and the local communities will pay the expense from there.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has again expired. Without objection, the pro forma amendments will be withdrawn.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, these matters have certain significance, sentimental in character. If not debased by utter foolishness, the distribution can be made very valuable. A proper sentiment can be cultivated by proper action, but if the Congress goes to the absurd all of the sentimental benefits will be lost. There are certain of these captured trophies that have a historical significance and they might very properly be distributed, but there is no historical significance attached to the capture or surrender of harness or belt buckles. Of what possible historical sentimental use is it that there should be sent to your county or mine a certain number of bridle bits, either captured or surrendered? They mean nothing. And boxes, machine guns, horse breechings—how can that sort of stuff be a monument? This bill is cheapening, not glorifying America. [Applause.] Perhaps the opposition that is developing here toward retaining the provision which required the Government to pay, and the sentiment which is rising toward inserting a provision requiring the communities to pay may be due to the fact that the gentlemen know that no community is going to pay freight on bridle bits and horse breeching in order to carry it from one place to another.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. DENISON. The gentleman does not think that the Government ought to pay that freight, does he?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I do not.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I would like to see distributed those things that have some historical and sentimental value, in order to cultivate the right ideals in the minds of the youth who are to come after us, but I do not believe that either Government or community ought to pay freight on horse breeching and folding spoons and tin plates which may happen to have been picked up or surrendered. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BEGG. Does not the gentleman think it would be valuable to use some of this horse breeching to hold this House from voting away so much money? [Applause.]

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Well, the trouble is that I have tried to harness the Republican side so often and failed— [Applause on the Democratic side.]

A MEMBER. And they are not bridle wise.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. If some gentleman from that side will move to strike out the enacting clause of this bill there is a chance it will carry. Of course if anyone on this side makes the motion it will not carry.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Suppose the expense is stricken out of the bill, is there any harm left in the bill?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I suppose there is nothing left in the bill after that. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. Oh, I hope the gentleman's district would not look at it that way.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I do not think my district, I will say very frankly to the gentleman, will be willing to pay the freight on bridle bits and mule harness and things of that sort. If there could be sent to my district—

Mr. MANN. But under the proposition they would not have to, but under the original bill the Government will have to. That is what I am asking.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Well, I am going to support this Roach amendment, and then also if I happen to be able to get recognition, which seems very hard in the last few days, I am going to make a point of order against section 7.

Mr. MANN. I suppose the gentleman will get recognition for that or somebody else will.

Mr. ROSENBLUM. If my amendment carries it will automatically strike out section 7.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Of course that is the gentleman's theory.

Mr. MANN. We have these things on hand and we will have to dispose of them sometime. They will be up here all the time until some legislation is enacted. If we could provide for their distribution without expense to the Government, would not that meet the approval of the gentleman?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Entirely so.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Does the gentleman favor—

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I would not wish, however, to hold out the idea that Congress is giving any monument by sending them folding spoons and horse breeching and things of that kind.

Mr. MANN. But somebody may want a folding spoon or a badge for that matter in a schoolroom. I dare say for a few years there will be many hanging up in a schoolroom and talked about; maybe they will later disappear.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Does the gentleman favor the method of distribution?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. No; I do not.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I mean that the Representatives themselves should peddle them.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I do not. It is impossible of administration in any fair way.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Ought they not to be made to take out a peddler's license anyway?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Here are a certain class of guns, 8 of them, I believe, for Tennessee. I am thinking of Tennessee because I happen to be from that State. There are 8 guns; there are 10 Congressmen and 2 Senators. How are they going to divide those guns up?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. There may be some objection raised by the peddlers' union that they were going to compete with them.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It is a question of who has the biggest political influence, and just at this time, of course, I do not know what will be the effect.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. [Cries of "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. FISHER].

Mr. FISHER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I can not say that it appeals to me from any patriotic sense to have exhibited in my State or my district a lot of buttons or a lot of spoons or a lot of things that the Germans have made, but from time immemorial, as long ago as men have fought against each other, as nations have fought against other nations, it has been the custom when there was a victory to gather together the spoils and trophies and put them in the market places or in the parks as a patriotic inspiration for the young men of the country. I appeal to you not to treat this bill in a jocular mood, because we have chanced to capture in dump heaps here and there or in supply stations here and there from the German Army many things which you do not think will be inspiring exhibits; for to discard the bill you stop the distribution of large guns and other captured material. There are many discharged service men who fought in line of battle, and I have had a dozen letters from them within the last month who are interested in getting the captured guns and captured materials that they may be displayed in their communities.

If we distribute these trophies fairly in the town square or the park and around these captured guns there will be meeting places for many a day and year where the veterans of the great World War can gather and tell to their friends and acquaintances their experiences. It will be a center for patriotic inspiration.

Now, I want to say just a word about paying the expense. The Government ought to pay the transportation. If we are going into it at all, let it operate just like the draft operated. There ought not to be any question about an advantage to those near the Atlantic seaboard. When the selective draft machinery began to function it operated in every cross-roads community and the same principle should apply in this bill. [Applause.]

Let us distribute these trophies to every section of our Nation. So far as I am concerned, if I were to have my choosing, I would prefer to have in the parks of my city the guns that our boys fired at the front and which meant death and destruction to our enemies, and not captured guns, which probably were fired by the enemy at our boys. But it has been the custom always among nations to gather together these trophies. Let us not cast aside that custom in the greatest victory in warfare that the world has ever seen. [Applause.]

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this amendment be now closed.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ROACH].

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the yeas seemed to have it.

Mr. ROACH. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 84, yeas 81.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and Mr. KAHN and Mr. ROACH took their places as tellers.

The committee again divided; and there were—ayes 82, yeas 79.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 7. That to carry out the provisions of this act there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $400,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be administered by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that an appropriation as provided in this bill is not in order on the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from California desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, this bill was passed by the Senate. It came from the Senate Committee on Military Affairs. That committee has appropriation authority and can appropriate money. This bill practically carries, in section 7, exactly the language that was carried in the Senate bill.

Mr. ROSENBLUM. I would like to call attention to the fact that since the adoption of this amendment to section 5, a motion to strike out all of the section would really be the procedure.

Mr. KAHN. Of course, I am not making any motion on that proposition. I am just trying to call the Chair's attention to the situation. I would like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] whether he would be willing to withhold his point of order and strike out the language in section 7 making the appropriation, but authorizing, by inserting the words "authorize the appropriation"?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I would not be willing to withhold the point of order.

Mr. KAHN. As I say, Mr. Chairman, it is a Senate bill, passed by the Senate, brought to the Senate by a committee that has full power to appropriate, and adopted by the House committee in practically the language it passed the Senate.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, clause 5 of Rule XXI provides:

No bill or joint resolution carrying appropriations shall be reported by any committee not having jurisdiction to report appropriations.

It does not matter whether it is a Senate bill or a House bill. The rule says "no bill."

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. BEGG. I desire to offer one comment. The gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] suggests that this bill comes regularly from the Senate. I would like to call the attention of the chairman to the fact that there is one way this bill could get into this body, and that is by coming through the Military Affairs Committee of this House.

Mr. KAHN. Oh, no. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. BEGG. And the bill has traveled through that course.

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEGG. In just a minute, when I complete the statement. And the rules of the House have absolutely taken the entire appropriating power from the Military Affairs Committee. Hence any bill, regardless of its origin, if a strict interpretation of the rule is made, regardless of where it originated, if it carries an appropriation from the committees that are prohibited from making the same, can not legitimately be acted on.

Mr. KAHN. Of course, I only wanted to call to the gentleman's attention the fact that before the bill went to the Military Affairs Committee of the House it was reported to this House by the Senate and was in this House before it was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. BEGG. I appreciate that, but it does not change the status of the bill before this House one bit.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I have just one comment to make in the way of a suggestion. On Wednesday last the pink bollworm resolution was brought up in the House. That was a Senate joint resolution carrying an appropriation reported by the Committee on Agriculture. The point of order was made upon the appropriating section by the present occupant of the chair, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], and the point of order was sustained by the Speaker. It seems to me it is an exact precedent for the present situation.

Mr. BEGG. I would say, Mr. Chairman, that is not only a precedent, but this case is a stronger one. That was a transfer of appropriation already made. This is a new appropriation and not a transfer.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] makes the point of order against the language in section 7 of the bill, which is as follows:

That to carry out the provisions of this act there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $400,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be administered by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Clause 5 of Rule XXI reads as follows, as has already been pointed out by the gentleman from Tennessee:

No bill or joint resolution carrying appropriations shall be reported by any committee not having jurisdiction to report appropriations, nor shall an amendment proposing an appropriation be in order during the consideration of a bill or joint resolution reported by a committee not having that jurisdiction. A question of order on an appropriation in any such bill, joint resolution, or amendment thereto may be raised at any time.

This language is clearly an appropriation. Under the new rule the Committee on Military Affairs has not appropriating power, and the language to which the point of order is made is clearly a violation of Rule XXI. The point of order is therefore sustained.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KAHN: On line 12, page 6, insert a new section:

"Sec. 7. That to carry out the provisions of this act there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $400,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary."

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that that amendment is not in order, because the committee in passing upon the Rhodes amendment settled that question. The Rhodes amendment provided—

Mr. ROACH. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will pardon me, the amendment was the Roach amendment, not "Rhodes."

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I apologize to everybody necessary. [Laughter.] The Roach amendment provided that the expense should be borne by the community. That was the effect of it, with no expense to the Government. This provides for an authorization of expense by the Government.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee contend that makes the amendment subject to a point of order?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I do, upon the well-known theory, Mr. Chairman, that the committee having once passed on a proposition and settled it it is not in order even to submit an amendment inconsistent with it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. Jefferson's Manual contains the following paragraph:

SEC. 459. If an amendment be proposed inconsistent with one already agreed to, it is fit ground for its rejection by the House, but not within the competence of the Speaker to suppress it as if it were against order. For were he permitted to draw questions of consistency within the vortex of order, he might usurp a negative on important modifications, and suppress, instead of subserving, the legislative will.

The Chair thinks in accordance with the precedent there laid down and the principle established it is not within the jurisdiction of the Chair to declare this amendment subject to a point of order upon the ground that it is inconsistent with the previous action of the committee, and therefore the Chair overrules the point of order. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the "noes" appeared to have it.

Mr. KAHN. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California calls for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 57, noes 75.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee rise and report the bill back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California moves that the committee rise and report the bill back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and Mr. TOWNER as Speaker pro tempore having resumed the chair, Mr. WALSH, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having under consideration the bill (S. 674) to provide for the equitable distribution of captured war devices and trophies to the States and Territories of the United States and to the District of Columbia, had instructed him to report the bill back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California moves the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I ask a separate vote on the so-called Roach amendment.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Speaker, may we have the Roach amendment reported?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California demands a separate vote on the so-called Roach amendment. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ROACH: Page 6, strike out section 5 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"Sec. 5. That all transportation, packing, loading, and other charges on war devices and trophies, as indicated from point of shipment to point of delivery, shall be borne and paid by the recipient of such war devices or trophies, and no distribution shall be made thereof until such charges have been satisfactorily arranged for with the Secretary of War."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a separate vote demanded on any other amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross. The question is on agreeing to the amendments not specified.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment referred to by the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN].

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the "noes" appeared to have it.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California demands the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ROACH]. Those favoring the amendment will answer "yea" when their names are called; those opposed will answer "nay."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 120, nays 127, not voting 184, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. MANN. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. The amendment to strike out section 5 of the bill having been defeated, section 5 of the bill having been perfected by amendments in fact in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, which amendments were not reported to the House, what now remains in the bill. The original section 5?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It would be the impression of the Chair that the amendments were agreed to and were before the House.

Mr. MANN. The amendments were not reported to the House. The amendments were agreed to in committee and then the committee struck out the whole section, so that the previous amendments were not reported to the House. Not that I care except to ascertain the facts for the benefit of the engrossing clerk of the House.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, as I recall the situation the paragraph was perfected in committee by the committee and all the amendments reported by the Committee on Military Affairs were finally agreed to. Then there was a motion made to strike out the section by the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ROACH]. That was agreed to in the committee, but when it came to adopting the amendments by the House, the House refused to adopt the substitute for the paragraph that was originally in the bill, and I assume that section 5 will take the place of the amendment that was agreed to in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MANN. Certainly, but what is section 5? It may be that I can help out on this. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the amendments to section 5 agreed to in committee may be put before the House notwithstanding the operation of the previous question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the amendments to section 5 adopted in the committee before the action was taken to strike out the section may now be placed before the House. Is there objection?

Mr. MILLER. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The parliamentary inquiry put by the gentleman from Illinois it seems to the Chair is hardly a parliamentary inquiry. The effect of that could not be determined by the Chair, but will have to be determined by the view of what was done. It seems to me it is hardly a question for the Chair to determine.

Mr. MANN. After all, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that it is the duty of the Speaker of the House to determine what has been done and not the duty of the reading clerk to guess at what the House wanted to do. I do not know whether the reading clerk will certify to the enrolling clerk, section 5, as originally passed by the Senate or originally reported to the House, or with certain amendments. I want to see that question determined, although I am not in favor of section 5. A gentleman who is in favor of it objected to letting us dispose of it by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks that the gentleman from Illinois is correct in his statement that the House has not taken any action on the amendments to the section. The Chair's impression would be that the section would remain unamended, and that is the statement of the Chair.

Mr. MANN. It seems to me that that is a very good reason for recommitting the bill.

Mr. WALSH. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WALSH. The House having refused to strike out section 5, and the committee having adopted amendments to that section, is it not now in order in the regular course for the House to vote on the amendments that were adopted in the committee prior to that section being eliminated from the bill?

Mr. MANN. If the Chair will permit, we have agreed to all the amendments except the Roach amendments, and we could not then have agreed to the amendments adopted in the committee to section 5.

Mr. WALSH. Of course not.

Mr. MANN. Because the amendment struck out section 5. These amendments have not been agreed to and there is no way to bring them before the House now because we are operating under the previous question. When the time comes I will move to recommit the bill.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, in order to avoid difficulty I ask unanimous consent that these amendments to section 5, which the committee adopted, be agreed to in the House.

Mr. MANN. I asked unanimous consent for that and the gentleman from Washington objected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent that the amendments adopted by the committee to section 5 prior to the time section 5 was stricken out shall be considered as adopted by the House. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee and Mr. GRIFFIN objected.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order now that the House has refused to strike out section 5 as provided by the Roach amendment and that the amendments agreed upon in Committee of the Whole are in order before the House to be passed upon. They are amendments agreed upon in committee and not disposed of by the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks that the point of order raised by the gentleman from Texas is not in order and that the Chair would now have no right to place them before the House.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KAHN. Will it be proper to move that the amendments be placed before the House for its action?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It is not, the previous question having been ordered.

Mr. MANN. We are operating under the previous question.

Mr. KAHN. In order to do that, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that it may be done.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent that the House now take action by vote on the amendments. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that these amendments perfecting the paragraph were voted on en bloc with the other amendments. The fact that the amendment striking out the paragraph was agreed to in Committee of the Whole did not prevent the other amendments to the paragraph which were agreed to, perfecting it, in committee, from also being voted on en bloc.

Mr. WALSH. How can anything be voted on that was not reported to the House from the committee?

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of Senate bill 674.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the previous question having been ordered upon the bill and all amendments thereto to final passage, it is not now in order to make that motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I move to reconsider the vote by which the previous question was ordered.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move to lay that motion upon the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair the motion of the gentleman from California is not in order.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that it is not in order to move to reconsider the vote by which the previous question was ordered, but it is in order to move to reconsider the vote by which the amendments en grosse were agreed to, and that that is the only right which the gentleman from California has.

Mr. MANN. I make the point of order that that motion is not in order with the previous question operating.

Mr. WINGO. Oh, yes; I think it is. We can reconsider a vote that was taken after the previous question was ordered.

We agreed to the amendments en grosse after the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SINNOTT. The House agreed upon all the amendments except the Roach amendment, and were not the amendments to section 5, outside of the Roach amendments, perfecting amendments? Therefore, the House adopted all the amendments, including the perfecting amendments, with the exception of the Roach amendment.

Mr. WALSH. How could the House adopt amendments to a section that was not in the bill when it was reported to the House?

Mr. SINNOTT. We first perfected section 5 in the committee.

Mr. WALSH. And then struck it out.

Mr. CHALMERS. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the Chair has already ruled on that question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has already ruled on that.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on ordering the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, and was read the third time.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to recommit the bill to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. MANN. I am opposed to the bill in its present form.

Mr. KAHN. I move to amend the motion of the gentleman by referring the bill to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that that motion is not in order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois to recommit the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on ordering the previous question.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee) there were—ayes 102, noes 63.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote just taken, because there is no quorum present, and I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and twenty Members present; a quorum.

So the previous question was ordered.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, will it be in order now to offer an amendment to the motion to recommit, that the bill be recommit with instructions to report back section 5 as amended in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It would not be in order, the previous question having been ordered. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois to recommit.

The question was taken, and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 103, noes 99.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Six gentlemen have risen, not a sufficient number, and the yeas and nays are refused.

So the motion to recommit was agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 9 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, August 4, 1921, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXPORTATION OF FARM PRODUCTS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1915) to provide for the purchase of farm products in the United States, to sell the same in foreign countries, and for other purposes.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I feel the necessity of opposing the pending amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] as well as the amendments offered by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] and the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST]. These amendments are similar in character. I hesitate to object to or oppose any legislation which has for its purpose the development of the West through irrigation, though I do not believe these amendments tend toward that great work. More than that, I believe they would be harmful in their present form.

Again, Mr. President, I believe that the adoption by this body of any or either of these amendments would retard the speedy enactment of the proposed legislation into law. It is appropriate for me to say at this time that on three or four occasions when legislation similar to the amendments was offered for consideration in the House, it failed to pass and at other times failing to get prompt consideration and favorable action by the House committees.

If I read aright the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nevada, it is to amend the Federal farm loan act, section 12, so that the farm-loan banks may be able to loan money on first mortgages on land in Government reclamation projects, saving, however, as a first lien reserved to the Government for water rights or construction charges and charges of maintenance or operation.

In the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nevada is a program of procedure for foreclosure which I think as offered is unworkable and ill-considered. I say that with deference to the Senator from Nevada, who is splendidly informed on law of this nature; but I think the amendment was worked out at a time when sufficient consideration was not given to the general plan, whereby the courts may take cognizance of the rights of all concerned whenever the contracts are forfeited by reason of nonpayment of construction charges or maintenance charges.

In the amendments offered by the Senator from Idaho and the Senator from Arizona they attempt to make the farm loan bank lien superior to that reserved in the reclamation act of 1902, so that the Government, for charges of construction and maintenance, does not indeed have a first lien, but has a lien second in power and force to that held by the Farm Loan Board.

In the amendments of the Senator from Arizona and the Senator from Idaho no procedure is worked out by which a foreclosure could be had, or the rights of an entryman or patentee could be determined in case of default. Inasmuch as the principle involved is largely the same, I shall confine the few remarks I make to the proposition contained in the amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada. He does not treat with the patentee. He speaks purely of the case of the entryman. The Senator must know that there is a wide distinction between an entryman on public lands who holds a contract and a patentee who has a patent under the act of 1912.

In the case of an entryman it is only necessary for the Government to forfeit the contract upon the nonpayment of the construction or maintenance charges. In the case of a patentee it is essential that the Government bring a suit for foreclosure. The act of 1912 provides that when an entryman went upon the public domain under an irrigation project, after he had made his residence there, had cultivated his land for two years, and had raised crops thereon, he was entitled to a patent, which gave him a fee simple title. In order to destroy that title, it is necessary, as the Senator from Nevada well knows, to bring a suit for foreclosure, with the right of redemption to the patentee. In the case of an entryman, he can go on the land, and under a contract he can get a first lien under this amendment, and when the foreclosure is brought the Farm Loan Board must step in and take up his rights.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES of Washington in the chair). Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. McNARY. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. I should like to make an inquiry. Until the entryman's claim ripens into a condition where he can obtain a patent he has no title to the land, as I understand?

Mr. McNARY. That is exactly what I say.

Mr. FLETCHER. He has no power to mortgage the land; he is merely an entryman with possible rights which may eventually mature into those of a patentee; but so long as he is an entryman he does not own the land. What power, therefore, has he to mortgage it?

Mr. McNARY. I am not discussing a theory; I am setting forth a proposition which is made by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], which I read in section 2, on page 2 of the proposed amendment, which gives an entryman a right to go to the Farm Loan Board and get money. That is the objection I am making. I say that is an impracticable feature in the amendment.

Mr. FLETCHER. I quite agree with the Senator from Oregon. It seems to me thoroughly impracticable to endeavor to work out this sort of a scheme in this connection. I can not see any possible escape from postponing to the position of a second mortgage the Federal land bank. The Federal land bank must come in subject to all the rights and claims of the Government. The Government's claim for construction and for water rights is prior to any other claim that could be created.

Mr. McNARY. I concede that, but the Senator from Nevada is trying to subrogate the rights of the entryman to the Farm Loan Board without specifying that an assignee of the Farm Loan Board can take up the rights of an entryman who has violated his contract.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President—

Mr. McNARY. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] to the fact that under the reclamation projects there are thousands of farmers receiving water who are indebted to the Government for that water, which is used on privately owned land. Therefore, what the Senator says not only applies to the entryman on public lands, but it also applies to land which is privately owned.

Mr. McNARY. Further, Mr. President, I desire to say as to the general form of legislation in all of the States where irrigation is practiced the States have enacted statutes creating what are known as irrigation districts. Those districts are in substance municipal corporations. Those corporations would receive no advantage under the proposed amendment at all. Why? Because the lien, so called under State statutes, is not a lien but is a tax. That tax is collected as taxes are collected in municipalities. The Farm Loan Board, realizing that there was another lien superior to theirs, would not loan money to districts not organized under State laws. I say to the Senator from Nevada that the remedy lies with these associations to conform to and come in under the arm of the law of the several States. There are only a few that are outside—perhaps no more than 30 per cent.

Furthermore, as constituting another legal impediment, a great many of these associations are unincorporated. The only security the Government would have would be the individual property, and that may be absorbed by the cost of the water right and the cost of the land. So there would be no security for the money advanced by the Farm Loan Board, whereas in the incorporated organizations, which are in fact and in character municipal corporations, there is not only the liability of the land but the liability of all the property of the incorporated and organized districts, the property holding the same relation as a lot in an incorporated city. In those cases the security would be adequate, whereas in the unincorporated societies the security would be thoroughly inadequate and the Government might suffer a very great loss.

Mr. President, my time is about exhausted, and I only desire further to say that I think it would be very unfortunate to tack this proposed legislation onto this bill. It would not meet the needs of the West, and I do not believe that those interested in irrigation in the West favor it, except in a few instances. The State law is ample and adequate. I think the adoption of this proposition would prove an insuperable obstacle to the early passage of this proposed legislation, and as one who comes from the West and is deeply interested in the subject I sincerely hope that none of the three amendments will be voted onto this bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, of course I have heard of this question being raised before; as a matter of fact, when the farm loan legislation was under consideration this subject came up for discussion; but under that legislation it was never found possible to meet the requirements of those entering reclamation projects in the irrigation districts of the country. I should like very much if we could accommodate those who are engaged in agriculture on reclamation projects, but the way to get at it, it seems to me, is by having some measure proposed and referred to a proper committee, have that committee thoroughly consider it, and work out a plan whereby the Federal land bank might be safe and at the same time those who are engaged in agricultural development under irrigation projects might receive accommodation under that act. It is, however, a matter that will have to be very carefully considered. We must not jeopardize the safety of the farm loan system; we must not bring in question the absolute security of its bonds; it must not be insisted upon that, for reasons applying in special instances in the irrigation regions, exception should be made there which would involve a question as to the safety of the loans of the Federal farm bank. The land banks in the irrigation districts, of course, will look after that and would be primarily liable for the bonds issued by that bank; but all of the 12 banks of the 12 districts are equally responsible for the issues made by any one bank. The question involved, it appears to me, is a matter of great importance to the entire system.

I should like to see some scheme worked out whereby those living on irrigation projects may be able to get accommodation upon the same basis as all other borrowers who receive accommodations under the farm loan act; that is to say, loans made to them to the extent of 50 per cent of the actual value of the security which they can offer.

Under the plan proposed by the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho, as well as by the amendment offered by the Senator from Arizona, and even under the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nevada, the Federal land bank is required to make loans upon property which is already encumbered by previous liens in favor of the Government for construction and for water rights. Those liens are first liens either in the shape of taxes or whatnot. In some instances, under the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nevada, the borrower may be only an entryman; he may not have title to the land at all; but under all of the proposed amendments the requirement is that the Federal land bank shall be a second mortgagee. That is the position in which it is proposed to put the Federal land bank.

The loan must be made subject to existing liens, subject to liens under the reclamation act, subject to liens for water rights, and for construction. So the Federal land bank stands in the position of a second mortgagee as to its loans. That is an unsafe position; it violates the very principle of the act; it violates all proper principles with reference to the making of loans. For instance, suppose there are 40 acres of land reclaimed under one of these projects worth $100 an acre—we will say that is the value of the land as it stands—and suppose the Government liens upon the land for construction, for water rights, and for whatnot amount to $60 an acre, taking that amount merely as an illustration. Now, it is proposed that the man who has entered that land—or perhaps he is the patentee; perhaps he has title to it; let us assume that he has title to it—may go to the Farm Loan Board and say, "I want $50 an acre loan upon this land; it is worth $100 an acre." Under the amendment to which I have referred the Federal land bank, disregarding all prior liens, not considering the $60 an acre lien upon this land at all, must make a loan of $50 an acre. So here we have a man who owns 40 acres of land worth $100 an acre able to borrow $50 an acre on that land from the Federal land bank, although there still remains prior to that lien a lien of $60 an acre in favor of the Government. So that we have liens amounting to $110 an acre on land worth $100 an acre.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. PITTMAN. One might think from the Senator's statement that it is proposed to compel the farm land bank to loan money to settlers on irrigation projects. The amendment does not compel them to do so at all.

Mr. FLETCHER. It provides that the first paragraph of section 12 of the farm loan act shall read that "said loans shall be secured by duly recorded first mortgages on farm land within the land-bank district," and so forth, except in instances in reclamation projects, and in those instances loans shall be made not upon first mortgages, not upon first liens, to the Federal land bank, but subject to liens of the Government under the reclamation act for water rights, for construction, and whatnot.

Mr. President, if these amendments provided that the Federal land bank might make loans to the extent of 50 per cent of the equity of the entrymen or of the patentee, there would be more reason for it. For instance, if the land is worth $100 an acre and the prior liens in favor of the Government amount to $60 an acre, the entryman has an equity of $40 per acre in that land. In that case we might, with some degree of reason, provide that the Federal land bank might be authorized to loan $20 an acre, or 50 per cent of the farmer's equity in that land; but when we provide that the Federal land bank shall loan, as it loans to all borrowers, 50 per cent of the actual value of the land and 20 per cent of the value of the permanent improvements on the land, without regard to prior liens held by the Government, we make the whole scheme ridiculous, because the Federal land banks can not afford to buy land. The right to bid at a sale upon the foreclosure of the mortgage of the Federal land bank perhaps amounts to something; but this system is built upon the idea that these loans are to be paid in cash as they come due, not that the Federal land bank may go in and foreclose its mortgages and acquire the land. The Federal land bank is not operating farms. It can not afford to operate farms. It is engaged in the business of furnishing accommodations to those who do operate the farms, and it is no great benefit to the bank to say that it may be a bidder at a foreclosure sale; and what must it bid? Under the terms of this amendment, if the Federal land bank does bid at a foreclosure sale in case there is default by the owner of the land, and foreclosure is necessary, it must bid the entire amount of the Government lien and the entire amount of its own lien, plus the costs, attorneys' fees, and whatnot. It is required to do that; so that the Federal land bank simply becomes the owner of the property, relieves it of the Government lien, the prior lien, pays off the Government, and owns the land. That, it seems to me, is an unnecessary provision; but it certainly is not in any way saving the principle that these loans ought to be made upon first mortgages, and limited to 50 per cent of the actual value of the property.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Florida has expired.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, It seems to me the very clear and convincing statement of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY], who is chairman of the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation, makes it evident that this amendment ought not to be put on this bill, and the additional discussion as to the merits of it here would seem to me to add to that argument.

Mr. President, here is an elaborate amendment which has never been considered by the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation, which affects very materially the whole scheme of irrigation, in which I understand the Government has invested something like $120,000,000. The Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation is headed by the Senator from Oregon, who has knowledge of these subjects, and the members of the committee, I believe with few if any exceptions, are Senators from those States having familiarity with that subject, and they have never considered this amendment or this bill so far as I know.

There may be necessity for legislation along this line; but this bill ought not to be the vehicle to amend the farm loan act, to amend the irrigation laws, to amend the Federal reserve law, and to carry out all the other schemes of Senators as to legislation. It seems to me the very statement of the proposition demonstrates the unwisdom of putting the amendment on this bill.

In saying that, I am not disputing the necessity of some legislation at some time; but let it go to a committee and be considered. The vice of this proposal is in putting a debatable matter, which the chairman of the Irrigation Committee says will not accomplish what is sought, on a bill which aims to furnish immediate credit for moving the products of the farm this autumn at the earliest possible date.

Mr. President, we ought not to do that; but I do not say I would not support the legislation proposed by the Senator. I do not know enough about it. I have tried to inform myself this morning, but the speech of the Senator from Oregon is very clear and to the point, and it seems to me ought to be conclusive as to the action of the Senate on this amendment.

Mr. PITTMAN obtained the floor.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I raise the point of order that the Senator from Nevada has spoken once for 10 minutes, and that under the unanimous-consent agreement he has not any right to speak further on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that the Senator from Nevada has spoken on this amendment.

Mr. PITTMAN. If the Senator from Minnesota had paused a few moments, he would have found that I had a right to offer an amendment. For the purpose of removing as many doubts as possible in the minds of Senators who are opposing this amendment, I now ask permission to strike out the second section of my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Of course, the Senator has a right to modify his amendment in any way that he sees fit.

Mr. PITTMAN. Undoubtedly. Now I am speaking to that amendment, if I have the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is inclined to think that that does not void the agreement made by the Senate by unanimous consent. It does not make it a new amendment. It is still the amendment of the Senator from Nevada. The Chair would hold that a modification of that kind does not give the Senator a right to speak another time upon his amendment.

Mr. PITTMAN. I bow to the ruling of the Chair. I should like to know, however, under the ruling of the Chair, if I am at liberty to speak on the bill itself, having discussed the amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has a right to speak 10 minutes on the bill itself. The Chair understands that some Presiding Officers have held that that right could not be exercised while an amendment was pending, but the present occupant of the chair thinks it was held yesterday or the day before that a Senator could use his 10 minutes in connection with his speech on an amendment.

Mr. PITTMAN. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will follow that ruling and recognize the Senator for 10 minutes on the bill.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, may I suggest the state of the record? The Senator from Nevada actually did not offer his amendment until the conclusion of his speech. Technically he would be entitled to 10 minutes upon his amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would hold that that would be a clear violation of the spirit of the unanimous-consent agreement. Of course, if the Senate thinks differently, all right. Every Senator, then, when he wanted to offer an amendment, could speak 10 minutes and then offer his amendment and then speak 10 minutes on the amendment. That certainly was not the spirit of the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. PITTMAN. I do.

Mr. BORAH. I want to make a suggestion. Of course, the Senator can speak for 10 minutes on the bill; but does the Chair hold that when an amendment is wholly changed, and becomes a new amendment, a Senator may not speak upon that new amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada did not withdraw his amendment. He simply modified the amendment that was already pending, which he had a right to do under the rule. It remained, however, the amendment which the Senator offered yesterday.

Mr. BORAH. Precisely so; but for 14 years the rule has been different in practice here. Senators have offered an amendment to an amendment and have spoken upon that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator from Idaho had offered this amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Nevada, the Senator from Nevada could have spoken 10 minutes upon the amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho; but that is different.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, allow me to present this consideration: If a Senator modifies his amendment, the meaning of the amendment may be entirely changed and all the previous debate may become worthless and nonapplicable. It makes another amendment of it. I want to suggest to the Chair where a Senator modifies his amendment is it not another amendment? Otherwise there could be no debate of the proposition before the Senate if the modification changed the effect of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair does not think so; but the Senate can take such action as it sees fit upon the ruling of the Chair. The Chair will hold that the amendment is the original amendment proposed by the Senator from Nevada, and that under the unanimous-consent agreement he has not the right to speak again on the amendment. If the Senate does not agree with that ruling, it is very easy to change it.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, it seems to me that if a Senator by simply modifying his amendment himself can get 10 minutes more there is no limit to what he can do. He can change a word here and a word there, and go on and speak by the hour.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. That is true; but there is no limit to the number of amendments a Senator may offer.

Mr. LODGE. Separate amendments; yes.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield? The Senator from Nevada has the floor. The Chair will not take this out of his time.

Mr. BORAH. I do not want to take it out of the Senator's time; but I know that the rule which is now invoked is not the rule which we have been heretofore observing.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks differently from the Senator from Idaho in that respect.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, this last amendment to my amendment was not offered by me for the purpose of gaining time. It is a bona fide modification of my amendment. It is offered for the purpose of meeting certain objections made to the amendment. In other words, Senators seemed to think it would be risky to grant to the Federal land banks the power to lend money to entrymen before they had obtained patents to their land within an irrigation project. By striking out all of that section which deals with entrymen and then modifying the second section, which I intend to do, so as to read, "That in the event that a loan is so made to a patentee of said land," I at least avoid one objection, and that is that you are giving the power to the Federal land bank to lend on land to which there is not a title in the borrower.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Nevada indicate clearly what part of his amendment he has stricken out? The Chair is rather confused about it.

Mr. PITTMAN. It is not numbered, but it is the section that commences on line 11 on page 2—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Ending with line 11 on page 2?

Mr. PITTMAN. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is what the Chair thought.

Mr. PITTMAN. Then I shall have to amend the next section after the one that is stricken out as follows, so as to connect it up: In lieu of the first line of the third section insert: "That in the event that a loan is so made to a patentee of said land and thereafter there shall be a sale of said land under." That will precede the word "foreclosure" in the thirteenth line of page 3.

In other words, as modified, the farm loan bank can lend only to a patentee of this land. When an entryman in a project obtains patent to the land he then has a permanent investment. He has an improved farm, because under the reclamation act he can not obtain a patent to it until he has it in cultivation.

As far as the security is concerned, the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] was fearful that the security would not be good; that, for instance, the Government might have a lien on this patented land of such a great amount that the second mortgage of the farm loan bank would not be good; but when you limit it to patented lands within a project, then you have the knowledge that it is improved land. You also have the knowledge that the Government has already been paid practically all of the construction charges over which the lien was granted.

The Senator from Oregon thinks that this amendment has been carelessly or hastily drawn. In this amendment I have expressly reserved to the patentee and to the farm loan bank every right of redemption granted under the respective State statutes. That may exist without this express provision of my amendment, but I have taken the precaution to reassert it; but in addition to that I provide in the section that stands, dealing with patentees, that in the event of a foreclosure by the Government the Federal farm land bank shall have the right of redemption and that the patentee also shall have the right of redemption.

I have provided that the Government shall be paid its money first in any case, that the farm land bank shall then receive what is due it, and that any balance shall go to the patentee. That is all this amendment provides. You would judge from the speech of the Senator from Florida that this would compel the Federal land banks to lend money on these patented claims in irrigation projects. It does not do anything of the kind. It simply removes the restrictions as to lending money on those lands. Congress thought it was proper to insure the safety of those loans by providing that the money could only be loaned on first mortgages. But the Government is already interested in these irrigation projects and the lands within them. It is to the interest of the Government to see that the farmers on those projects prosper, and if they do not prosper the Government will lose the money it has put up for the construction of the project and for its maintenance. Certainly, if we can utilize another branch of the Government to assist those farmers in making good on those projects, we will not only be doing justice to them but we will be doing a great deal toward making a success out of the reclamation projects.

Of course, if the board of directors of a farm loan bank can not be trusted, if they are not men of judgment and discretion, if they do not understand the banking business, if they are careless with the Government money, then the fear of the Senator from Florida might have some foundation. But, as a matter of fact, the history of the farm loan act is that they have been overcautious, if anything, in the lending of money to farmers. Already there are so many restrictions thrown around the farm loan act that in many cases it is impossible for one entitled to borrow money, by reason of his condition, to obtain the money.

The amendment is perfectly simple. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY] said that this same matter has come up in the House and been killed two or three times. If it was killed, why was it killed? It was killed because the measures embodying this did not have in them provisions for redemption by the farm loan banks. Admittedly, it would be a dangerous thing for the farm loan banks to lend money when the title to the land might be canceled and the banks have no right of redemption, and possibly that was the case, without such a provision as I expressly place in this amendment. In the event of the sale of this land by the United States Government under foreclosure proceedings to recover the charges due it for construction and maintenance, then the farm land bank which has loaned money on that land may pay the charges due the United States Government in the foreclosure proceedings and be subrogated to the rights of the patentee against whom foreclosure proceedings were had. No other amendment I know of has ever had that safeguard in it, and without that safeguard it can very easily be understood how Members of the House would vote to deny the farm land bank the authority to lend money on reclamation projects. This is an important matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator from Nevada in stating that this is a very important matter, and I would like to ask the Senator from Nevada if his amendment has been submitted to the farm loan board?

Mr. PITTMAN. No; it has not.

Mr. McLEAN. And it has not been considered by any committee of the Senate?

Mr. PITTMAN. No; it has not.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, for some time it has been before the committee of which the honorable Senator is chairman.

Mr. McLEAN. Not very long; and the Senator from Idaho has not asked for a hearing.

Mr. BORAH. I did not know a Senator had to go around and ask for a hearing. The bill was sent to the committee, and I supposed it would be considered. If the Senator is simply waiting for me to ask it, I will ask it now.

Mr. McLEAN. I can not give the Senator a hearing this morning; but I assure the Senator that he can have a hearing any time when he desires it. I think it should by all means be considered by the committee, and it ought to be submitted to the farm loan board.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, this is really a very simple matter. It does not obligate the farm loan board to make loans. It simply permits them to go upon these reclamation projects, and the adoption of this amendment would remove the legal inhibition against making the loan.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President, there seems to be a wide difference of opinion among the Senators who know about this situation. The Senator from Oregon is opposed to this amendment, and has given his reasons for opposing it, and I think they are substantial reasons. I have no desire to interpose any opposition to the enactment of a measure which will grant the relief desired, but as long as the doctors disagree about it, the gentlemen who are posted, it seems to me it ought to be carefully considered.

Mr. BORAH. I do not think the Senator from Oregon and I disagree about the statement which I made. In fact, I agree with the Senator from Oregon as to some of the suggestions which he has made. But this is not a complicated affair at all. There seems to be an opinion to the effect that if this amendment should be adopted there would be some obligation imposed upon the Farm Loan Board to make loans under different conditions and rules and regulations from those which govern it in making loans in other places. It simply removes the legal inhibition against their going onto reclamation projects, surveying the situation, and determining for themselves whether or not the security is ample, and whether or not the security is such as they should take.

I think I see no difficulty with this amendment. I am speaking now of the amendment which the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHBURST] offered, because I have not thought that the additions which have been offered by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] really change the matter; in other words, I have thought that they could do without those changes which they may be able to do with them; but I do not discuss that now. Referring to the amendment of the Senator from Arizona, there is nothing to it except the mere removal of the obstacle to making loans at all, namely, the lien of the Government. As the farm loan act prescribes that the mortgage shall be a first mortgage, they have refused to consider loans upon Government projects because they regard the lien of the Government as a first lien or first mortgage, and that therefore they are prohibited.

All this does is to authorize the board, in case it sees fit, to make the loan. If the security, under the other provisions of the law and under the rules and regulations of the farm loan act, is sufficient and satisfactory to the Farm Loan Board, they can make the loan. That is all there is to the amendment, as I understand it.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Senator from Nevada having stricken from his amendment the second section, it removes one great objection I had to it.

But the following section, Mr. President, will not meet the situation in thousands and thousands of cases. On pretty nearly every reclamation project, where citizens owning land in fee simple use the water from the reclamation project, they have made an obligation to the Government of the United States that the money expended in the construction and maintenance of the project will be paid back in 20 yearly payments. They own the land, as I said, in fee simple, and I know that in my State there are hundreds of cases, if not thousands, where individuals and banks have loaned to those farmers on second mortgages, or on mortgages subject to the claims of the Government of the United States.

In the amendment of the Senator there is no provision whatever for taking care of such a loan under a reclamation project such as I have described. In fact, Mr. President, if there should be a foreclosure, by the pending amendment the bank or the individual which had loaned to the farmer would lose his money entirely if the Government had a prior right over the mortgage that was given to the man who made the loan to the individual farmer.

No one would approve of such a thing; but that would be the effect of the wording of this amendment, and it seems to me it is a very unfortunate thing to undertake to do.

The amendment which was offered by the Senator from Idaho did not interfere with the lender's rights whatever. If the bank loaned on a second mortgage, subject to the claim of the Government of the United States upon the land which was owned in fee simple by the borrower, nothing in the amendment of the Senator from Idaho or the Senator from Arizona would interfere with that right whatever. But the pending amendment, if it were put into the law, I am quite sure would. It either would or the man could not borrow a dollar under the provisions of this bill, and I think it is rather a dangerous proposition.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I presume there is quite a uniformity in the matter, but I would like to ask the Senator what are usually the liens held by the Government on these lands? Are they statutory liens—liens created by statute—and, if so, what do they amount to? When a man gets a patent to a piece of land, does he make a mortgage to the United States Government to secure the claims of the Government against the land or is his indebtedness fixed by statute, and, if so, what does it amount to as a general thing? What would be the prior liens on these lands which have been reclaimed?

Mr. SMOOT. It would all depend on the amount it cost per acre to build the project and place the water upon the land. For instance, in my State we have only one reclamation project. The estimated cost per acre for placing the water upon the land was $40, but when the project was really constructed it was found that it cost about $87 an acre, and every acre of land in that project is subject to whatever the project costs per acre plus whatever interest may be due by the time the payment is made. The Government of the United States holds a first lien upon the land, and where the property is owned by an individual and that individual has a water right which was merged into the reclamation project, then the Government of the United States in distributing the water gives that individual the same water rights that he had before; but in three cases out of four, so far as my State is concerned, the farmers wanted more water than they had before, and they purchased the water from the Government at $87 per acre, and gave not only a lien upon the land they held in fee simple but they gave a lien upon all the water the Government sold to them and all the water they had.

Mr. FLETCHER. So that the prior liens in those cases would be about $87 per acre?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; and I will say to the Senator that in Utah County particularly, that being right in the center of the State, are some of the very best beet lands and fruit lands that there are in the State and that land is worth more than $87 an acre. In fact, it is worth $250 an acre, and I know hundreds of cases where the banks have loaned to those farmers and taken mortgages subject to the claims of the Government, and under the pending amendment I do not know what would become of their claims.

Mr. FLETCHER. That is one way to work it out, rather than break down the great principle of the farm loan system.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, if this proposition is as simple as the Senator from Nevada thinks it is, and if there is no opposition to it, as Senators state, there is no reason for the amendment riding through Congress upon such a bill as this. If those Senators are correct, the bill can be passed as a separate measure without any difficulty whatever.

However, if those Senators are mistaken—and it seems to me very clear that they are—the incorporation of the amendment upon this bill means a delay at least in the final enactment of the measure. If Senators are interested in securing early relief for agriculture in this emergency, not only this amendment but all other amendments not relating to the subject matter of the bill ought to be defeated.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Nevada has met most of the objections stated by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY] by striking out the paragraph which gave the right to an entryman to borrow from the Federal farm loan bank, the entryman being the man who has no title to his land, but it seems to me there should be a further amendment on pages 4 and 5 by striking out the word "entryman" everywhere that it appears and inserting in lieu thereof the words "patentee or owner." Such an amendment, as I understand it, would make the amendment of the Senator from Nevada apply only to those lands in irrigation districts where the occupant is actually the owner of the title and would leave the Federal land bank free to place a farm loan mortgage upon that land subject only to the lien now held by the Government of the United States.

I therefore move to amend the amendment of the Senator from Nevada by striking out, wherever it appears on pages 3 and 4, the word "entryman" and to insert in lieu thereof the words "patentee or owner."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the amendment to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nevada.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. Wherever on pages 3 and 4 the word "entryman" appears, strike it out and insert in lieu thereof the words "patentee or owner."

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, it seems to me that the amendment striking out the word "entryman" and inserting the words "patentee or owner" conforms with my amendment as it now stands after it has been modified by the striking out of the second section.

I do not understand the particular objection which the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] makes to the foreclosure proceeding.

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. PITTMAN. Certainly.

Mr. SMOOT. The foreclosure proceeding as found in section 2, which is now section 3 of the amendment of the Senator from Nevada, reads as follows:

If the land of said sale is bid in by said Federal land bank, then it shall pay to the United States that portion of the purchase price due the United States by said entryman under said reclamation act, and shall credit said entryman with the balance of said purchase price upon the said loan and mortgage.

The first part of that section reads as follows:

In the event of the sale of said land under foreclosure procedure or otherwise by the United States said Federal land bank may become a purchaser of said land and water rights at such sale and may bid therefor a sum of money equal to the total amount due to the United States for said entryman under said reclamation act and costs of procedure plus the amount due said Federal land bank.

In other words, the Federal land bank is limited in the amount it can bid to the amount owing the Government of the United States and the Federal land bank. I wish to say to the Senator that there are hundreds and thousands of farmers who have made loans from individuals and banks, who have taken second mortgages upon their lands subject to the claim of the Government of the United States, and under this provision there would be no way for the Federal land bank to pay off that mortgage.

Mr. PITTMAN. The Senator objects because I have limited the land bank in bidding to the amount of the lien of the Government plus the amount due to the bank. If there is a private mortgage on any of this land, then the farm loan bank can not lend any money on it because that restriction is not removed. The only restriction that is removed makes it possible now that it may lend on these lands subject to the lien under the reclamation act. If there is a mortgage on the land held by a private person or a bank, the Federal farm loan bank can not lend subject to that mortgage.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not know whether they can or not.

Mr. PITTMAN. Therefore there is only one thing the bank has to do at the sale, and that is to see that there is enough money bid at the sale to pay both the Government and the Federal farm loan bank. The provisions of the Federal farm loan bank act insure that, because it must then bid the total amount due both to the Government and the bank. That is all there is to it. We do not want them to become owners of the land. We want somebody else to have title to the land. We would be very glad if some one else outbid the farm land bank. That is the object of it, and therefore we limit them to bidding at that sale the amount due the Government on its lien and the amount due the bank. That is enough for them to bid.

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] asked, if this is such a simple matter, why we do not introduce a separate bill and have it put through. I have not found it very easy to pass any legislation through either branch of Congress in the last two and one-half years. I do not see that the committees are meeting very often and acting on any bills. We have the calendars of the committees right now jammed up full and no action being taken on bills. As a matter of fact, it is becoming apparent to some of us that practically the only way we are going to obtain legislation in the interest of certain sections of the country is to tack it on to general bills.

These people have been suffering under these irrigation projects for years. They have suffered under the red tape of the Reclamation Service and they have suffered by not being able to borrow any money to assist them in their agricultural enterprises. The farm loan act was intended to aid the farmers, and yet probably the most prosperous farmers in our States and the largest farm enterprises are absolutely debarred from the benefits of the act.

I do not see how the adoption of my amendment can endanger the passage of the bill. If the bill goes back to conference, that is all right. If the conferees on the part of the House will not stand for it and if the conferees on the part of the Senate do their duty in trying to make them stand for it, no one then will hold up the conference report. May I suggest to the Senator, why not try to see whether the House will stand for one of these amendments?

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. LENROOT. Does the Senator think time in getting the bill through is of any importance in this emergency?

Mr. PITTMAN. I think time is very important, indeed, and I think time is also very important to the farmers within the irrigation projects of the West.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. KELLOGG. Why has not the Senator tried within the last four years, during which he has been a Member of the Senate, to get this legislation through some committee?

Mr. PITTMAN. I have assisted other Senators who had introduced similar legislation.

Mr. KELLOGG. The Irrigation and Reclamation Committee is composed of Senators exclusively from States having such projects. Does the Senator pretend to say that they are not willing to act on any of his bills?

Mr. PITTMAN. The Irrigation Committee, when it has met at all, has been busy with this bill or with other irrigation bills.

Mr. KELLOGG. This bill has not been before the Irrigation Committee, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. PITTMAN. Other irrigation bills have, however. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY] has just finished preparing an irrigation bill of great importance, but we are dealing now with a bill to which this amendment is pertinent.

Mr. KELLOGG. No; Mr. President, it is not pertinent at all, any more than an amendment to the Federal reserve act or an amendment of any other act.

Mr. PITTMAN. Because it has a different name it is not pertinent, according to the Senator's view.

Mr. KELLOGG. Why does not the Senator introduce his bill and have it sent to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation?

Mr. PITTMAN. I did not consider it necessary to introduce a separate bill and have it sent to the Committee on Irrigation, because we are now discussing relief for the farmers of the country in the consideration of the pending bill. The purpose of the pending bill is to relieve the farmers of the country. It is to have the Government furnish money to be loaned to them. It is to get them out of the hands of the banks of the country. The only difference is that we have already a law providing for the lending of money to farmers which we can amend to help them at the same time that we pass this law providing for additional funds. It is a perfectly legitimate amendment. It is a proper thing for consideration at this time.

I would not do anything that I thought would jeopardize the passage of the pending bill, and I do not think there is any western Senator who considers that my amendment or the amendment of the Senator from Arizona—and either one of them suits me—would jeopardize the passage of the bill or delay it an hour.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I exhausted my time a few moments ago on the Pittman amendment, but I assume I have a few minutes now on the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 10 minutes on that amendment.

Mr. McNARY. I wish to occupy only a very short time. I thought this morning I pointed out the legal defects in the procedure proposed in the amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada and I shall not discuss that subject again. I do not think it workable. I think it is ill-conceived legislation. I think the Senator from Nevada, when he asked to strike out section 2, and the Senator from Nebraska, when he asked to modify certain other sections, admitted that it is an amendment which is not workable.

I have not had many years of legislative experience, but I know that the poorest legislation we get anywhere is that which is written on the floor of the Senate or the House. Legislation as important as this, meaning so much to the development of the great empire of the West, should be duly considered by a committee. The present Presiding Officer [Mr. JONES of Washington in the chair] well knows that for many weeks the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation has been considering a very large and comprehensive plan looking to a further and greater development of the West by irrigation.

The committee has brought out what I think to be the very best bill that has ever been conceived by those interested in the growth of that country.

I wish to say to the Senator from Nevada that this matter was not presented to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation, but as chairman of that committee I can say that legislation similar to this, yet dissimilar in its procedure and its conception, is now being prepared and within two weeks it will be submitted to the Secretary of the Interior for his opinion and to the Farm Loan Board for their opinion, and will then come before that committee for proper and studious thought. That is better than attempting to write important legislation of this kind to-day on the floor of the Senate.

Again, I express the sincere hope that the western Senators will not feel discouraged over the position being taken here, but will, in the interest of legislation and of irrigation, consider this matter independently of that which is now before the Senate for consideration.

There are two other amendments pending, the one offered by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] and the one offered by the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], which I hope also will be defeated. I wish to say to the Senator from Nevada in conclusion that if any irrigationists out in the West are panting for legislation of this character, they have a door open to them.

They can organize under the State irrigation laws and get the very credit for which they are asking under this bill. They are not without remedy; it is open to them. It is foolish, indeed, to come before Congress and propose by ill-considered legislation to provide something which the people may now get in any of the 17 arid and semiarid States.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY], the chairman of the committee, a question for information. If I understood the Senator aright, he is opposed to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], and also to the amendment which I have proposed; that is, those amendments which have for their purpose making land under irrigation projects eligible for loans under the Federal farm loan law.

I know the Senator from Oregon is a staunch friend of the irrigation interests; I know that he is convinced of the necessity at an early date of so amending the Federal farm loan law that irrigationists under Federal irrigation projects may share in the benefits of that law; and, if I heard the Senator aright, he stated that he would at an early date, as chairman of the committee, bring in a substantive, independent bill, which would have for its purpose the curing of the defect in the Federal farm loan law in that respect. While, of course, I should be delighted to have my amendment or the amendment of the Senator from Idaho or the amendment of the Senator from Nevada adopted, I am content with the statement of the Senator from Oregon, because when he says that he will put his vast energy and his sincerity behind a bill I believe it will go through.

Before I take my seat, however, I want, for the third time, to say to Senators that there now exists in this aspect of the case certainly an anomalous and unjust situation. The Government has spent $150,000,000 in reclaiming 3,000,000 acres of land. That reclaimed land alone is now worth $600,000,000. All of the money which has been advanced to the Reclamation Service and spent by the Government will be reimbursed to the Treasury, with the possible exception of 1 or 2 per cent of the sum which was spent in the early period of the work under the operation of the law of 1902; yet under the Federal farm loan law at present irrigationists, water users, landowners under the Federal projects, are precluded from securing loans.

I also desire to say that it will be remembered by any Senator who pays attention to what may be said on the floor of the Senate that in 1906 not only I but other Senators arose and asked if water users and landowners under Federal irrigation projects would be eligible to share in the benefits of the Federal farm loan law, and it was the unanimous consensus of opinion, both in the House of Representatives and the Senate, that landowners under Federal projects would be eligible to secure loans under that law; yet under the construction which has been placed upon that law by Government officials—and I have no quarrel with them, they are doubtless sincere—we are told that irrigationists under a Federal project may not secure loans under the Federal farm loan law.

I am very content and very satisfied, however, with the statement of the Senator from Oregon. Though I should like to have adopted at least one of the amendments to which I have referred, I am content to wait for the action which will be taken by the Senator, for I believe when he and his committee report a bill they will make a drive in its interest and will put the bill through, and it ought to be done at the earliest moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] to the proposed substitute amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, if the Senator from Florida will yield to me for a moment, I desire to say that it will be remembered that I introduced an amendment such as the one which has just been defeated. I will not ask for a roll call on my amendment, but I do feel that the question ought to be put on it. It was introduced and is pending. It has been read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's amendment has been read, and is on the table whenever the Senator desires to offer it.

Mr. ASHURST. I shall not ask for a roll call on the amendment, but I think it ought to be disposed of.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. But the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] has now proposed his amendment, which is pending.

Mr. ASHURST. Very well.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I propose the amendment which I send to the desk, and I should like to have it read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida will be read.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] proposes the following amendment to what is known as the amendment of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY], which he has offered on behalf of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry: On page 3 of that amendment, line 23, it is proposed to strike out the period after the words "set forth," to insert a comma and the words—or which makes or has made an advance or advances to any producer for the purpose set forth in paragraph (a) upon notes, drafts, bills of exchange, or other instruments of indebtedness secured by chattel mortgages, warehouse receipts, bills of lading, or other instruments in writing conveying or securing marketable title to staple agricultural products, including live stock.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, the amendment just read is practically the same amendment which I discussed rather fully on yesterday and the day preceding. The purpose and object of the amendment is to make securities furnished by a producer to a bank from which he obtains a loan, which is secured by a chattel mortgage upon staple agricultural products, eligible when held in the hands of the bank for use in connection with the bank obtaining an advance from the War Finance Corporation. That is the object and the purpose of the amendment. The same class of security if negotiated through a dealer is made eligible, so that the dealer may obtain a loan or an advance from the War Finance Corporation; but under the provisions of the substitute in its present form the same security if negotiated by a producer at the bank and held by the bank is not recognized as a proper security in the hands of the bank upon which the bank may obtain an advance from the War Finance Corporation. It is highly discriminatory to prohibit the use of such security by the bank; it is discriminatory against the producer and discriminatory against the bank.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WATSON of Indiana in the chair). Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. TRAMMELL. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. As chairman of the subcommittee which has proposed the pending substitute amendment, after consultation with other Members of the Senate, I do not see any objection to the amendment, and, so far as I am concerned as chairman of the subcommittee, I am willing to accept it.

Mr. TRAMMELL. In view of that statement I will yield the floor. I do not wish to discuss the amendment if it is agreeable to the committee, and I feel hopeful that it is agreeable also to many Members of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida to the amendment in the nature of a substitute reported by the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President, I offer an amendment which extends the time within which loans may be initiated from July 1, 1922, until October 1, 1922. It also extends the time within which final liquidation must be made from two years to three years. It also provides for including in section 27 cooperative associations. I believe such associations could obtain loans and have obtained loans, but it has been denied upon the floor of the Senate that they are eligible to obtain loans. That is necessary in order to make section 24 of the bill recognize cooperative associations as entitled to the same rights and privileges as would be accorded under preceding sections relative to exports.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from New Mexico to the amendment in the nature of a substitute reported by the committee will be stated.

The READING CLERK. It is proposed to amend the amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY] on behalf of the committee, as follows:

In line 6, page 4, strike out the word "July" and insert in lieu thereof the word "October."

In line 21, page 6, strike out the word "July" and insert in lieu thereof the word "October."

In line 14, page 4, strike out the word "two" and insert in lieu thereof the word "three."

In line 20, page 5, strike out the word "two" and insert in lieu thereof the word "three."

In line 9, page 6, strike out the word "two" and insert in lieu thereof the word "three."

In line 10, page 7, after the word "institution," insert the words "including cooperative associations."

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I inquire if all of the amendments suggested are offered as one?

Mr. BURSUM. They are.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. They are all offered as one amendment.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, several members of the committee and other Senators had a conference on that subject and also had a conference with Mr. McLean, of the War Finance Corporation. As a result, they thought it would be very objectionable to extend the time of three months out of the crop year. If Congress finds between now and next July that it is necessary to provide another emergency measure, it will be in session and can pass such an act. They also thought it was very objectionable to make the short-time credits authorized by the bill run for three years. We thought the reasons presented to the Senators who had an opportunity to investigate the matter were conclusive that we ought not to extend the credits to any such length of time, and that was the opinion of the committee.

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President, I submit that the amendment would not compel the War Finance Corporation to make loans for three years; it would simply give them three years in which to wind up and make final liquidation of all their loans. The amendment is not obligatory.

Mr. KELLOGG. It gives them an opportunity to extend for three years loans which are supposed to be temporary and are necessarily short-term loans. Furthermore, it adds three months of time in which such credits may be extended, and affords an expectation that the corporation is going into the financing of another crop. I do not think there is any business reason why that should be done.

Mr. BURSUM. Does the Senator believe the War Finance Corporation would extend the loans unless it were necessary to do so and unless such action were justified? Can we not trust the War Finance Corporation?

Mr. KELLOGG. But the limitations of the law ought to apply to the War Finance Corporation. I obtained the best advice I could, as I know other Senators did, and as the committee did, and it is the opinion of the committee that this ought not to be done.

Mr. BURSUM. Does the Senator believe that the loans can be wound up in two years?

Mr. KELLOGG. Certainly.

Mr. BURSUM. Our past experience does not justify that conclusion.

Mr. KELLOGG. I do not think there is any doubt about it, because these loans in their very nature are temporary; they are not long-term loans like mortgage loans on real estate.

Mr. BURSUM. The condition of the live-stock industry and the condition of the average farmer is such that there is no hope for complete and full liquidation in less than three years. So why should we limit the loans to two years? So far as that portion of the amendment extending the time from July until October is concerned, if there is serious objection to it, I am willing to withdraw it, but the other portion of the amendment ought to be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BURSUM].

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. TRAMMELL and Mr. SMITH addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida offers an amendment, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The READING CLERK. On page 6, in line 16, after the word "Act," it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That no purchase of debentures, promissory notes, or other obligations of the said banking corporations shall be made, nor any loan or advance be made to said banking corporations, except for the purpose of assisting the said banking corporations in financing the exportation of agricultural and manufactured products from the United States to foreign countries.

Mr. TRAMMELL obtained the floor.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. TRAMMELL. Certainly.

Mr. McNARY. Again, I am going to say to the Senator from South Carolina that personally I have no objection to the amendment which he offers, nor do I think the committee has.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that the amendment that is now being discussed is the amendment that is proposed by the Senator from Florida.

Mr. McNARY. I understood it was the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SIMMONS. What is the amendment? I hope it may be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will again be stated.

The reading clerk restated the amendment.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I think the purpose of the amendment offered is already covered in the bill, but I am willing to accept the amendment.

Mr. SIMMONS. No, Mr. President; the Senator is absolutely wrong about that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair must state that the Senator from Florida has the floor.

Mr. SIMMONS. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. TRAMMELL. I do.

Mr. EDGE. After the Senator from Florida has made any statement he desires to make, I desire to say just a word.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I may say that I had in mind another amendment. I was interrupted at the time the amendment was offered, and I thought it was another amendment.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I will state briefly the object of this amendment.

The section which the amendment seeks to amend provides as follows:

The corporation is further authorized, upon such terms as it may prescribe, to purchase, sell, or otherwise deal in debentures, promissory notes, or other obligations, adequately secured, issued by banking corporations organized under section 25(a) of the Federal Reserve act. No such promissory notes, debentures, or other obligations shall be purchased which have a maturity at the time of such purchase of more than five years.

Advances or purchases may be made under this section at any time prior to July 1, 1922.

The banking institutions to which reference is made are the international banks authorized under the Edge Act. The law authorizing the organization of these financial institutions does not restrict the power of the bank to financing or assisting in financing the exportation of domestic products to foreign countries. The law authorizing this character of banks gives the bank a wide scope of authority. The law itself places no specific restrictions upon the banks. The law, however, does provide that the Federal Reserve Board may make certain regulations to control their operations. The law authorizes the establishment of foreign branch banks. The law authorizes the banks to purchase stock in foreign corporations. It authorizes them, in other words, to carry on a general international banking business.

The substitute, as it applies to this character of banking institutions, authorizes the corporation to make advances and loans to them and to purchase their securities without placing any restriction whatever upon the authority of the Finance Corporation. The policy running through the entire bill is to restrict the aid that is afforded by the Finance Corporation to assisting in caring for the agricultural interests. In other words, it expressly provides in one section that advances may be made for the purpose of carrying agricultural products until they may be exported in an orderly manner, and in another section it provides for assistance for agricultural purposes; but nowhere in the bill, except in dealing with this character of banking institutions, is it the policy of the measure under consideration to give the Finance Corporation unlimited authority to deal with a financial situation in the way of advances, purchases, and so forth, as is true in regard to the particular section which I seek to amend.

My idea is that advances should be made to these banking institutions only primarily for the purpose of assisting in carrying on our export trade. Under the present law the Finance Corporation has the authority to assist in the exporting of both manufactured and agricultural products. This policy is continued by the pending measure. That authority is specifically provided in section 21 of the War Finance Corporation act, to which reference is made in the bill under consideration. So, if we are to afford relief to the agricultural interests, and if we are to continue the provision in regard to assisting in the exportation of agricultural and manufactured products as the law now authorizes under the said section 21 of the Finance Corporation act, and not go any further in the assistance given to these international banks, it is unquestionably proper that we should adopt a proviso to the effect that the help given shall be restricted to assistance for the purpose of financing the exportation of our domestic products to foreign countries; and it is for this reason that I propose the amendment.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, while I disagree with the Senator from Florida as to the practical possibilities under the so-called Edge law, under which the banks are incorporated—they are incorporated for the specific purpose, as defined in the act, of international banking, which in itself must mean credits for export, and from a practical standpoint there could be no other activity on the part of these banks but to furnish credit through taking over foreign securities for American exports, agricultural and manufactured products—at the same time, inasmuch as that is all the banks are doing, I can see no objection to the amendment the Senator has offered, although I am quite positive that it is unnecessary in the bill. I shall not, therefore, object to it.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, a little while ago I announced my opposition to the amendment; but I understand that an addition has been made to it which would remove my objection—that is, the addition to agricultural products of manufactured products. Am I correct about that?

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I do not seek to change the law in regard to that. The present law authorizes the War Finance Corporation to assist in the exportation of manufactured products and of agricultural products, so I really just repeat the law on that subject.

Mr. SIMMONS. But the Senator uses the words "agricultural or manufactured products"?

Mr. TRAMMELL. Oh, yes. I do not seek to repeal the law.

Mr. SIMMONS. With that change, Mr. President, I have no sort of objection. My objection went to this point—

Mr. TRAMMELL. I am not seeking to repeal the law which at the present time authorizes assistance to export manufactured products as well as agricultural products.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is exactly what I thought the amendment of the Senator as originally offered would have done, and that was the ground of my objection; but he has removed it.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I beg the Senator's pardon; I did not remove it, because I have not changed the amendment since it was introduced. It did not exist, to begin with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida.

On a division, the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, in behalf of the subcommittee, on page 3, line 3, after the word "person," to make it conform to an amendment already adopted, I move to insert the words "or association."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina offers an amendment, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The READING CLERK. On page 3, line 3, after the word "person," insert the words "or association."

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I see no objection to that amendment. I think it should be adopted.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, has the Senator considered the first paragraph, which defines "persons"?

Mr. SMITH. Yes; but we had used the words "or association of such persons," and the committee had agreed on putting in, after the word "person," the words "or association," so that there would be no confusion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, on page 3, line 6, after the words "not exceeding," I move to insert the words "1½ per cent in excess of." That is essential in order that they may do business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Carolina.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH. On page 3, lines 10 and 11, after the words "to any person," I move to strike out the comma and the words "Government, or subdivision of Government."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Carolina.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I desire to propose an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida offers an amendment, which the Secretary will read.

The READING CLERK. On page 3, following the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] heretofore, he proposes to add the following:

or which makes or has made an advance or advances to any producer for the purpose set forth in paragraph (a).

Mr. McNARY. Where does that come in?

The READING CLERK. The amendment heretofore offered by the Senator from Florida is on page 3, line 23, after the words "set forth." After the words "live stock" in said amendment the Senator proposes to add the following:

or which makes or has made an advance or advances to any producer for the purpose set forth in paragraph (a).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL].

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, what does it mean?

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I am glad to give my idea of what it means. A few moments ago we adopted an amendment proposed by me to paragraph (c), on page 3, line 23. That amendment provides that a producer's security, secured by a chattel mortgage or warehouse receipt held by a bank, is eligible in the hands of the banker as security on which a banker may obtain an advance from the War Finance Corporation.

The amendment which has been adopted provides the only method through which a banker can secure an advance upon a producer's security, as the other provisions of the measure restrict the privilege of obtaining an advance or a loan to dealers, those engaged in marketing, or through an association.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I would like to be courteous, but I can not yield during my 10 minutes, unless I am to have my time extended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator declines to yield.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I would like to be courteous, but I have only 10 minutes.

Mr. KELLOGG. All right; I do not press the request that the Senator shall yield.

Mr. TRAMMELL. The amendment heretofore agreed to provides, in other words, that a chattel mortgage held by a banker as security for a loan which he has made to a producer is eligible in the hands of the bank for use in getting an advance from the Finance Corporation. That is the only method provided by the bill by which a producer's security can be utilized by a banker for the purpose of getting an advance, unless the producer's security comes through the hands of a dealer, some one engaged in marketing, or through an association.

The amendment which I have just offered proposes that the producer's paper, held by a bank, upon which a bank has made a loan, shall give the bank the same privileges, as far as its availability and its eligibility are concerned, as to obtaining an advance from the War Finance Corporation, that the same security and paper in the hands of a dealer, or one engaged in marketing of these products, or if held by an association, would give it.

There is no reason in the world why you should say that a producer's security, held by a dealer, by those engaged in marketing, or by an association, shall be eligible as security for an advance by the War Finance Corporation, and upon the other hand take the position that the law shall preclude him from the privilege of having it used through the banks for the same identical purpose.

If you are going to force the producer to carry on his negotiations with dealers and those engaged in marketing, or else compel him to go through some farmers' organization, you are going to require the producer to pay an extra toll, and in many instances to go to unusual trouble in order to negotiate loans upon his products.

The orderly way to carry on the transaction is for the producer to go to the bank, to give the banker his security, and then for the banker holding that security to have that security made eligible as a security upon which he may obtain funds from the War Finance Corporation for this purpose. But if you leave the measure as it is, a producer who does not give a chattel mortgage to the bank can only negotiate a loan with a dealer, with a market agency, or through an association, and have the advantage of his paper being made eligible as a security upon which advances may be obtained by a bank from the War Finance Corporation.

The obligation of a producer held by a bank, subject to the same requirements in regard to security, pledges, and mortgages, as if that paper had come through the hands of a dealer, should be made eligible as a security upon which the bank can obtain advances from the War Finance Corporation. If you do not authorize that privilege, then you have discriminated against the producer, and you have discriminated against the banking institutions of this country.

By the provisions of the measure in its present form you say to the banker, "If a dealer comes to you with a producer's security you can make advances to that dealer, and then we, in turn, will make advances to you"; but if you leave the measure as it is, you say to the banker, "If a producer comes to you and obtains a loan upon security satisfactory to you, a security as good as if it had been handled through a dealer, then you can not take direct from the farmer his obligation and use that obligation as an eligible security upon which the War Finance Corporation can make you an advance."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Florida has expired.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, there is only one class of people who would be benefited by the adoption of the amendment which the Senator from Florida now proposes, and that is the speculator, the man who does nothing but speculate, the man who is not engaged in production, in marketing, or in exporting, because if he is engaged in marketing, or if he is engaged in exporting, he is taken care of under the provisions of subdivision (a), and if he is engaged in production, he is taken care of in the amendment already offered by the Senator from Florida, and which has been agreed to.

If the restrictions upon the exporter or upon the producer are greater than they should be, the fault is that of the Senator from Florida. He offered those restrictions in his amendment. I am frank to say that I would have been glad to support the amendment without those restrictions, putting them exactly upon the same basis as persons engaged in marketing or exporting. But the Senator suggested those restrictions. He is the one who has had the restrictions put in the bill, providing that there shall be security by chattel mortgage, warehouse receipt, or otherwise, and having secured that limitation from the producer, now the Senator proposes to allow the facilities of this section to a speculator, without any security. That is where the Senator from Florida gets to in his argument.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, of course I realize that the time is limited, but does "producer" mean "speculator"?

Mr. LENROOT. No; but the word is "purchaser."

Mr. TRAMMELL. The word is "producer."

Mr. LENROOT. The amendment reads, "or which makes or has made an advance or advances to any purchaser," and so forth.

Mr. TRAMMELL. It is "producer." That is merely a typographical error in the copy in the hand of the Senator. The amendment which I sent to the desk contains the word "producer." Of course, I did not propose to relieve any purchaser. Purchaser is not mentioned in the amendment in the hand of the clerk.

Mr. LENROOT. If it is "producer," what did the Senator mean by the amendment he has heretofore offered and which he secured the adoption of?

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, if the Senator wants me to be real frank, I thought I had better take two bites at the cherry. I thought I could get those classes of securities in first, and then probably with one step made in the interest of the producer we could bring in the farmer and the producer generally through the banks, as he should have been taken care of at first.

Mr. LENROOT. Does the Senator want to legislate by providing relief for a certain class of people under the very broadest restrictions and then himself write a provision in the bill applying to the same class of people without any restrictions? Is that the way the Senator from Florida proposes to legislate? I yield to him for an answer.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I realized that in offering the first amendment I had to conform more or less to the policy laid down by the committee in its amendment dealing with the question of chattel mortgages. The committee placed its own restrictions upon the producer's security by providing that only in exceptional cases the War Finance Corporation may purchase from banks obligations secured by chattel mortgages and by warehouse receipts. I felt that if the committee had seen proper to make that restriction in regard to the producer's security that there would be a disposition on the part of the committee to oppose a more liberal policy.

Mr. LENROOT. I can not yield further. I want to say to the Senator from Florida that if he desires to reach what he evidently does desire, he should ask unanimous consent for the reconsideration of the vote by which his other amendment was agreed to, that it should be defeated, and that this amendment should be adopted in its place. That is the only orderly way to reach this proposition. Certainly both of these should not go in. If the Senator's first amendment remains in the bill, this should be defeated.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, of course the last amendment I offered is broader and more extensive than the first and would embrace the first. My object in this effort has been to ultimately accomplish the purpose covered by the amendment now offered by me. If this amendment shall be adopted, then, of course, there will be no need of the other amendment and I would be agreeable to its elimination from the measure.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I am in sympathy with this amendment, and I ask unanimous consent that the vote by which the other amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida was agreed to may be reconsidered.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, that is agreeable to me. If this amendment can be agreed to, it will embrace the other one and go much further toward assisting the farmers and also the bankers.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Wisconsin? The Chair hears none, and the vote by which the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida was agreed to is reconsidered.

Mr. LENROOT. Now, in order to get the parliamentary situation clear, the Senator from Florida may withdraw the former amendment and offer the other one.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida withdraw the first amendment offered by him?

Mr. TRAMMELL. I do withdraw that amendment, Mr. President, and now I propose the amendment I last offered, on page 3, line 23, after the words "set forth," to strike out the period and insert the language I sent to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida offers an amendment, which the Secretary will read.

The READING CLERK. On page 3, line 23, after the words "set forth" and before the period, insert a comma and the words "or which makes or has made an advance or advances to any producer for the purpose set forth in paragraph (a)."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Florida to the amendment in the nature of a substitute.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LENROOT. I offer the amendment which I sent to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin offers an amendment, which the Secretary will read.

The READING CLERK. In the substitute, in line 21, page 5, after the word "made," insert the following:

The aggregate of any advances made to any bank, banker, or trust company shall not exceed the amount remaining unpaid of the advances made by such bank, banker, or trust company for purposes herein described.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, this is a limitation upon advances which may be made to the banks, so that they can not make advances of a greater amount than the banks themselves have made and remain unpaid for agricultural purposes. It is applying to section 24 the same limitation that is found in the bill with regard to section 22.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now recurs on the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY] as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there are no further amendments as in Committee of the Whole the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I have not been able to be in my seat during a considerable part of the deliberations on the bill, having been kept from the Senate by work on committee. I do not rise to oppose the enactment of the amendment in the nature of a substitute reported from the committee by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY]. It seems to be the consensus of opinion that something must be tried in the way of an experiment.

As the bill is now amended it probably has removed from it many of the dangers that characterized the original bill, and it probably will not result in any great loss to the Government, but I can not refrain from saying that in my judgment this apple of Sodom will turn to ashes upon the expectant lips of the farmers of the country. I hope it will not. I hope it will prove of great benefit, but the bill belongs to that class of legislation which undertakes to cure by statute an economic condition. Every attempt of that kind of which I know anything has ended in failure.

A few weeks ago, under whip and spur, we passed an emergency tariff bill the proponents of which informed us would bring immediate relief to all farmers of the United States. One of the most distinguished of the advocates of that measure told us that if we put a tariff of 35 cents a bushel on wheat it would send the price of wheat back to where it had been a year prior. If that had resulted, the price would have gone up $1.05, and we would have been presented with the miracle of a tariff of 35 cents a bushel raising the price $1.05 a bushel. Of course it would have followed that if the American price had gone up $1.05 a bushel the foreign producer of wheat could have shipped it to the American market and made 70 cents more than his former price after he had paid the tariff. The inevitable result would have been that all the wheat of Canada and all the wheat of the world would have started toward the American ports the next day after the price was raised and our markets would have been flooded and our prices would have gone to nothing.

But we did put upon the statute books the emergency tariff bill—with what result? I have not with me, because I had not expected to say a word here to-day, the figures as to all of the products named in that bill, but wheat went down 31 cents a bushel in 30 days. I do not know what it has been doing since. It is the old attempt to seek to control prices by statute. They can be controlled by statute to a degree when the goods must be imported into the United States, and particularly when there is a domestic quasi or total monopoly, but the law does not raise the price. The law simply enables some monopoly or some producer to raise the price. So the operation of the law is to deprive a free people of the right of a free market. But no statute has ever been passed that has created a dollar of wealth. Every honest dollar there is in the world is the product of honest toil. For all the real wealth of the world somebody's back has bent in labor, somebody's brow has poured out the sweat of exertion.

The bill, in my judgment, will do but little, if any, good, because the great question of prices, after all, is controlled by economic conditions of the world. I am speaking now of prices that are not artificially interfered with. We may get a little additional market for a few days or a few weeks in Europe through financing operations, but in the long run it will be found that people unable to buy can not buy and that people able to buy will buy without any attempt at artificial stimulus. We can not control the price levels of this great world.

There are some who believe that America is possessed of a kind of supernatural power, an attribute that can be ascribed to Divinity itself. The teeming millions of the world must feed themselves, must clothe themselves, and they must produce the money with which to pay for what they consume. So, hoping that the bill may do all that its proponents dream or think it will accomplish, I predict that, after all, the world must finance itself. If we could induce the world to return to honest dealing, to honest money, to honest production, if they would quit fighting and go to working, the problem that confronts the United States and confronts the world would be the more speedily solved.

Mr. RANDELL. Mr. President, I hold in my hand a bulletin gotten out by the Hibernia Bank & Trust Co., of New Orleans, of which Mr. Rudolph S. Hecht is president. Mr. Hecht, who is one of the ablest financiers of the South and a keen observer of current events, recently traveled extensively in Europe, and his observations, especially in regard to foreign exchange and exports, are embodied in this publication. Attached thereto is a brief address on international credits delivered by Sir Drummond Fraser at the world's cotton conference in Liverpool on the 14th of last June. There is also attached a short explanation of the British Government's credit-insurance plan. These all relate directly to the measure now before the Senate, are of the deepest interest, and I therefore ask permission to publish them without attempting further explanation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Louisiana? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

HOW EUROPE IS COMING BACK.

OBSERVATIONS MADE DURING A RECENT EUROPEAN TRIP.

[By R. S. Hecht, president Hibernia Bank & Trust Co., of New Orleans.]

"Two years have passed since the treaty of Versailles was signed. Volumes have been written and endless discussion has been had regarding the fate and destiny of the old and the new nations of Europe created by that historical document, but the great question as to how Europe is coming back still remains a subject of much uncertainty and speculation.

"Having been an interested student of this question since the day of the armistice, and having closely followed the written and oral discussions on the subject, I believed that a few weeks spent in the most important of these countries would enable me to come back with some very definite and clear-cut ideas about the present condition and future prospect of the economic, financial, and industrial life of the Old World.

"It was indeed most interesting, and, needless to say, highly instructive to meet and discuss international business questions with some of the European men of affairs, but withal I must confess that I have returned without being able to express any definite conclusions on some of the phases of the complicated situation in the new Europe.

"There are surface indications which, if accepted at their face value, would lead one to entirely different conclusions than those one is apt to reach upon careful investigation and close study of the fundamental conditions. One can travel through most of the countries of Europe and, with the exception of northern France and a part of Belgium, see the same smiling landscape, the same cleanliness and order, and the same busy farmers as ever. One can go to London, Paris, and even Berlin, and see the same gay life, the same activity, and even the same extravagance as before the war.

"And yet what a difference the war has made in the real people of Europe. What a revolution of thought, and what a changed attitude toward life is noticeable on every hand. Along with emperors, kings, and other noble titles which have gone on the scrap heap many other class distinctions have been wiped out or greatly modified, and a certain social revolution has taken place in practically all of the countries.

"The laboring man, who for more than four years laid out in the trenches in order—as one of England's leading statesmen put it—to 'make this a country fit for heroes to live in,' finally returned from the war feeling that, as he had proved himself to be a 'hero,' he was now entitled to his reward and to an immediate enlargement of his life. He therefore proceeded to dictate new terms to his employer, to society, and even to the Government itself. He demanded an entirely new relation between capital and labor, insisted on a greater voice in the management of industrial concerns, and last, but not least, an increased share of the earnings.

"It would lead too far to attempt a full discussion of these new phenomena in an article of this kind, but it may be stated as a fact that for a time labor did succeed in practically every country in Europe in forcing these new concessions—at least as long as the artificial prosperity which followed the war kept up—for employers felt it was better to make these concessions and thus preserve industrial peace in order to keep factories going and supply the urgent demand for goods. However, as soon as the inevitable slump in business followed the unhealthy boom conditions, the European labor situation underwent a complete change.

"Unemployment—the natural consequence of the world-wide business depression—became a serious problem in the countries of the victors and the vanquished. This problem had to be met by the Governments in a new way in order to avoid the danger of having the small minorities which showed communistic and bolshevistic tendencies obtain the upper hand, and, as a consequence, 'unemployment wages,' or subsidies, as one may prefer to call them, form to-day no inconsiderable part of the fearfully heavy expenditures of the European nations, and the prospects are that this burden will not be lifted for a long time to come.

"While I am forced to admit that these 'subsidies' were a necessary consequence of the war, I feel that the effect of this paternalistic attitude on the moral character and efficiency of labor is very bad, for there are many who really seem to prefer to draw this Government pay and do nothing, and who decline to work just as long as they can find a plausible excuse for the continuation of their 'pension.'

"During the war wages went up to artificially high figures, and the necessary process of readjustment is just about as painful in the European countries as it is with us. The facts are, however, that the size of the wages is not the only issue which has kept the industrial skies of Europe so gloomy for the past year or two. The demand of the workmen that they be given a more direct voice in the management of the business of which they consider themselves an essential part, finally had to be met in nearly all countries by the election of so-called workmen's committees, or Whitley councils, as they call them in England.

"At first it seemed almost impossible to the employer to manage and develop his business under such handicaps, especially as the personnel of these committees was made up largely from the most radical elements, and a succession of industrial conflicts followed. But, as is always the case, experience proved itself the greatest teacher, and many employers have now come to look upon these 'committees' as a really desirable means of working out a proper relationship between capital and labor, while the employees, on the other hand, have learned to realize that their best interests are served by electing as their representatives on these 'committees' not the radicals and the loudest talkers but their real leaders; i. e., the ablest and most intelligent amongst them.

"The consequence is that personal consultation between employers and representatives of the employed has become a well-established habit, and the causes of friction between them are ventilated and usually solved. In any event, it is much easier to familiarize such a 'committee' with the true conditions of trade in general and their special industry in particular than it would be to spread such economic information among the individual employees. The necessity for establishing reasonable minimum wage scales, to permit existence on a fair standard of living, is now generally recognized, and while two years ago even bank employees spoke a good deal of the 'communistic' idea that one man is as good as another, and insisted on practical equality of wages, they have already come to realize that we do not all possess equal ability, and that it is absolutely necessary to hold out a reward for exceptional skill and industry if we do not want to prevent progress and paralyze production.

"The European farmers as a class, especially in the countries with inflated currencies, have improved their general situation very much during the past several years, and many of them have been able to pay off the mortgages on their farms long before maturity. They are still getting good prices for their products, and of course the value of their land has gone up in about the same proportion that the currency of their country has declined.

"The people who have suffered the most in this social revolution of which I have been speaking are the middle classes and the people who were living on fixed incomes, especially those who depended on the interest from their principal, or an annuity or a pension.

"To use a practical illustration let us take the case of an old man in Germany who 10 years ago retired from business with a fortune of 200,000 marks, giving him an income of between 10,000 and 12,000 marks a year, and enabling him to live, if not in luxury, at least in splendid comfort. This man still has his 200,000 marks capital and he still gets the same income, but, as a matter of fact, he has lost about 90 per cent of it, because the intrinsic value of his capital has depreciated enormously, and 10,000 marks a year will not even buy the necessary food for his family.

"But such has ever been the result of expansion and inflation. The creditor who put out his money in normal times must suffer when the debtor can suddenly repay it to him in a period of inflation and depreciated money.

"The average business man has fared comparatively well, because until very recently business has been quite good in most lines, and whoever carried a stock of goods bought at prewar prices became rich because the value of his goods was steadily increasing. Of course, each country had, or perhaps I should say has, a liberal supply of profiteers who by fair means or foul became enormously rich out of the war and the era of wild speculation and fictitious prosperity which followed the armistice. But the effects of this extravagance and inflation have now spent themselves and the natural reaction in business and the consequent decline in prices has made itself felt in most of the countries.

"Like ourselves, our European cousins imagined themselves a great deal richer than they were, and for a time it really seemed as if all our past teachings in economics would prove to be false. During long years of war we proceeded to waste the capital of the world like spendthrifts, and still there seemed to be more wealth than ever, and apparently there was enough to make everybody happy and comfortable.

"No one seemed to realize how far we were drifting from the sound economic foundations upon which real prosperity must necessarily be built, and it was rather a rude awakening to find that much of the world's supposed wealth really consisted of the product of the printing press—i. e., the enormous quantities of paper money—and that the real purchasing power of the world was at a very low ebb. In other words, we found that the old economic laws are still at work, and that we must replenish the wealth of the world by economy, energy, and efficiency before any great volume of genuine demand for goods can be expected or any real prosperity can return.

"Needless to say the road back to normalcy will be hard and the process of readjustment a painful one, but it is high time for each nation to face the real facts and at least begin to put its house in order.

ENGLAND.

"Nowhere has the problem of bringing about this transition from the abnormal to normal conditions been tackled with more energy and success than in England. One by one the many post bellum problems are being solved, and never have English statesmen, bankers, and business men cooperated more closely than they do at the present time.

"The two internal problems which are troubling England most at this time are the Irish question and the labor situation. As the former is a political question, I prefer not to discuss it at all. The latter has already been touched upon in the previous pages. English labor is probably the most highly organized in the world, and the inevitable readjustment of the wage scale to the lower prices is therefore very hard to accomplish.

"The recent coal strike which lasted nearly three months was a severe test of the respective powers of endurance of capital and labor. This strike affected practically every industry in England, enormously increased unemployment, put the whole nation to great loss and inconvenience, and produced acute distress everywhere. However, each side felt that it had to go through to the bitter end, and a compromise was finally made possible only through the intervention of the Government, which provided a fund of £10,000,000 to be applied toward the equalization of wages under certain conditions.

"This settlement carried with it a very material reduction in the fixed wages of the miners, but gave them a certain contingent interest in the net profits of the mines. The settlement of this strike had a very wholesome effect on the entire labor situation in England, and will probably put an end to the campaign for the nationalization of the coal fields as well as to the agitation for State ownership of railroads.

"I seriously doubt, however, whether the profit-sharing scheme will work out successfully; first, because it will lead to eternal disputes as to what are profits and what are proper charges of operation, and besides they are trying to hold capital down to so low a return that initiative and speculative development of new coal properties will well-nigh cease.

"This may ultimately have serious consequences for England, because cheap coal and cheap labor have been her two chief industrial advantages in the past. A population of nearly 50,000,000 people living in so small a space as England constitutes a highly artificial community, and as the nation could not possibly feed itself without heavy imports it necessarily depends on its export trade to keep itself alive.

"The English are an energetic, capable people who have for centuries shown an unusual aptitude for the manufacture of certain products such as steel and cotton goods, and they do not have their equal as international traders and bankers. But, of course, one of the essentials of their success is that they must produce on as cheap a basis as other nations, and must be able to sell their goods at prices at which their customers can afford to buy.

"As in the United States, the recent export statistics in England show an appalling downward trend, and a nation that has been bred and fed on foreign trade can not view such an enormous shrinkage of its exports with equanimity.

"The European Continent has always been one of England's best markets, and, of course, its buying power has been tremendously reduced. The Government, recognizing the difficulties which English exporters naturally experience in dealing with the impoverished and the new countries of Europe, has just announced a new plan under which it will guarantee 85 per cent of the value of the invoices of British exporters covering shipments to practically all the European nations except Germany. Needless to say, this will give English exporters an enormous advantage in dealing with these countries, at least until such time as commercial credits again become normal and bankers and shippers in other nations are willing to assume equal risks on their own account.

"(This English 'credit insurance' plan was worked out on a very fair and scientific basis, and as we have recently had some agitation for similar legislation in this country, the full text of the regulations is printed in the succeeding pages under the heading of 'export credits'.)

"England is doing a fair volume of business with Germany, both in the occupied and unoccupied area, but it worries British business men not a little to see Germany go more and more out of the world's markets as a buyer and enter it more and more as a seller in competition with her former enemies. English bankers and business men also state quite frankly that they consider it a serious mistake to exact such enormous reparations in 'cash' from Germany, because Germany has not the gold, and can produce the cash only by enormous exports at low prices in competition with and to the detriment of the allied nations.

"They argue that France should insist on her reparations more in labor and materials and in commodities like coal, timber, sugar, potash, and other raw materials. They contend, and properly so, as I will illustrate under the heading of 'reparations,' that to insist on these payments in cash only means to compel Germany to underbid other nations in export business and thus force her to become a first-class industrial State again.

"On these questions the views of English business men are diametrically opposed to those of her neighbor and ally, France.

FRANCE.

"A visit to the devastated regions of France will easily explain why France should want to insist on collecting the largest possible indemnity from Germany. The sight of these battle-scarred sections is truly pathetic, and no one who has not been through these regions himself can possibly grasp the terrible meaning of this devastation.

"It will take years and untold billions of dollars to restore the damage, so far as it can ever be restored, but there appears no doubt that the economic structure of the country is perfectly sound and that she will be able to stand up under her burdens and realize the destiny which her brave fight entitles her to.

"France's debt is truly staggering, having already been very large before the war, and her national expenditures are far in excess of her income, and no serious effort has yet been made to balance her annual budgets. The deficiency has been met by the flotation of bond issues and by borrowings from the Bank of France which has tremendously increased its note issue.

"A very material increase in taxes seems inevitable, but this action has been steadily postponed, first, because it was uncertain to what extent the annual reparations payments would cover the deficit, and, secondly, because the political leaders felt that the economic struggle of the people should not at this time be made still harder by very high taxation.

"Of course, the consequence of this policy has been that inflation has continued and the difficulties of her exchange position are still almost as great as ever. Her foreign debt constitutes a heavy burden, and her interest obligations to England and to the United States alone will have a tendency to keep the value of her money from improving, especially as her income from the heavy foreign investments which she made in Russia, Turkey, and other countries has for the time being at least been entirely eliminated.

"In addition to these heavy interest payments, France must make enormous expenditures for pensions as well as for her large army and navy.

"Her imports still exceed her exports by a very large margin, and France feels that only by exacting the large cash reparation payments from Germany can she hope to make solid progress in mastering her difficulties.

"To England's suggestion that she should accept reparations largely in labor and materials for the rebuilding of the devastated sections, France frankly replies that she has already a considerable number of unemployed among her own nationals and therefore does not wish to import any foreign labor. Nor is the argument that she is forcing Germany to compete with her in her export trade a particularly convincing one for France, because in the past she really has never competed very much with Germany in the same classes of goods, and is therefore not so much afraid of having German industry outdo the French.

GERMANY.

"Notwithstanding the very serious problems facing the country, there are many surface indications in Germany pointing to a considerable measure of prosperity, but the prosperity stands on 'paper' legs.

"Take the banking situation, for instance. All of the banks have made very large profits and almost without exception have increased their dividends over the previous year. Their deposits have gone from 40,000,000,000 marks to 62,500,000,000 marks during the last year, but a very considerable percentage of this increase represents foreign balances. (One banker told me that before the war his institution had 700 accounts from America, whereas it now has 70,000 such accounts.) Much of this money is invested in 90-day treasury bills, which, of course, ties up the banks very closely with the Government.

"Prices of nearly everything continue to go up in Germany, partly owing to the continued depreciation of the paper mark and partly to an era of wild speculation, which is one of the forms of social demoralization following the war.

"Nearly everybody seems to gamble on the stock exchange in an effort to supplement his income, and, on the other hand, there is on the surface a good deal of extravagance on the part of those who have some money and feel they would rather spend it than have the Government take it away from them by the process of the ever-increasing burden of taxation.

"When the defeated army returned from the war and the Republic was still very young it looked for a time as if the bolshevistic idea might really get hold of the German laboring classes, and their efficiency was reduced to but a small fraction of the prewar basis. They did many abnormal things in their effort to forget that as a nation they would have to work harder than ever to bear the consequences of their defeat, and they tried desperately to escape that responsibility.

"But now the atmosphere has changed; they know the worst, and they have gone back to work with something like their former spirit. Germany rose to a condition of wealth as the result of her people's proverbial willingness to work. I think Germany 'will come back' as the result of the absolute necessity for hard work, and I believe her productive power will surprise the world within a very few years.

"In any event, her people are back at work, her factory wheels are started again, and if she can get sufficient coal and raw materials unemployment will soon cease to be a serious problem for the German Government, which still pays large sums in 'unemployment' wages, just as does England.

"It is generally admitted, even by France, that the present German Government, i. e., the Wirth cabinet, is the most sincere they have yet had, and there seems to be no doubt that they are making every effort to live up to the reparation agreement which they signed last May. I only fear that the Government does not have a sufficient majority to prevent another cabinet crisis in case the Upper Silesian question is not settled with reasonable satisfaction to Germany.

REPARATIONS.

"Of course, the all-important question in Germany to-day is, 'Can we pay these enormous sums?' There is an honest difference of opinion among her business men on the subject, some feeling it is impossible but all apparently agreeing that they must try. My own judgment is that Germany can pay and that she underestimates her own productive power in that respect. I would qualify this statement in only one respect; that is, she can pay if the world's markets are kept open to her. It, of course, requires no debate to establish the fact that Germany does not have the gold or other cash to make even a small part of her annual payments, but in the last analysis every large payment from one country to another resolves itself into a payment of goods.

"The reparation agreement signed last May provides that Germany must pay yearly 2,000,000,000 gold marks plus 25 per cent of the value of her total exports which it is estimated will increase her annual bill by more than another billion and when there is added the total amount of the occupation expenses Germany's annual outside liabilities will probably exceed 4,000,000,000 gold marks, which in her present depreciated currency means the staggering total of over 50,000,000,000 marks.

"How, then, can Germany raise this enormous amount each year? She does not have the gold and no one would accept her paper marks in settlement; first, because of their unstable value; and, secondly, because the printing and issuing of that much additional paper money would automatically reduce its value. Before the war Germany had colonies, foreign investments, a merchant marine, and ample means of getting credit if she needed it, to offset her balance of trade, but all these are gone now, and her only means of creating the balances necessary to pay her obligations is to export, export, export.

"Now, Germany never has been an exporter of raw materials on a very large scale, but rather a refiner and finisher of raw products which she had to import, and to pay for these imports she must further increase her exports over and above the amount required for the reparation payments.

"Of course, the German Government tries by every conceivable means to hold down the imports to the lowest possible figure, and makes it very difficult to get in luxuries of any kind. Then, too, the very drastic program of taxation will necessarily force a lower standard of living in the whole country and reduce the purchasing power of the people, thus not only decreasing imports but also reducing home consumption to such an extent as to make increased exports possible.

"Germany is required to export an enormous amount of coal which, in view of the large loss in total output through her loss of important producing territory, seriously weakens her national economy and makes the Silesian question so important for her. Potash which formed an important part of Germany's prewar exports has lost much of its importance in Germany's international trade, because the best fields were in Alsace Lorraine which now belongs to France. Sugar, which was another important export article, will probably not be produced in sufficient quantity to do more than take care of the home supply for many years.

"There remains only one way, therefore, for Germany to make her yearly settlements, and that is to furnish so many billion hours of work which German people can and must supply, and then ship the products of this labor to all parts of the world, in the shape of manufactured products.

"It is not difficult to foresee that this means a new, though peaceful, 'German danger,' and we must recognize that this very necessity for hard work will shortly make Germany's productive power greater than ever, and give the entente nations a degree of competition such as they never experienced before, and that at a time when foreign trade is already difficult enough on other grounds.

"Much will depend, of course, on the willingness of the German people to work and on the fluctuations in the value of the German mark. That Germany has gone back to work with a new will and determination is the opinion expressed by every observer I have talked with, and discouraging as the final outcome of the reparations' commission deliberations is to the nation as a whole, the individual worker and business man is beginning to look to the future, with more hope than any time since the armistice was signed.

"Germany has lost 7,000,000 people since 1914, of which 1,700,000 fell in the war and over 5,000,000 lived in territory lost to her under the terms of the treaty. As in every other country the length of the working day of the individual workman has been materially reduced, but there seems to be a genuine willingness to work and it is estimated that from 4,000,000 to 5,000,000 women have been added to the number of women employed in 1913. So that Germany's total productive power does not appear to have been seriously impaired.

"Of course, the question of whether the rest of the world can successfully compete with Germany depends not only on technical efficiency but also on the standard of living of her working people, and the size of the wages which they receive. Before the war a German workman receiving 8 marks a day was very well paid. A skilled mechanic now receives about 8 marks an hour, or 64 marks a day, which is just about a living wage, considering the purchasing power of the depreciated paper mark at home. Sixty-four marks based on the prewar exchange would be about $15. But figure this so-called 'living wage' into dollars at the present rate of exchange and you will find that the equivalent of this day's wages is just about 82 cents. The same class of workman in the United States of America receives about $8 a day, or nearly ten times as much. Could there be a more convincing example of how much the position of the foreign exchanges means to us in our export trade?

THE EXCHANGES.

"Time was when the subject of international exchange was regarded as a highly technical field, interesting only to a few bank men who made a specialty of it, and who in some mysterious way seemed to be able to make a little profit by buying and selling checks and drafts payable in foreign currencies, or by switching these balances around from one country to another by means of so-called arbitrage transactions. But all this was in the days when the currencies of the European nations and, for that matter, most of the moneys of the rest of the world, were on a gold basis. In those days the daily fluctuations in quotations were of negligible size and were based on such well-known seasonal causes that not even the exporter or importer had to pay much attention to these differences in quotations, and certainly they had no interest for the average American business man who was not directly concerned with export business.

"Perhaps the situation was very similar in Europe prior to the war, but it is astounding to see how really well posted the average person in the various European countries is on the subject of 'The Exchanges' to-day. In fact, the knowledge of the subject seems the greater, the lower the value of their home currency is. In Germany, for instance, where the depreciation of the exchange is the greatest, it is literally true that everybody in all classes of society talks about the 'Valuta,' or 'Exchange,' as if it were something to eat or to wear. The explanation for this higher knowledge is quite simple, however, because, as I will hereafter try to explain, the question of the 'exchanges' really does affect every German household in the most direct manner and the cost of what they eat and wear is daily affected by these fluctuations.

"It will not be easy to convince the average American that this problem also affects his welfare and prosperity, and that for his own sake he should make a careful study of the question and help in finding a solution. All that is fairly well known among our people to-day is that the dollar commands a big premium in every country in the world, and that looks like an unmixed blessing to the casual observer, especially if he happens to be a tourist and can get 12½ francs for his dollar, where he received only about 5 francs a few years ago, or when he gets 75 marks for a dollar that formerly brought only 4½ marks.

"The other side of the picture—that is, the effect which this state of the exchanges has on our American domestic and foreign business, is something which does not lie quite so much on the surface, and naturally requires much explanation.

"In spite of the temporary business depression which we are experiencing in the United States at this time, it is a fact that the whole world is heavily indebted to us and that it is becoming increasingly difficult to buy enough dollar exchange in the foreign countries to pay this indebtedness. Our transition from a debtor to a creditor nation has been so fast and the balance of trade annually accumulating in our favor during the past several years has been so great, that the demand for dollars has been so persistent as to drive its value to heights which none would have considered possible but a short time ago.

"But what is the consequence? Our foreign customers complain that we are making it impossible for them to pay us their debt without terrific losses to themselves and instinctively they blame us for this condition of affairs, which after all is but the effect of the immutable law of supply and demand. Of course, such raw materials as only we can furnish—cotton, for instance—and such foodstuffs as are absolutely essential to prevent starvation and suffering in foreign countries, will continue to move there, no matter what the exchanges may be, but when it comes to exports of less essential articles and especially those which other nations can supply in competition with us, our business will suffer in the same ratio as the value of the dollar abroad continues to climb.

"While in Coblenz I asked one of our American boys stationed there if he was not anxious to get back home. His answer was 'No; I don't want to leave here as long as my $30 a month produces over 2,000 marks on which I can live like a prince.' But this exchange question is a double-edged sword which cuts both ways. While we are busy building our tariff wall higher and higher this premium on our dollar tends to keep our goods out of foreign markets far more effectively than any protective tariff which the other nations might enforce against us. There is no more striking illustration of the disadvantages of a high premium on a country's exchange than the present situation of Switzerland, whose business is slowly dying as the result of the high value of the Swiss franc. Swiss chocolates were the favorite all over Europe, but to-day few people can afford to pay the high prices and domestic chocolates have largely taken their place in England, France, and Germany. Swiss hotels were always filled to capacity at this season, but this year they have been almost empty except for the American tourists, because travelers can get so much more for their money in other countries.

"Time was when these exchange differences could be overcome by shipments of gold, but that remedy is no longer effective, and the United States of America already owns about one-half of the total gold supply of the world. Other forms of correction will therefore have to be applied, if we do not want to lose all of the temporary advantage which we gained in international trade as the result of the war.

AMERICA'S POSITION.

"Politically we should undoubtedly keep out of European affairs, but whether we like it or not our financial and commercial welfare, and even our credit structure, is closely tied up with the fate of Europe. It is quite useless, therefore, to deny the necessity of interesting ourselves in the economic readjustments now being made abroad because the effect of the reparation settlements, the depreciation of foreign currencies, and the ultimate distribution of the raw materials of Europe will be felt very nearly as much by us as by the countries 3,000 miles away, because commercially speaking this is a very small world and we are a most essential part of it.

"The example I have already used comparing wages in Germany with those paid in America, based on present exchange rates, clearly illustrates the difficulty we are going to have in competing with a country whose currency has depreciated as much as has the German mark.

"Ordinary tariff measures will hardly be sufficient to cure this evil, and even the antidumping laws will be only partially effective. If cheap German goods are offered here, it does not mean that they are being 'dumped' below the cost of production. The low prices may be simply the result of converting 'cheap' German marks into 'dear' dollars. Clearly, this is a new factor in international trade and one we must be prepared to meet, for no matter what tariff rate we may fix, every further decline in the value of the mark will be reflected by lower offerings of German goods, and only a stabilized market in the foreign exchanges can prevent chaotic conditions in the world's foreign trade.

"Then, too, we must bear in mind that even if we succeed in passing tariff and antidumping laws which will keep these cheap goods out of our own country, we can not keep them out of the world's market, which, of course, means the keenest possible competition for the exporters of American manufactured goods.

"Already the value of our export trade has fallen off materially, and while the enormous decline in prices makes a real comparison difficult, the excess of our exports over imports is now quite small compared with the totals of the last several years.

"Other nations are working with feverish energy to recover the foreign markets in which we have gained a foothold since the war, and in order to compete we have to adopt the same progressive methods as they do. Our people must understand that foreign trade means more than just exporting our own goods; it must mean an interchange of goods, and where the balance is so largely in favor of one country as it is with us, it must also mean foreign credits and investments.

FOREIGN CREDITS.

"Most of the European nations will show an unfavorable balance of trade for many years to come, because their need for raw materials is very great. Also, the ever-increasing tariff wall which we are building here is making imports quite difficult. As already stated, gold shipments will no longer be practical, and we must remedy the situation by extending credits to these nations in one form or another.

"Bank credits to first-class commercial houses will, of course, facilitate the movement of goods to some extent, but they must necessarily be restricted both in time and in amount, and must be of a self-liquidating nature. What is needed are permanent investments in foreign enterprises and in Government obligations, and while we must necessarily use the utmost caution in matters of this kind, my judgment is that there is no doubt whatever of the recuperative power of the principal European nations.

"I am not underestimating the difficulties in the way of making such credits available, but I believe that the so-called 'Ter Meulen' plan, which was first suggested at the financial conference in Bruxelles, does point the way toward a safe solution, and I hope that we will hear more of this plan in the next few months.

"[Sir Drummond Fraser delivered a very interesting address explaining the Ter Meulen plan at the recent world cotton conference in Liverpool, and we are printing his remarks and the full text of the Ter Meulen plan in the succeeding pages under the heading, 'International Credits.']

"Certain it is that all of the European countries are interdependent, Germany not excluded, and that America can not long be prosperous unless Europe is also economically sound.

"Just at the moment we appear to feel the world-wide industrial depression somewhat more than the poorer nations, and strange as it may seem, the three nations which have had the minimum of inflation and whose exchange has the highest value, the United States of America, Japan, and Switzerland, are suffering more than those who have a depreciated currency and whose rising flood of paper money is temporarily at least driving prices higher and keeping superficial prosperity alive.

"Fundamentally, however, there is no nation in the world as safe and sound as our own, for, after all, we are about the only nation which is really self-contained.

"The world must have our cotton, our foodstuffs, and other raw products, and while we, of course, want to continue to develop our export trade in manufactured products, we do not depend on it to the same extent as all the other nations, for we have a population of over 100,000,000 people, which represents a sufficient buying power to keep most of our industries busy and prosperous.

"It will take some time yet to see us safely through the present period of readjustment, but we are certain to emerge from it in a safe and sound condition and economically and financially the leading nation of the world."

INTERNATIONAL CREDITS.

[Address delivered at the World's Cotton Conference, Liverpool, June 14, 1921, by Sir D. Drummond Fraser, K. B. E., M. Com.]

"The international credits scheme is the scheme of Mr. ter Meulen, adopted by the League of Nations at the Brussels conference in September, 1920, by means of which necessitous nations, with approved securities, may be enabled to finance essential imports.

"An international commission of bankers and business experts is to be appointed by the League of Nations, who shall have power to determine the gold value of the assets offered by the Governments of these countries. The Governments will then issue bonds to the gold value of their pledged assets which will be specifically secured by the revenue from these assets. These assigned assets will be so administered by the participating Governments or by the international commission that the bondholders should be secured against default or loss.

"The details and practical operation of the scheme can be obtained from my pamphlet, entitled 'International Credits' (published by Harrison & Sons, St. Martin's Lane, London, W. C., 2s. 6d., post free).

"The object of the scheme is the restoration of normal international credits required by importers in these European countries whose impoverished condition has rendered it impossible for them to obtain accommodation on reasonable terms in the open market. All Governments have misused credit for war purposes and have restricted the free exchange of goods from one country to another. This has caused a shortage of international credits for the movement of goods. These goods are held up in certain countries which are unable to sell them because the countries which require them are unable to pay. It is essential that additional credits be found and that Government interference with the movement of goods be stopped. This bureaucratic control and misuse of credit have engendered a diffused distrust, not only among the leaders of industry but also among the workers, which has caused industrial stagnation throughout the world.

"Many schemes have been propounded for the restoration of the confidence necessary to attract credit to impoverished countries. The outstanding solution is undoubtedly the Ter Meulen scheme, of which I have been appointed the organizer, and the text of which is hereby attached.

"The first step is for the Government of a distressed country to apply for the issue of bonds. It offers to the league a statement of its position. The league then asks for the assignment of a definite asset against the credits to be opened in favor of the importers. As a rule the trader would be a private individual, and the assets pledged by his Government to the league have to be made available to him for facilitating his imports. This is done by means of a bond, which the Government concerned has been authorized to issue for the approval transaction, to be used by the importer as a collateral security. These bonds are lent to the importer, and his Government may or may not take security from him for the loan of the bonds. These bonds then go to the exporter in a foreign country, where they will be held as a guarantee. When the importer pays for his goods the bonds will be returned to him intact, and he will hand them to his Government. Thus, all parties to the transaction are protected in a great measure against any risk or loss. The league is protected because it, of course, has the assigned assets of the Government which has issued the bonds. The Government can take security from the importer. The exporter holds bonds as a collateral security, whose service is assured by the assets held by the league. The advantages to the importer are obvious. He has secured the needed credit for himself and, for his country, that which is essential for the livelihood of its people. The transaction, moreover, has had a reflex action. It has released energy, which will stimulate activity, harder work, and therefore increased production, which, in its turn, will bring about the gradual reduction of inflation and improvement in the rate of exchange.

"The bonds will be payable, both as regards principal and interest, in the currency of the lending countries or in any other currency selected by the exporter. The revenue from the borrowing country will be utilized in paying the maturing bonds; in providing interest and sinking fund; and for the sale of bonds held against the debt of defaulters. Both the importer's Government and the individual exporter will use full discrimination in the choice of the importer. With this discrimination the necessity for selling the bonds should hardly ever arise. But should a default occur the exporter primarily offers the bond for sale for a fortnight to the borrowing Government before selling it on the market.

"The British Government has undertaken to guarantee its manufacturers against 85 per cent of the risk, if the foreign importers can put up satisfactory collateral security. The British Government has thus put the seal of official approval on the Ter Meulen bonds by recognizing them as 'satisfactory security.' These bonds will only be issued for essential imports.

The imports will stimulate the economic life of the country by creating a steady and accelerating flow of trade. They will help to restore distribution, without which production is valueless. And additional production will be determined by the capacity to sell that which is produced. It, therefore, remains with British exporters to benefit from this guarantee by arranging with importers of impoverished countries to adopt this method, thereby creating a demand for Ter Meulen bonds. If exporters who wish to take advantage of this scheme will impress on the foreign importer the fact that this scheme provides his best chance of obtaining facilities on reasonable terms they will be helping themselves toward the consummation of its inauguration.

"The political situation in Central Europe has caused economic paralysis. The old European countries are broken up into new, antagonistic political States. These States have erected trade barriers which, with the chaotic condition of transport, have brought international trading to a standstill. There are indications already that these are gradually being removed. But more is required than the mere removal of barriers. The budgets of the impoverished countries must be balanced, their currencies must be stabilized, and the business of the central bank freed from the control of the State before it will be safe to give them the extended credits upon which the new economic situation in Europe depends.

"These are the problems which the League of Nations was compelled to face in trying to apply the Ter Meulen scheme to Austria. The success which has attended the league's operations in Austria so far is by this time well known. And, though I give only my personal opinion, I feel sure that the league will not hesitate to respond to the desires of any country which needs assistance in its economic policy by the application of the international credits scheme.

"The application of the scheme will not demand any new machinery. It will merely lubricate the wheels of commerce until an organic revolving movement of exports and imports is once more attained. In each case the internal finances of the country will have the first consideration of the league, because the scheme does not allow the issue of bonds whose gold value can be questioned. It is this feature which differentiates the Ter Meulen scheme from all others. Personally, I believe that the day is not far distant when all the necessitous countries of Europe will be obliged to adopt this scheme of international credits, and that by its means the great work of reconstruction in Europe will have begun.

TEXT OF "TER MEULEN" SCHEME.

"I. In order that nations, which under present circumstances are unable to obtain accommodation on reasonable terms in the open market, may be able to command the confidence necessary to attract funds for the financing of their essential imports, an international commission shall be constituted under the auspices of the League of Nations.

"II. The commission shall be appointed by the council of the League of Nations and shall have discretion to appoint agents and subcommissioners and to devolve upon them the exercise of its functions.

"III. The Governments of countries desiring to participate shall notify to the commission what specific assets they are prepared to assign as security for commercial credits to be granted by the nationals of exporting countries.

"IV. The commission, after examination of these assets, shall determine the gold value of the credits which it would approve against the security of these assets.

"V. The participating Governments shall then be authorized to issue bonds to the gold value approved by the commission. The bonds shall be in such form, with such date of maturity and rate of interest, as the commission may decide, and shall in particular enumerate the assets pledged against the bonds. The denomination of each bond and the specific currency in which it is to be issued shall be determined by the participating Government in agreement with the commission in accordance with the conditions applicable to the particular transactions in respect of which they are issued.

"VI. The service of these bonds, which will be obligations of the issuing Government, shall be specifically secured out of the revenue of the assigned assets.

"VII. The assigned assets shall be administered by the participating Government or by the international commission, as a majority of the council of the League of Nations may determine, on the proposal of the international commission. Nevertheless in cases where the administration of the assigned assets is in the hands of the participating Government the international commission at any time may, and in the event of default shall, require the participating Government to transfer the administration of the assets to itself.

"The participating Government shall have the right of appeal to the council of the League of Nations against this requirement, and the decision of the council of the League of Nations on these questions shall be binding.

"VIII. The revenues from the assigned assets shall be applied as follows to the service of the bonds:

"(1) Out of these revenues the commission shall purchase and hold or the participating Government shall satisfy the commission that it has purchased and holds foreign currencies sufficient to provide—

"(a) Cover for the coupons falling due in the next year of all bonds at any time outstanding in each of such currencies.

"(b) A sinking fund calculated to redeem at maturity 10 per cent of the bonds outstanding in each of the different countries.

"(c) A reserve in such foreign currency or currencies as the international commission may determine for the redemption of any bonds sold in accordance with paragraph 16.

"(2) Any surplus remaining after the provision of these services shall be at the free disposal of the participating Government.

"IX. The participating Government will be free either to pledge its own bonds as collateral for credits for approved imports on its own account or to lend the bonds to its nationals as collateral for credits for improved imports on private account, and for the latter purpose will be free to fix such terms, including the security, if any, to be given, as it may think fit.

"These terms shall be communicated to the commission. The bonds shall not be used for any other purpose than those specified in this clause.

"X. Each bond shall, before issue, be countersigned by the commission in proof of registration.

"XI. The fundamental purpose of the new scheme being to facilitate and expedite the import of such raw materials and primary necessities as will enable the borrowing countries to reestablish production especially for export, bonds secured on the assigned assets shall not be utilized as collateral for credits for the import of other commodities, provided that where the commission is satisfied that the import of such other commodities will assist in securing the above purpose, it shall have the discretion to permit special exceptions to the above rule, subject to such conditions as it may think fit.

"XII. For such borrowing country the commission will draw up, in consultation with the participating Government, a schedule of approved imports which will be regarded as falling within the definition of raw materials and primary necessities.

"XIII. Particulars of each transaction must be registered with the commission, which, before countersigning a registered bond, will satisfy itself that the credit is for an approved import and that the period for which it is approved to be granted is a reasonable one.

"XIV. The same conditions as govern the pledge of its bonds as the collateral for credits for imports on private account shall apply in cases where the participating Government pledges its own bonds as collateral for imports on Government account.

"XV. After having received bonds duly countersigned, the importer will pledge them with the exporter.

"XVI. Pledged bonds shall be dealt with as follows:

"(a) In the absence of any failure by the importer to fulfill his contract with the exporter, the coupons on their due date and the bonds as they are released shall be returned to the importer, who shall return them to his Government forthwith.

"(b) In the event of the importer not fulfilling the terms of his contract, the exporter—or his assigns—may either hold the bonds until maturity or, if he prefers, he may at any time sell them in accordance with the laws and customs of his country, providing that, before the bonds are sold, a reasonable opportunity shall be given to the issuing Government to repurchase them by paying to the exporter the amount of his claim. The proceeds of such sale shall be applied by the exporter toward covering his claims against the importer. Any surplus not required for this purpose shall be accounted for by the exporter to the participating government.

"(c) Any coupons or bonds returned to the participating government or purchased by such government shall be forthwith canceled in accordance with the regulations to be prescribed by the international commission. Canceled bonds may subsequently, with the approval of the commission, be replaced by other bonds either in the same or in a different currency, in accordance with the conditions governing the original issue of bonds."

EXPORT CREDITS: EXTENDED FACILITIES.

An explanation of the British Government's "credit insurance" plan.
PART I. GUARANTEEING OF DRAFTS.

"1. In order to facilitate the resumption of the ordinary means whereby traders and others can obtain facilities from the bankers to enable them to finance their export trade, the Government is prepared under the following conditions to entertain proposals to guarantee drafts drawn against shipments of goods to the following countries:

"Finland, Latvia, Estonia, Lithuania, Poland, Czechoslovakia, Serb-Croat-Slovene State, Rumania, Georgia, Armenia, Bulgaria, Austria, Hungary.

"Any variations which may be made from time to time in the countries to which this scheme relates will be announced.

"2. Guaranties will only be granted in respect of goods wholly or partly produced or manufactured in the United Kingdom, including coal produced in the United Kingdom.

"3. Applications for guaranties should be made by the exporter to the Export Credits Department, 73 Basinghall Street, London, E. C. 2, on forms which may be obtained from the department. Applications should be submitted through the exporter's banker and the banker's recommendation should be attached. For the convenience of exporters, the department is prepared to receive and give a decision on applications in advance, a limit of time being stated within which the transaction will be completed.

"4. No application can be entertained from an alien or from a firm in which the majority of the partners are aliens, or from a company where British subjects do not form a majority of the directors, or where a majority of the voting power is not in the hands of British subjects.

"5. The guaranty will be given to an extent not exceeding 85 per cent of the total amount of the bill of exchange drawn against the shipment. The Export Credits Department will decide the proposition to be guaranteed in each case, taking into consideration relevant circumstances, such as current market values, the amount included as net profit, and the security offered by the importer.

6. The department will not require the bills to be accepted before guaranteeing them, but—

"(a) In cases where no security is to be deposited the department will require that the bills should be accompanied by a letter of guaranty from the importer's bank, which must be an approved bank, or by other satisfactory evidence, to the effect that they will be accepted.

"(b) In cases where security is to be deposited the department will require a letter of guaranty as aforesaid from the importer's bank to the effect that the bills will be accepted and that the stipulated security will be deposited immediately upon the first presentation of the documents to the importer.

"7. Recourse in event of default by the importer: The Government will have a first charge on all proceeds of the bill, and "(i) In cases where the importer puts up security deemed sufficient to cover the whole amount guaranteed, the Government will have no recourse against the exporter.

"(ii) In cases where the importer puts up security less than that deemed sufficient to cover the whole amount guaranteed, the Government will retain recourse against the exporter to the extent of half the difference between the amount guaranteed on the one hand, and on the other hand such amount, if any, as may be paid by the importer, plus the amount deemed to be covered by the security (or which the security eventually realizes, whichever is the greater).

"(iii) In cases where the importer puts up no security the Government will retain recourse against the exporter to the extent of half the difference between the amount guaranteed on the one hand, and on the other hand such amount, if any, as may be paid by the importer.

"8. Security: The following classes of securities will be considered for the purpose of the scheme:

"(a) Bonds issued in accordance with the international credits scheme of the League of Nations (so-called Ter Meulen bonds).

"(b) Deposit of currency coupled with an approved guaranty for the maintenance of the currency deposited to cover any decline in the rate of exchange. In certain cases the deposit of fixed amounts of currency might be accepted.

"(c) Deposit of approved produce, approved Government securities, or an approved banker's guaranty insuring due payment in sterling at maturity.

"(d) An undertaking by an approved British bank or British accepting house that the purchaser will find at maturity currency of the buying country to an agreed amount.

"(e) First charges on railways controlled by British companies and under repair, equipment, and reconstruction by them when the first charge is limited to the amount required to provide import of goods for those purposes.

"The export credits department will be prepared to consider other proposals as to security which may be put before them.

"9. The periods for which the bills to be guaranteed are drawn will be a matter of arrangement, and arrangements may also be made for renewals.

"10. The department will fix and charge premiums to defray the expenses of the department and to form a fund to meet losses.

"11. As soon as the bills have been finally liquidated and the liability of the department is brought to an end, the security lodged will be returned to the importer. In the event of default, the department may cause the necessary steps to be taken to realize the security or to hold the same, as may be deemed expedient.

"The department will be at liberty to require the exporter to take such steps as the department may think necessary to realize the security and to enforce payment by the importers.

PART II. PARTICIPATION WITH BRITISH BANKS, BANKING HOUSES, CREDIT ASSOCIATIONS, ETC.

"1. In addition to the foregoing method of granting guaranties to individual exporters, His Majesty's Government are prepared under the following conditions to make arrangements with approved banks or banking houses or credit associations for participation in any loss incurred by such banks, banking houses, or credit associations in respect of transactions carried through by them for exporters in the United Kingdom to the countries named in clause (1) of part I.

"2. His Majesty's Government, in consideration of an agreed premium, will take a share not exceeding 70 per cent of any loss-incurred transactions, provided that the transactions comply with the conditions as to the nature of goods and nationality of exporters or exporting firms prescribed in part I. The export credits department will arrange with any approved bank, banking house, or credit association, which may apply for participation in this scheme, the total amount in each case up to which this undertaking would be given.

"3. Application should be made by exporters direct to the bank, banking house, or credit association concerned."

[NOTE.—The scheme at present in operation for the grant of advances in accordance with the conditions dated 1st December, 1920, will remain in force until further notice.]

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment was concurred in.

MR. HARRIS. Mr. President, the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] does not think the bill will accomplish very much. I do not know the conditions in his State, but I do know them in my own State, and I believe a measure has never passed Congress that will give greater relief to the farmers and merchants and bankers of the country.

The amendment directing the War Finance Corporation to loan the farm loan bank $100,000,000 will help our people a great deal. Some weeks ago I introduced a bill requiring the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase $200,000,000 of these bonds to loan to the farmers. Members of the House from my State had introduced the same bill. The legislature of my State the other day adopted a resolution unanimously urging Congress to pass this very legislation.

Last year the farmers in my State spent three times as much to produce the cotton crop as they realized from it, or would have realized from it if they had been able to dispose of it. The banks are holding farmers' notes and mortgages which were given to pay losses on their crops. Many of them can not pay themselves out of debt for several years. They are obliged to borrow money from loan companies or the farm loan bank, and this measure will give them great relief. It will relieve the banker, and it will enable him to accommodate the merchant and the farmer. I think the legislation will prove to be one of the most useful things that this Congress has done for the people of the United States.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The bill as passed is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That when used in this act the term "person" includes partnerships, corporations, and associations, as well as individuals.

SEC. 2. That section 1 of the War Finance Corporation act, approved April 5, 1918, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"That the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of Agriculture, and four additional persons (who shall be the directors first appointed as hereinafter provided) are hereby created a body corporate and politic in deed and in law by the name, style, and title of the War Finance Corporation (herein called the corporation), and shall have succession for a period of 10 years: Provided, That except as otherwise provided by this amendatory act the corporation shall not exercise any of the powers conferred by this act except such as are incidental to the liquidation of its assets and the winding up of its affairs, after six months after the termination of the war, the date of such termination to be fixed by proclamation of the President of the United States."

Sec. 3. The War Finance Corporation act, approved April 5, 1918, as amended, is amended by adding after section 21 thereof the following new sections:

"Sec. 22. Whenever the board of directors of the corporation shall be of the opinion that conditions arising out of the war, or out of the disruption of foreign trade created by the war, have resulted in or may result in an abnormal surplus accumulation of any staple agricultural product of the United States and that the ordinary banking facilities are inadequate to enable producers of or dealers in such products to carry them until they can be exported or sold for export in an orderly manner, the corporation shall thereupon be empowered to make advances, for periods not exceeding one year from the respective dates of such advances, upon such terms, not inconsistent with this act, as it may determine:

"(a) To any person engaged in the United States in dealing in, or marketing any such products, or to any association composed of persons engaged in producing such products, for the purpose of assisting such person or association to carry such products until they can be exported or sold for export in an orderly manner. Any such advance shall bear interest at a rate not exceeding 1½ per cent in excess of the rate of discount for 90-day commercial paper prevailing at the Federal reserve bank of the district in which the borrower is located at the time when such advance is made;

"(b) To any person without the United States purchasing such products, but in no case shall any of the money so advanced be expended without the United States. Every such advance shall be secured by adequate security of such character as shall be prescribed by the board of directors of the corporation. The rate of interest charged on any such advance shall be determined by the board of directors. The corporation shall retain power to recall an advance or require additional security at any time.

"(c) To any bank, banker, or trust company in the United States which makes or has made an advance or advances to any such person as is described in paragraph (a) of this section for the purpose therein set forth, or which makes or has made an advance or advances to any producer for the purpose set forth in paragraph (a). The aggregate of advances made to any bank, banker, or trust company shall not exceed the amount remaining unpaid of the advances made by such bank, banker, or trust company for purposes herein described. Such advances shall bear interest at the rates fixed by the corporation.

"Sec. 23. Notwithstanding the limitation of section 1, the advances provided for by section 21 and section 22 of this act may be made until July 1, 1922. The corporation may from time to time extend the time of payment of any such advance or advances through renewals, substitution of new obligations, or otherwise, but the time for the payment of any advance made under authority of section 21 shall not be extended beyond five years from the date upon which such advance was originally made, and the time for the payment of any advance made under authority of section 22 shall not be extended beyond two years from the date upon which such advance was originally made.

"All advances made under section 21 or under section 22 of this act shall be made against the promissory note or notes or other instrument or instruments in writing imposing on the borrower a primary and unconditional obligation to repay the advance at maturity, with interest as stipulated therein, with full and adequate security in each instance by indorsement, guaranty, pledge, or otherwise. The corporation shall retain the power to require additional security at any time.

"Sec. 24. Whenever in the opinion of the board of directors of the corporation the public interest may require it, the corporation shall be authorized and empowered to make advances upon such terms not inconsistent with this act as it may determine to any bank, banker, or trust company in the United States which may have made advances for agricultural purposes, including the breeding, raising, fattening, and marketing of live stock. Such advance or advances may be made upon the promissory note or notes, or other instrument or instruments, in such form as to impose on the borrowing bank, banker, or trust company a primary and unconditional obligation to repay the advance at maturity with interest as stipulated therein, and shall be fully and adequately secured in each instance by indorsement, guaranty, pledge, or otherwise. Such advances may be made for a period not exceeding one year, and the corporation may from time to time extend the time of payment of any such advance through renewals, substitution of new obligations, or otherwise, but the time for the payment of any such advance shall not be extended beyond two years from the date upon which such advance was originally made. The aggregate of any advances made to any bank, banker, or trust company shall not exceed the amount remaining unpaid of the advances made by such bank, banker, or trust company, for purposes herein described.

"The corporation may, in exceptional cases, upon such terms not inconsistent with this act as it may determine, purchase from domestic banks, bankers, or trust companies, notes, drafts, bills of exchange, or other instruments of indebtedness secured by chattel mortgages, warehouse receipts, bills of lading, or other instruments in writing conveying or securing marketable title to staple agricultural products, including live stock. The corporation may from time to time, upon like security, extend the time of payment of any note, draft, bill of exchange, or other instrument acquired under this section, but the time for the payment of any such note, draft, bill of exchange, or other instrument shall not be extended beyond two years from the date upon which such note, draft, bill of exchange, or other instrument was acquired by the corporation. The corporation is further authorized, upon such terms as it may prescribe, to purchase, sell, or otherwise deal in debentures, promissory notes, or other obligations, adequately secured, issued by banking corporations organized under section 25 (a) of the Federal reserve act: Provided, That no purchase of debentures, promissory notes, or other obligations of the said banking corporation shall be made nor any loan or advance be made to said banking corporations except for the purpose of assisting the said banking corporations in financing the exportation of agricultural and manufactured products from the United States to foreign countries. No such promissory notes, debentures, or other obligations shall be purchased which have a maturity at the time of such purchase of more than five years.

"Advances or purchases may be made under this section at any time prior to July 1, 1922."

Sec. 25. (a) The corporation shall have power and is authorized and empowered, upon request therefor by the Federal Farm Loan Board, created by the Federal farm loan act approved July 17, 1916, as amended, to make advances to Federal land banks, at a rate of interest not exceeding the rate of interest charged by Federal land banks for loans under the provisions of such Federal farm loan act, as amended, and to accept as security therefor farm loan bonds issued by such Federal land banks maturing within five years of the date of issue, or to purchase such bonds from the capital, earnings, reserve fund, or other assets of such corporation to the amount of $100,000,000 during the calendar year ending December 31, 1921, and $100,000,000 during the calendar year ending December 31, 1922.

(b) Every Federal land bank shall have power, subject to the provisions, limitations, and requirements of the Federal farm loan act approved July 17, 1916, as amended, and of this section, to receive and pay interest upon such advances, to issue farm loan bonds as security therefor, to issue and sell farm loan bonds, to buy the same for its own account at any time, and to retire any or all of such bonds at or before maturity.

"Sec. 25. The aggregate amount of all advances made under sections 21, 22, and 24, and all notes, drafts, bills of exchange, or other securities purchased under section 24 remaining unpaid, shall not at any one time exceed $1,000,000,000.

"Sec. 26. The corporation is empowered and authorized to investigate upon its own initiative or in cooperation with other governmental agencies foreign market conditions and to advise where disposition may be advantageously made of such agricultural products.

"Sec. 27. Whenever in this act the words 'bank, banker, or trust company' are used, they shall be deemed to include any reputable and responsible financing institution with resources adequate to the undertaking contemplated.

"Sec. 28. In order to enable the corporation to carry out the purposes of this act, the Comptroller of the Currency is hereby authorized to furnish to the corporation for its confidential use such reports, records, or other information as he may have available relating to financial condition of national banks to which the corporation has made or contemplates making advances, and to make, through his examiners, for the confidential use of the corporation, examinations of banks, bankers, or trust companies, other than national banks, to which the corporation has made or contemplates making advances: Provided, That no such examination shall be made without the consent of such bank, banker, or trust company.

"Sec. 29. No person, bank, banker, or trust company receiving money under the provisions of this act shall loan such money at a rate of interest greater than 2 per cent per annum in excess of the rate of interest charged or received by the corporation upon such money.

"Sec. 4. Section 21, of the War Finance Corporation act, is hereby amended by striking out paragraphs (b) and (c) thereof, and by striking out at the beginning of the first paragraph the letter (a).

"Sec. 5. The first paragraph of section 12 of the War Finance Corporation act is hereby amended and reenacted to read as follows:

"Sec. 12. That the corporation shall be empowered and authorized to issue and have outstanding at any one time its notes or bonds in an amount aggregating not more than four times its paid-in capital, such notes or bonds to mature not less than six months nor more than five years from the respective dates of issue, and may be redeemable before maturity at the option of the corporation, as may be stipulated in such notes or bonds, and to bear such rate or rates of interest as may be determined by the board of directors, but such rate or rates of interest shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury. Such notes or bonds shall have a first and paramount floating charge on all the assets of the corporation, and the corporation shall not at any time mortgage or pledge any of its assets. Such notes or bonds may be issued at not less than par in payment of any advances authorized by this title, or may be offered for sale publicly or to any individual, firm, corporation, or association, at such price or prices as the board of directors, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may determine."

The power of the corporation to issue notes or bonds may be exercised at any time prior to January 1, 1927, but no notes or bonds shall mature later than July 1, 1927.

Sec. 6. Paragraph 1 of section 13 of the War Finance Corporation act is hereby amended and reenacted to read as follows:

"That the Federal reserve banks shall be authorized, subject to the maturity limitations of the Federal Reserve act and to regulations of the Federal Reserve Board, to discount the direct obligations of member banks secured by such notes or bonds of the corporation and to rediscount notes or other negotiable instruments secured by such notes or bonds and indorsed by a member bank. Discounts or rediscounts under this section shall be at an interest rate equal to the prevailing rate for eligible commercial paper or corresponding maturities."

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to amend the War Finance Corporation act, approved April 5, 1918, to provide relief for producers of and dealers in agricultural products, and for other purposes."

AMENDMENT OF NATIONAL PROHIBITION ACT.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7294) an act supplemental to the national prohibition act.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. STERLING. I yield.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I merely desire to say that so far as I am concerned I have no objection to the bill being taken up as the next one for consideration in the Senate, provided that we can have an understanding, perhaps, with the sponsors of this remarkable measure that we shall adjourn at the conclusion of the business to-day, in order that there may be a morning hour, and a chance, at least, then to take up until 2 o'clock to-morrow and on legislative days following some bills which are upon the calendar and which are of considerable importance. In this connection I may make the observation that nearly three weeks have gone by since the Senate has devoted any attention to the calendar. I should like such an understanding with the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, if the Senator from New York will withdraw his remarks in regard to this being a very remarkable bill and all that, I do not think I shall have any objection to the arrangement which he suggests.

Mr. WADSWORTH. With certain mental reservations, I withdraw the epithet.

Mr. JOHNSON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gooding	McCumber	Spencer
Ball	Harrell	McKellar	Stanfield
Brandegee	Harris	McLean	Stanley
Broussard	Heflin	McNary	Sterling
Bursum	Hitchcock	Moses	Sutherland
Calder	Johnson	Nelson	Swanson
Cameron	Jones, Wash.	Nicholson	Townsend
Capper	Kellogg	Norbeck	Trammell
Caraway	Kenyon	Oddie	Wadsworth
Culberson	Keyes	Overman	Warren
Curtis	Knox	Pomerene	Watson, Ga.
Dial	Ladd	Ransdell	Watson, Ind.
Dillingham	La Follette	Reed	Weller
Ernst	Lenroot	Sheppard	Willis
Fernald	Lodge	Simmons
Fletcher	McCormick	Smith

Mr. CURTIS. I am requested to announce that the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] is absent on official business. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-two Senators having responded to their names, a quorum is present. The question is on the motion of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7294) supplemental to the national prohibition act.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

Mr. STERLING obtained the floor.

THE MEAT-PACKING INDUSTRY—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. KENYON. I ask the Senator from South Dakota if he will not yield for a moment or so in order that the conference report on the so-called packers' bill may be considered? The report has been presented, and I do not believe it will lead to much discussion. I should like to have it disposed of.

Mr. STERLING. The Senator from Iowa asks me to yield "for a moment or so." If that is all that is necessary, if it is not necessary for me to yield too long, and if the Senator expects to dispose of the conference report in a few moments, I shall yield for that purpose, but I should not want to yield for extended discussion.

Mr. KENYON. If the consideration of the conference report leads to extended discussion, I will, of course, withdraw the request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa asks unanimous consent for the consideration of the conference report on the packers' bill. Is there objection?

Mr. FERNALD. What was the request, Mr. President?

Mr. KENYON. My request is that the conference report on the packers' bill may be taken up if there is no objection.

Mr. FERNALD. I have no objection to the consideration of the report at this time, but I simply wish to make a few remarks on it.

Mr. KENYON. I should like to have the order made that the conference report is taken up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Iowa for unanimous consent for the consideration of the conference report on the packers' bill?

Mr. NELSON. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside for the purpose desired by the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. KENYON. If that is necessary, I ask that that may be done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] that before the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] may be recognized to make his request for unanimous consent the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] must consent that the bill he has in charge may be temporarily laid aside. The Chair understood that the Senator from South Dakota had consented that that be done.

Mr. STERLING. That was the consent given.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Iowa?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6320) to regulate interstate and foreign commerce in live stock, live-stock products, dairy products, poultry, poultry products, and eggs, and for other purposes.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, all I have to say is this: The Senate conferees were compelled to recede on every amendment to this bill except three. The amendments from which the House receded are amendment numbered 16, giving the right to the Secretary of Agriculture to request the Federal Trade Commission to "make investigations and report in any case"; amendment numbered 17, which provides that the Secretary may make rules and regulations; and amendment numbered 15, which is not an important amendment. As it was a question merely of acceding to the demands of the House conferees or securing no legislation, we did not feel warranted in such insistence as would bring about the failure of all legislation. Amendment 16 gives to the Federal Trade Commission the right to make investigations and reports when requested to do so by the Secretary of Agriculture. It does not, as I understand it, permit the making of orders, although there is dispute as to that proposition.

Mr. FERNALD. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. KENYON. I am through.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine is recognized.

Mr. FERNALD. I merely wish to make an inquiry of the Senator from Iowa in regard to the provisions of this so-called packers' bill. It seems to me that it is quite rightly named the packers' bill, for I recall that in the discussion of the bill in the Senate some weeks ago the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], my distinguished seat mate, made a very illuminating and intelligent speech on the bill, during the course of which he held in his hand a copy of the bill and said that seven provisions of the bill were written in it in the handwriting of the packers' attorney. I merely want to inquire of the Senator if those seven provisions remain in the bill?

Mr. KENYON. I should like to inquire of the Senator if that is the reason he voted against the bill—because of the fact that it was claimed to be a packers' bill?

Mr. FERNALD. There are a great many reasons that induced me to vote against the bill.

Mr. KENYON. I will answer the Senator's question. I think most of the provisions referred to by the Senator have been left in the bill. I will say very frankly the bill does not suit me, but it is better than having the legislation fail.

Mr. FERNALD. Possibly I may be able to vote for it.

Mr. KENYON. With the seven packers' provisions in it?

Mr. MOSES. Perhaps the Senator from Maine can vote for it rather on the assurance that it does not suit the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. FERNALD. Perhaps my action may be more on that account.

Mr. KENYON. I thought that would be a strong argument with the Senator from Maine.

Mr. FERNALD. However, Mr. President, it seems to me that the Senate is going a long way in accepting a conference report presented by the conferees on a bill which is admittedly written by the attorney for the packers. I simply want to make that suggestion to the Senator.

Mr. KENYON. The Senator really does not mean that the bill is written by the attorney for the packers. I want to make the best defense I can of the House bill; I make it without much enthusiasm. The charge was made here that seven amendments had been written in the handwriting, I think the statement was, of some attorney for the packers. That charge was made at the time of debate here, but those provisions do not constitute the whole bill; there are a great many good things in the bill. I have no knowledge as to the claim of the packers' attorney writing any amendments to the House bill.

Mr. MOSES. The Senator should not overlook the fact that seven is a mystical number.

Mr. FERNALD. Mr. President, they were mentioned as being very effective amendments by my distinguished friend from Wisconsin, and I am willing to take his word for it. I merely want the people to know that we have indorsed the packers' bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the report.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I heard the Senator from Iowa, who is in charge of this report, make the statement that certain provisions of the Senate bill were eliminated, as I understood him, by the conferees, and that such action was taken on the insistence of the House conferees. I was not, however, able to hear what those provisions were.

Mr. KENYON. There were three of the Senate amendments retained. I spoke hastily concerning them because I did not want to take the time of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING]. I repeat, three amendments adopted by the Senate were retained in conference. On the remaining Senate amendments the Senate conferees were compelled to accede to the insistence of the House conferees or have the legislation fail.

Mr. POMERENE. What were those amendments?

Mr. KENYON. One gave the Secretary of Agriculture the right to establish rules and regulations of procedure, which is not an especially important amendment.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That was retained.

Mr. KENYON. That was retained, but I understood the Senator from Ohio to ask concerning the three amendments which were retained. Another, and an important one, is that which gives the Federal Trade Commission the power to make investigations when requested so to do by the Secretary of Agriculture. The House bill takes out of the Federal Trade Commission act all jurisdiction over the packers. In the Senate we put in an amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma to the effect I have indicated, and that amendment we held. The third amendment is rather an inconsequential one relating to the question of jurisdiction.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. KENYON. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. I wish to inquire of the Senator from Iowa if his amendment concerning publicity has been retained in the conference report?

Mr. KENYON. It has not been retained. The House conferees claimed that their provision as to publicity was fully as good as the Senate provision, and other arguments in favor of the House provision were made by them. As I have stated, the fundamental question got down to this, the bill having been in conference for a month, that either we should have no legislation at all or else accede practically to the House bill. The Senate voted for the House bill much against my desire, and consequently those of us who served on the conference committee on the part of the Senate felt that it was our duty not to thwart all legislation.

I desire to say that the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] refused to sign the conference report, feeling that the House bill took away too much power from the Federal Trade Commission.

Mr. POMERENE. Let me ask another question, if I may. The Senator has referred to the provisions that were retained. I have had no opportunity to examine the report, but I should like to know, in a word, what the important provisions were which were stricken out at the instance of the House conferees.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that the amendments in regard to publicity and what we termed uniform accounting were the two amendments that some of us considered very important. They are numbered 13 and 14. I ought to say, in fairness, that the House bill does provide that in specific instances investigations can be made and systems of accounting established. Our provision was for uniform accounting, so that the Secretary could establish rules and regulations without any particular complaint as to particular instances; but if the Senator will observe amendment No. 13, on page 24, he will see that it does in a way cover those questions. It is much better than nothing.

Mr. FERNALD. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator how much better than nothing this bill is.

Mr. KENYON. Considerably. I realize the sorrow that the Senator from Maine feels at being compelled to vote for any bill that has any packer stamp upon it, and I sympathize very deeply with him.

Mr. FERNALD. I dislike very much to vote for a bill that the packers themselves have written.

Mr. KENYON. Of course, the packers have not written the bill. I can not be put in the position of trying to defend the writing even of amendments by packer counsel.

Mr. FERNALD. As I remember, the Senator from Wisconsin stated that there were seven very important provisions.

Mr. KENYON. I am glad that the address of the Senator from Wisconsin made such a profound impression upon the Senator from Maine.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator, since he says this bill does not suit him at all—

Mr. KENYON. Oh, no; I do not mean to say that. The Senate bill was the one I was for. That suited me. We were defeated on a vote. I felt that it was our duty then to carry out the will of the Senate as best we could, and we have done that. It does not suit me, but it is far better than nothing; and it places in the hands of the Secretary of Agriculture powers from which, if they are fairly exercised, great good will come. As long as we have the present Secretary of Agriculture, I have great confidence that the bill will do good.

Mr. FLETCHER. Then I understand the Senator to say that the committee believes that this would be an improvement over the present law?

Mr. KENYON. Over the present condition of affairs—yes; very much of an improvement.

Mr. FLETCHER. The present laws give the Federal Trade Commission jurisdiction to inquire into these matters. That, I believe, is entirely taken away from them except as the Secretary of Agriculture may ask them to make such inquiry.

Mr. KENYON. I do not like that. I do not like any curtailment of their jurisdiction.

Mr. FLETCHER. I am afraid the Secretary of Agriculture will not call on the Federal Trade Commission, and I think that is a great weakness in this measure. I think it is a pity to take that jurisdiction away from the Federal Trade Commission.

Mr. KENYON. I think it is a great mistake; but the Senate voted that way, and the only salvation is that the Secretary of Agriculture can require the examination.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Iowa, for the purposes of the record, what the contention of the House conferees was—if he is privileged to state their contention—in connection with the amendment adopted by the Senate eliminating from the jurisdiction of the Secretary of Agriculture the regulation of horse markets and mule markets?

Let me remind the Senator and the Senate itself that the Senate voted to strike out "horses, mules, and goats." I think it did so upon the theory that the regulation of the sale and shipment of horses and mules was utterly apart from the problem which the proponents of the bill had in mind, namely, the marketing, sale, and distribution of food-producing animals and food products. My understanding is that the House conferees would not accept that Senate amendment, thereby insisting that the Secretary of Agriculture shall possess regulatory power over every horse-auction stable in the United States and every mule-sale stable in the United States. What was the contention—if the Senator feels free to answer the question—of the House on that matter? What was to be gained by imposing such a burden upon the Secretary of Agriculture?

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I am sorry that the House was not willing to accept the Senate amendment. I have discovered in conferences now that they are not free conferences any more between the House and the Senate. The Senate is the goat, not only in this amendment but in other conferences. Perhaps I ought not to discuss the subject in that way, but the conferees of the House fall back on their rules. They can not do anything because the rules require that it must go back for a vote. I do not think there is much harm in that amendment, even from the Senator's standpoint, because the things that are forbidden in the House bill would not likely be carried on by dealers in mules or by dealers in goats. We did not regard the amendment as so serious as perhaps the Senator from New York does. We have done the best we can. It was a question of doing as we did or failing in any legislation—that was the issue. The Senate can now accept it or reject it. It is up to the Senate for determination.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. REED. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. REED obtained the floor.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I think the "moment or so" for which I agreed to yield for the consideration of this conference report has more than expired, and I insist now on going on with the unfinished business.

Mr. KENYON. How many moments, I should like to inquire, is the Senator from Missouri going to speak on this matter? Will he not let us get through with it?

Mr. REED. I did not rise to obstruct the bill.

Mr. KENYON. Then let us vote.

Mr. REED. I rose to ask the Senate if it would not give us a record vote.

Mr. ASHURST. I think the Senator from Missouri is right about that.

Mr. REED. I want to be recorded against all this kind of socialistic legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri calls for the yeas and nays on the adoption of the conference report. Is the request seconded?

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DIAL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PHIPPS], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. FERNALD (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES]. Not knowing how he would vote on this matter, I withhold my vote for the present. If at liberty to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. McCORMICK (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK]. If he were present, he would vote as I intend to vote. Therefore I will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. REED (when his name was called). I have a pair, and I have not yet ascertained whether I can get a transfer. For the present I withhold my vote.

Mr. TRAMMELL (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT]. In his absence I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] and will vote. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CARAWAY (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. McKINLEY]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON], and will let my vote stand.

Mr. HARRISON. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS]. I understand that if he were present he would vote as I intend to vote, so I will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I have a pair with the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. LODGE (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] and will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW] and will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. McCUMBER. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], which I transfer to the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT], and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. REED. On this question I have been released by my pair. I vote "nay."

Mr. KENYON. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK]. If he were present he would vote "yea."

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH];

The Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS];

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN]; and

IMPORTATION OF WOOD PULP FROM CANADA.

The Presiding Officer laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 36) authorizing the appointment of a commission to confer with the Dominion Government or the provincial governments of Quebec, Ontario, and New Brunswick as to certain restrictive orders in council of the said Provinces relative to the exportation of pulp wood therefrom to the United States.

The amendments of the House were to strike out the preamble; on page 2, line 4, to strike out "requested" and insert "authorized"; on page 2, line 7, to strike out "or" and insert "also"; on page 2, line 7, to strike out "said" where it occurs the second time and insert "the"; on page 2, line 8, after "governments" to insert "thereof"; on page 3, line 4, to strike out "said" and insert "the"; on page 3, line 8, to strike out "said" and insert "the"; on page 3, line 12, to strike out "$50,000" and insert "$10,000"; and, on page 3, line 14, after "appropriated," to insert: " : Provided, however, That the members of the commission shall serve without compensation."

Amend the title so as to read:

Joint resolution authorizing the appointment of a commission to confer with the Dominion Government or the provincial governments thereof as to certain restrictive orders in council of the said Provinces relative to the exportation of pulp wood and paper therefrom to the United States.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendments. The only material amendment is one reducing the amount for the investigation to $10,000, and that is satisfactory to the Senate conferees.

Mr. BORAH. I understand there is an error to be corrected.

Mr. LODGE. There is a verbal error to be corrected in amendment numbered 6.

Mr. CURTIS. I had not been informed of that. I move that the Senate concur in all the amendments except amendment numbered 6.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate agree to the amendment of the House numbered 6 with an amendment as follows:

Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment, and on page 2, line 7, strike out the word "said" where it occurs the first time and insert the word "the."

The motion was agreed to.

JOINT COMMISSION OF AGRICULTURAL INQUIRY.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from South Dakota whether he will yield to me for just a moment to ask unanimous consent for the consideration of a House resolution extending the time for the final report of the Joint Commission of Agricultural Inquiry?

Mr. STERLING. I yield for that purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate a concurrent resolution from the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The Assistant Secretary read the concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 26), as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the time for the completion of the investigation by the Joint Commission of Agricultural Inquiry, created by Senate concurrent resolution No. 4, of the present session, and the filing of the report to Congress therein directed to be made be, and the same is hereby, extended to a date not later than the first Monday in January, 1922.

Mr. LENROOT. I ask that the resolution be concurred in.

The concurrent resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

AMENDMENT OF NATIONAL PROHIBITION ACT.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill H. R. 7294, an act supplemental to the national prohibition act.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I made a statement concerning this bill at the time it was first brought before the Senate. I was about to ask that it be read for action on the committee amendments, but I believe an order to that effect has already been made.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I am obliged to leave the Senate Chamber within a few minutes, and as I shall not be here tomorrow, I have asked the Senator from South Carolina if he will kindly permit me to talk at this time.

Mr. DIAL. I yield to the Senator gladly.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I shall send to the desk and ask to have printed and voted upon in due course an amendment to the pending bill. I shall read it, because I do not believe anybody else can. It is as follows:

That any officer, agent, or employee of the United States, or other person who, under color of claim that he is enforcing or is engaged in the enforcement of this act, or the act of which it is amendatory, willfully subjects or causes any person to be subjected to the deprivation of any rights, privileges, or immunities secured or guaranteed by the Constitution or laws of the United States, shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by imprisonment for a period of not more than five years or by a fine not exceeding $10,000, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

I desire to offer a few observations first upon the bill and then upon the amendment.

I do not know, Mr. President, whether either the Congress or the courts have longer much respect for the Constitution of the United States. We have gone so far from the old landmarks and the old canons of construction that it sometimes seems to me that the Constitution is about to be repealed by the process of legislative chicanery. Without right to regulate the affairs of the peoples of the States, in most important respects we usurp that right by appropriating the moneys of the United States upon condition that the States shall agree to abide by the rules and regulations of some Federal bureau. In effect, we control the affairs of the States in matters entirely without the purview of the Federal Government. We deliberately adopt an artifice for the purpose of taking over to ourselves a power which we well understand was never vested in the Federal Government.

We entirely disregard the fact that the very palladium of the Constitution itself is the Congress, and especially the Senate of the United States. The courts long ago laid down the rule that they will sustain any act of Congress if they can find any reasonable construction which will allow them to maintain its constitutionality. They do that upon the ground that the Congress, as the guardian of the Constitution, is to be presumed to have itself considered and weighed the effect of all the acts they may have made into laws. What I have said is merely by way of illustration of what we are now asked to do, and is not directly in point.

When the advocates of national prohibition came before Congress they told the Congress and the country that they were making war upon the saloon. The slogan was, "The saloon must go." It was solemnly asserted upon this floor, not once but scores of times, that there would be no attempt to interfere with the private rights of the citizen; that there was no contemplated invasion of the home; that the saloon and the business of selling liquors for beverage purposes was all that was contemplated and all that was desired.

Notwithstanding the paid agents of the propaganda, notwithstanding their powerful lobby, in my judgment they would never have been able to have secured the submission of an amendment which proposed to interfere with the rights of physicians to prescribe medicines for their patients.

It may be that I talk to the deaf ears of the adder and that nothing can reach the reason or arouse the sense of responsibility which ought to exist in Members of a body authorized to speak under the Constitution for a great Nation; but I venture, nevertheless, to once more call attention to the Constitution itself and to inquire whether Members here are willing to pass legislation which is clearly contrary to the spirit, if it be not in the very teeth of the constitutional amendment so recently adopted.

I want to call attention to that amendment and to the language of this bill. Bear in mind that this is a government of delegated powers, that all powers not expressly granted are reserved to the States and the peoples thereof; that the Federal Government is without power to pass a statute punishing murder or arson or larceny or any other crime committed within the borders of a State; that all those are questions for the State governments and must be punished in State courts under State laws.

That being the case, sir, when we come to construe any article of the Constitution or to test any law proposed to be enacted in pursuance thereof, we must find the authority for the enactment of that statute within the four corners of the constitutional provision which it is claimed gives authority for the statute. With that, by way of preliminary, I call attention to the language of the eighteenth amendment:

After one year from the ratification of this article the manufacture, sale, or transportation of intoxicating liquors within, the importation thereof into, or the exportation thereof from the United States and all territory subject to the jurisdiction thereof for beverage purposes is hereby prohibited.

The language of the Constitution prohibits the manufacture and sale for beverage purposes. It extends not one fraction of a shadow beyond the manufacture and sale and use of intoxicants for beverage purposes, and any use of intoxicating liquor which is not for beverage purposes has not been prohibited by the Constitution of the United States.

In view of that language of the Constitution let us examine the language of the bill. It provides:

That only spirituous and vinous liquor may be prescribed for medicinal purposes, and all permits to prescribe and prescriptions for any other liquor shall be void. No physician shall prescribe, nor shall any person sell or furnish on any prescription, any vinous liquor that contains more than 24 per cent of alcohol by volume.

Observe the language, that only spirituous and vinous liquors may be prescribed for medical purposes. In other words, the bill reads exactly as though its provisions were that beer, porter, ale, and similar liquors shall not be prescribed by any physician for the care of the sick. What has that to do with beverage purposes? By what stretch of the language of the Constitution can the proponents of the bill claim that the inhibition upon a doctor against the prescription of beer and porter and ale for sick people is a prescription for beverage purposes? It will strain the ingenuity of any court to find a line of reasoning which would justify this wrenching of the Constitution and the usurpation by the Congress of rights never granted to the Federal Government and never intended to be granted by the American people who adopted the Constitution.

Now, Mr. President, I do not wish to say anything harsh, but I do say that a man who thinks more of his prohibition proclivities and prejudices than he does of the Constitution which he swore before Almighty God he would sustain is a bad citizen and an unworthy member of the American Republic. The man who thinks that the prescription of a bottle of beer to a sick man or to an old lady who needs a tonic to keep her alive is a worse crime than the destruction of the Constitution of the United States has no conception of the American Government or of the sanctity of the Constitution of the United States. Of course, I do not apply those remarks to those who think they are acting within the Constitution, but I do apply them to all that class of men who are willing, in order to gain their point and to have their way, to override the Constitution and trample in the dust that sacred instrument which has protected the liberties of the American people since its adoption.

I know there are men who have apparently abandoned all restraint, who rush forward in pursuit of their favorite prejudice regardless of all consequences. There are men so constituted that they would destroy the very temple of liberty in order that they might realize a consummation of their extreme views. But I hope there are enough men in the Senate who understand and reflect the Constitution to say that prohibition against a doctor prescribing beer to a sick man or a sick woman is not within the language of the Constitution which prohibits the manufacture and sale for beverage purposes, and prohibits nothing else.

Mr. President, I did not vote for this constitutional amendment. I was not greatly interested, however, in the question of prohibition or nonprohibition. I regarded the question as one to be settled by the several States. I did not believe as to this proposition, as I did not believe in regard to another, that it was the business of the people of one State to seek to control the affairs of the people of another State. I believed that the people of the respective States could be trusted to govern their own affairs, and that the morals of Congress and of the Federal Government are no better than the morals of the States' general assemblies and of the States' governments. But the constitutional amendment was adopted.

I offered no opposition to the Volstead Act, extreme as it was; at least, I made no serious effort to obstruct its passage. I was willing then, and I am willing now, that we shall try out this prohibition question, that we shall test it thoroughly, and that after a thorough test, if it shall be proven a success and be acceptable to our people, it shall be permitted to remain. On the other hand, if it fills the country with illicit stills, if it floods the country with illicit whisky, as it is doing now, if it produces an army of spies and informers, if it proves detrimental to the welfare of the people, then in good time the people will demand its repeal.

But, sir, how any man can stand upon this floor and say that it was ever contemplated when this constitutional amendment was adopted that the word "beverage" could be so far wrenched from its natural meaning as to cover the prescription of a physician made in good faith to a sick person is beyond my ken or my powers of imagination. That will not make a bit of difference to the proponents of the bill, but it ought to make a difference to some of the Members of the Senate.

I wish to make just one further observation. I have offered this amendment in good faith. I shall probably not be here to press for its passage, because I am obliged to leave the city this evening, and the committee amendments have been called for and probably will consume the afternoon; but I hope that it will be pressed by some one, and I desire, if it can be obtained, a record vote. I desire to know whether the proponents of this legislation are willing or are not willing that men engaged in the enforcement of this prohibitory law shall violate with impunity the Constitution of the United States. I would like the Members of this body put on record, so that we will know how they stand. I would like to understand whether they are willing to refuse to vote for an amendment which proposes to punish a man who, under the color or pretense of enforcing law, shall violate the statutes of the United States or the Constitution itself.

There is a reason for this amendment. Men pretending to be officers of the Federal Government have invaded the homes of citizens without warrant. They have done it not only once but hundreds and I think I may say thousands of times. The right of castle, one of the most ancient rights of the Anglo-Saxon race, has been disregarded. The provision of the Constitution which declares that every person shall be immune against unreasonable searches and seizures and that no person or property shall be violated except upon warrant of law supported by open affirmation, that old provision essential to our liberty, has been trampled upon by men pretending to enforce the prohibitory law. They have stopped without warrant of law the citizen pursuing his peaceful course along the highways of the country. They have searched vehicles so often in utter violation of law and without a semblance of right that highwaymen have begun masquerading as prohibition officers, and under the pretext that they are authorized to halt the citizen driving along the road have proceeded to loot his vehicle, pick his pocket, and take his watch. These highwaymen pretend, and gain the ascendancy by the pretense, that they are prohibition officers. Individuals, some of them officers of the prohibition department, have come to the homes of citizens, in the absence of the head of the household—I beg pardon; I was referring to the man, but of course he is no longer the head—in the absence of the man of the house, and have forced their way in in the face of the protests of the good woman and have taken the property of the citizen.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President—

Mr. REED. In just a moment I shall conclude. They have haled the citizen to distant courts and put him to tremendous expense. The fact that the Supreme Court of the United States, following a long course of decisions, has declared such acts to be illegal and in violation of the rights of the citizen, has made no difference. The practice has been pursued until to-day we are confronted with the questions, shall the rights of the citizens be disregarded; shall their homes be invaded; shall the guarantees of the Constitution be trampled upon; or shall we pass a statute which will serve notice upon those who pretend to enforce this law or who actually enforce it that they must proceed in accordance with the forms of law in accordance with the tenets of the Constitution?

I want somebody to get a record vote on the amendment, for I desire to see how many Senators there are in the Senate who will have the temerity practically to say by their votes against the amendment that they are willing that the Constitution shall be disregarded; that they are willing that men shall proceed without warrants and without authority; that they are willing to destroy the very structure of our Government by the invasion of the ancient rights of the citizen merely that they may have their way.

Mr. President, I might speak much longer upon this question, but time forbids. I am proceeding by the courtesy of my good friend from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL], whom I very much thank.

PEND D'OREILLE RIVER BRIDGE, IDAHO.

Mr. DIAL obtained the floor.

Mr. CALDER. Will the Senator from South Carolina yield to me to report a bill from a committee?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. DIAL. I yield.

Mr. CALDER. From the Committee on Commerce, I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 7328) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Pend d'Oreille River, Bonner County, Idaho, at the Newport-Priest River Road crossing, Idaho, and I submit a report (No. 242) thereon.

There is an earnest desire for the passage of the bill, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration. If there is any objection, of course I will withdraw the request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Peter Young, of Priest River, Idaho, his legal representatives or assigns, is hereby authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Pend d'Oreille River, in Bonner County, Idaho, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, and at the Newport-Priest River Road crossing, Idaho, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONTRACTS FOR THE FUTURE DELIVERY OF GRAIN AND COTTON.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ODDIE in the chair). Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. DIAL. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I understand the Senator from South Carolina is about to discuss the cotton question and the relations of the stock exchange thereto and the necessity for certain legislation. I have discussed this question with the distinguished Senator sufficiently to know that he has a message on this subject to deliver to the Senate, and I think Senators ought to be here to hear it. Therefore, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Borah	Harris	Moses	Smoot
Broussard	Harrison	Nelson	Spencer
Bursum	Heflin	Nicholson	Stanley

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-one Senators having answered to their names, a quorum of the Senate is present.

CONTRACTS FOR FUTURE DELIVERY OF GRAIN AND COTTON.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I desire to get the Senate a little better acquainted with cotton, in the hope that we can have the present unjust cotton-futures contract law amended.

As far back as there is any record, history tells us that the people of the world clad themselves in fibers that were raised or grown in their respective countries. Spain, Syria, Palestine, Greece, and the other countries in that section of the world used wool. In the northern part of Europe hemp was used. In China and Japan silk was used. In India, as far back as there is any record, cotton was used. The impression now is that the production of cotton is confined principally to the Southern States, but that is a great mistake. There are records showing that over 3,000 years before Christ cotton goods were used. Herodotus wrote about cotton and Aristobulus, contemporary of Alexander the Great, mentions the cotton plant as a wool-bearing tree. Cotton is grown in India, in some parts of Russia, in Japan, in China, in Egypt, in Peru, and in Brazil and other parts of the world. We read in history where the mummies were wrapped in cotton goods away back 2,000 years before Christ. Josephus speaks of the staple. The Hindoos were expert weavers. Xerxes' army wore goods made out of cotton. When Columbus discovered this country he found the cotton stalk here. When Cortez discovered Mexico, in 1519, cotton was found there. Columbus found it in the West Indies. The colonies in this country grew cotton as far north as New Jersey. Before the Revolutionary War the colonists in Pennsylvania harvested enough cotton to supply the domestic demand. It was raised also in Maryland, and on down the coast.

It is very interesting to look at the growth of cotton. There was not much exported from the United States before 1794. It was used for domestic purposes here. In 1793 Eli Whitney invented the saw gin, and the first gin that was erected in the United States was erected by James Kinkaid in 1795 in Fairfield County, S. C. We are told by history that Wade Hampton, sr., ancestor of my friend and predecessor, Gen. Wade Hampton, in 1797 raised 600 bales of cotton on 600 acres around Columbia, S. C. Bales at that time were of 400 pounds, as I gather from reading the records.

In 1793 the Colonies exported 487,000 pounds. This amount increased to 1,600,000 pounds in 1794, immediately after the gin was invented. By 1796 production had risen to over 10,000,000 pounds. In the year 1790-91 the crop amounted to 5,000 bales. From that time forward the production in this country increased until 1859-60. The crop of that year amounted to 5,602,639 bales. During the Civil War the production decreased, the crop of 1865-66 amounting to only 2,501,921 bales. After that production increased until 1894 to 11,466,486 bales. This year the prediction is that we will make less than 8,000,000 bales. This is the smallest crop that has been raised since 1895. In that year there were 7,976,045 bales produced.

After the gin was invented we soon commenced to establish cotton mills in this country.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, would it interrupt the Senator if I should ask him a question?

Mr. DIAL. Not at all.

Mr. WILLIS. I am interested in obtaining some information about the production of sea-island cotton. Would it interrupt the Senator to give us some information about that, or has he already covered that in his remarks?

Mr. DIAL. No; I have not separated that from the rest of the cotton. I am just speaking of cotton generally.

Mr. WILLIS. Can the Senator give us that information?

Mr. DIAL. No; I can not.

Mr. WILLIS. Does the Senator know about the production of long-staple cotton, such as they are producing in the Southwest, which is to be an issue here soon, I understand, in connection with the tariff bill?

Mr. DIAL. Yes; the long-staple cotton which is intended to be protected here is grown principally in Arizona and in California. We do not raise very much of it in this country—possibly 100,000 bales, or something like that—and that is raised on irrigated land, and there is some particular reason for that. We do raise what we call long-staple cotton down on the coast on very rich land. Some of it is raised in South Carolina.

Mr. WILLIS. Is that what is called the sea-island cotton?

Mr. DIAL. The sea-island cotton; yes.

Mr. WILLIS. Does the Senator know whether the production of that cotton has increased or decreased in recent years?

Mr. DIAL. I think it varies considerably.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, if my colleague will allow me to answer the Senator's question, since the advent of the boll weevil it has decreased. It has not increased or decreased, but according to the statistics it has been practically wiped out.

Mr. DIAL. The first cotton mill built in the United States was built at Beverly, Mass., in 1787-88; and it was followed by others down the eastern shore in Connecticut and Rhode Island. Very shortly after that there was a small one built at Statesburg, S. C. This was not much of an industry down South, though, until about the time of the Civil War. At that time we commenced to build cotton mills, and to-day South Carolina manufactures about 700,000 bales of cotton. We will manufacture this year nearly as much as we will raise.

This is a very important matter to my section, and particularly to my State. Last year we were the second producing State in the Union. We raised more than either Georgia or North Carolina, each with about double the area of our State.

My complaint is against the practices that are followed by cotton exchanges. I am candid to say that the practice on the cotton exchanges never has been a proper practice, and the law that we now have on the statute books is an unjust law. It is a one-sided law. It amounts to confiscation of a large part of our crop.

Perhaps an explanation is due the Senate as to why I take such a bold stand as to say this. I do not arrogate to myself to know all about cotton; neither do I claim that my associates and all of my predecessors do or did not understand the business as well or better than I, but the practice of the exchanges just started wrong, and has continued wrong, and the law humored them and it started wrong. I do not know that anyone in particular is to blame, and I hope to show in the following remarks my reasons for taking so positive a position.

I was not born until during the Civil War. I am not here now trying to fight the Civil War over, nor am I offering any apologies or explanations. I mention that merely to show that that was the time when this unjust practice commenced. I have often said that the North freed the slaves, and then we turned around and reenslaved the darkies and enslaved ourselves by the production and method of marketing cotton. To be perfectly candid, I did not know that that was true until recently, but I felt that it was. I read now from the report of the United States Bureau of Corporations on cotton exchanges. To be perfectly frank, I am an optimist. I always believe that everybody is honest. I know that Congress is honest. It is going to do what is for the best interest of the whole people, if it understands what it is. I did not know how this practice of future dealing in cotton originated until some time ago. I was raised on a farm, own some little farms, and my whole surroundings have been connected with the farmers.

Briefly, on page 41 of this report, it says:

Before the Civil War the cotton business in New York was simply one form of the old-fashioned commission business, exactly like the business of handling molasses, sugar, hides, wool, country produce, and many other similar agricultural commodities.

The Civil War completely upset the regular conduct of the cotton business in New York, as just described. While it lasted there were, of course, no regular shipments of cotton to New York from the South, and the only source of supply consisted of lots of cotton which the Government from time to time got hold of through the capture of blockade runners or through confiscation in the South. Naturally, such lots of cotton could not be handled on a commission basis but had to be bought outright as a speculation. The huge profit made by some of those who bought this Government cotton was the real beginning of general speculation in cotton in this country. And the same thing happened across the water in Liverpool. The fierce demand and the uncertain and inadequate supply gave opportunities for vast and sudden profits, such as have never been seen before or since in connection with any commodity. And, curiously enough, it was out of this wild speculation of the time of the Civil War that the entire modern method of handling the cotton business was evolved, for, in their eagerness to get hold of cotton, speculators began to buy not only actual cotton on the spot in New York or Liverpool but "cotton to arrive," when they got wind of a lot of cotton on some ship destined for one or other of those ports. Here was the beginning of the system of trading in cotton futures, which has gradually revolutionized the whole cotton business in every root and branch, for certain very clever men, whose business was that of cotton merchants and not speculators, saw a way to make use of the extensive trading in contracts for "cotton to arrive" as a protection to themselves in their legitimate buying and selling of actual cotton.

It was two or three years after the Civil War that this new conception of the cotton business took shape in the mind of one of the most brilliant cotton merchants the world has ever known, the late Mr. John Rew, of Liverpool, whose firm is still in existence. In 1868 or 1869 Mr. Rew saw that the newly laid Atlantic cable made it possible for a cotton merchant in Liverpool to ascertain with unheard-of quickness the price at which actual cotton could be bought in the Southern States and the approximate date at which it could be shipped to England. He saw also that if the price that was being bid in Liverpool for "cotton to arrive" was high enough to enable him to buy the cotton in the South and sell contracts for this same "cotton to arrive" in Liverpool, two or three months later, he could enter into the transaction with entire safety, as when his cotton reached Liverpool he could either deliver it to the parties to whom he had sold the contracts or if some spinner was willing to pay a higher relative price than the holder of the contracts had agreed to pay he could buy back his contracts and sell the cotton to the spinner with the larger profit to himself.

The immediate and large success obtained by Mr. Rew in his new way of conducting the cotton business attracted the instant attention of the ablest cotton merchants both of Liverpool and New York; and when, a year or two later (in 1870 and 1871, respectively), the Liverpool Cotton Association and the New York Cotton Exchange were organized the best men in the trade had adopted the new scheme as the basis of their business. Already before the organization of these great exchanges the methods of dealing in contracts for "cotton to arrive" or "for future delivery" had become fairly well systematized. For example, the contract unit had already been made 100 bales, or, rather, a sufficient weight of cotton to be equivalent to about 100 bales as generally put up in the South. The period during which delivery might be made under the contract had been fixed at two months in Liverpool and one month in New York, the reason for this difference being that in those days the duration of an ocean voyage to Liverpool was necessarily uncertain, and it was considered fair that a delivery of cotton out of a vessel arriving at any time during two coupled months should be a good delivery. Hence we have to this day (though such will not be the case after January 1, 1908) all the trading in Liverpool contracts done in coupled months, i. e., May-June, July-August, January-February, etc. In New York, on the other hand, it was felt that the arrival of cotton could be calculated within a single month, and so contracts for future delivery covered only one month—January, March, July, etc. These details and many others were at once embodied in the by-laws and rules of the Liverpool and New York exchanges, and other by-laws and rules were adopted to produce absolute uniformity, equality, and fairness in all trading, whether between members of the exchanges themselves or between members and the public at large. Here, then, at least, the cotton merchants who had seized upon Mr. John Rew's new method of conducting the cotton business had all the facilities they required.

That shows when this business of trading in cotton futures commenced in 1870, John Rew, of Liverpool, about the time the Atlantic cable was laid over there, caught on to the idea of selling cotton to arrive, and that started the business in Liverpool, or at least accelerated it, and the house founded by him is in existence to-day.

From page 55 of the same book I read:

The advantages of the future system were at once so apparent that dealings in future contracts increased with great rapidity. By the end of 1868, as already pointed out, such transactions had become a distinct feature of the cotton trade. During the period from January 1 to August 31, 1869, the total sales of such contracts in the New York market amounted to 101,665 bales, as compared with 873,563 bales of spot transactions. A "spot" transaction, it will be recalled, is one made from goods on hand, and which calls for practically immediate delivery. In the next crop year, during which the exchange was organized and a regular form of contract adopted, dealings in these forward deliveries aggregated 591,586 bales, as compared with 616,410 bales of spots.

Listen to this, Senators:

In the crop year ended August 31, 1871, there was an enormous increase in the volume of future trading, which reached a total of nearly 3,000,000 bales, as compared with 733,905 bales of spots.

I ask to have the remarks I have inclosed in brackets inserted as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

It should be emphasized that one of the great functions of a cotton exchange is the bringing together of buyers and sellers or their representatives. An exchange is a great market place. Transactions are, of course, greatly facilitated by the mere congregation of buyers and sellers and their representatives on the floor of an exchange. In the case of those exchanges on which a future business is conducted it should be noted that there are really two markets, one for future contracts and the other for spot cotton. The future market is not used to bring the producer and the spinner directly together, but is rather a meeting place for cotton merchants—or their representatives—and brokers, who stand between the producer and the spinner. Spinners, for reasons explained in detail in a later part, do not ordinarily receive their supplies of cotton directly on exchange contracts, but enter into private arrangements with merchants or brokers for the particular kinds of cotton which they require. These merchants, moreover, ordinarily do not obtain the cotton which they need by receiving it on exchange contracts. Such merchants, as already emphasized, use the future market mainly for hedging purposes, and the future ring to this extent becomes, as already pointed out, a great clearing house for hedging transactions.

The enormous advantage of such hedging transactions to the spot merchant, however, has been fully illustrated, so that it should be apparent that the future market, while not designed to bring the final consumer into direct touch with the producer of cotton, may perform quite as legitimate a function as if it accomplished this result directly.

Of course, in addition to hedging transactions, a vast volume of speculative business is conducted in contracts. These, however, as just pointed out, are closely intertwined with hedging operations and may greatly facilitate the latter, although at times they undoubtedly are a source of disturbance.

Mr. DIAL. The point is this, that they commenced to sell futures—not actual cotton, but paper cotton—and in the first year they sold contracts for 101,665 bales, whereas they sold eight hundred and seventy-three thousand odd bales of spots. In the third year the future transactions amounted to 3,000,000 bales, and the spot sales to 733,905 bales, showing that the future business soon outgrew the spot transactions. That has increased from that time on, until in 1919 in the United States we raised less than 12,000,000 bales of cotton, but on the New York and New Orleans Cotton Exchanges alone they sold 104,860,100 bales of cotton, and they delivered 139,900 bales.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, can the Senator give us the yield for the year 1870?

Mr. DIAL. For the years at the close of the Civil War, 1865 and 1866, the production was 2,501,921 bales. Production was very slow after that. I have not the exact figures, but I will insert them in my remarks. It was beginning to increase a little more.

Mr. POMERENE. I wanted it as a basis of comparison, that is all.

Mr. DIAL. I am sorry I have not the figures. There was a very great decrease in the production of cotton immediately after the Civil War. Records show the crop of 1869–70 was 3,122,551 bales.

Now, I want to show Senators the condition. This future trading started up, and there was no law governing it at all; the exchanges merely made rules for its operation; and that is one of the complaints I have to make now. They started off wrong. There were 32 grades. The seller of the contract had a right, under those rules, to deliver whatever grades of cotton he saw proper to deliver. I take it that one reason why we have submitted to this unjust and nefarious practice so long is because it simply became a custom with us.

They speak here of the South being poverty-stricken, always appealing to Congress for help. That is humiliating to me, and I want Congress to pass some real legislation—legislation which will enable our people to help themselves. I am glad the substitute for the Norris bill has been passed. I think it will go a long way toward relieving the distress of the country. What I want now is for Congress to amend this one-sided law and the South will try to take care of itself.

This practice of the exchanges was always that the seller of the contract had a right to tender any grades he saw proper. Hence we have never gotten what we ought to have gotten for our cotton since the Civil War. It is unjust to come here and compare one year with another. They will go back a number of years and say, "A few years ago you only got so and so." Then they go back further and say, "Thirty years before that you only got so and so."

Senators, it may not be very pleasant to hear the facts, but I want to relate a little of the history of our trials. Our slaves were freed. We had nothing left in the South except our land; implements, animals, everything was gone. Then the Negro started out on his own hook. The white people had nothing much to support themselves with. The darkey, of course, had a hard time. He started with a low standard of living. His houses were of the crudest kind; his clothing was scant; his food was coarse. It did not take much for him to live upon. He produced a little cotton, and under this practice these exchanges had of the unjust tender they never let that cotton bring what it ought to have brought. We became accustomed to this miserable existence we have been under so long.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ODDIE in the chair). Does the Senator yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. DIAL. I yield.

Mr. STANLEY. If I understand the Senator, the fictitious sale of many hundred per cent more bales of cotton than are actually produced kept the planter from knowing the actual scarcity, or the purchaser from knowing the actual scarcity, and in that way induced the sale of that cotton at a lower price than it would have brought if actual conditions could have been known, or had been ascertainable?

Mr. DIAL. Yes; I will come to that in a little while.

There was no national law on this subject until 1914. Nearly every Southern State, according to this book, passed some law on the subject, trying to correct unjust practices of these exchanges. But all those laws were failures.

They had a law in my State and in North Carolina; Louisiana had one; and, in fact, practically every Southern State passed laws on the subject; even Virginia, which raises very little cotton. But the laws were failures. Bills were introduced in Congress back as far as 1884, and from that time on to 1914 every session bills were introduced. Sometimes they would pass one House and sometimes the other House, but in 1914 the present law was enacted.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, do I understand from the Senator's statement that prior to 1914 there was no law fixing the grades of cotton?

Mr. DIAL. No; there was not.

Mr. POMERENE. Did this question of the grades grow up just as a matter of custom and practice?

Mr. DIAL. Yes. There was no law fixing the grades at all.

Mr. POMERENE. How many grades were there prior to 1914?

Mr. DIAL. That is pretty hard to tell. I think that according to the custom of the exchanges there were 32 grades tenderable on contracts.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, cotton was graded on account of color for a long time—that is, upland cotton. For a long time there was no account taken of staple whatever, and there was simply account taken of the color and the foreign matter in it. Cotton which was gathered before rain fell on it was a higher grade and that which stayed a little longer was a lower grade, and that which stayed until it was discolored by exposure to the weather, on account of the length of time it remained in the field, was a lower grade still. Some of it became so ripened in the wind and rain, and had fallen to the ground, and that was known as the lowest grade. It had a good deal of foreign matter in it, dirt and trash, and they graded it according to the tint, the color. When my colleague shall have finished, I want to explain to the Senate some things in reference to the present law which I think the Senate ought to be in possession of.

Mr. DIAL. There was no law; it was graded by a mere custom.

Mr. STANLEY. Had the length of the staple anything to do with the grade of the cotton?

Mr. DIAL. Yes; it had something to do with it.

Mr. STANLEY. I was under the impression that was a factor.

Mr. SMITH. In what was known as the upland cotton, the length of the staple, up until the last two or three years, had nothing whatever to do with the grade. It was graded entirely according to the color, and they made a distinction.

Mr. DIAL. Color and foreign matter?

Mr. SMITH. Yes; color and foreign matter. They made a distinction. Some they called middling gulf and some middling upland. The gulf cotton was produced in the Delta of the Mississippi and along the western river bottoms, like the Red River, the Brazos, and down in the Mississippi Valley proper, where they produced cotton that never came under a certain length of staple. So they classed that in one class, and upland cotton was graded according to what I have already said, and, as my colleague said, it ran in what they called grades, quarters, and splits, to about 32 grades.

Mr. DIAL. That law was passed in 1914 and went into effect in February, 1915. If Senators care to look into this question more thoroughly, they will be furnished with a speech delivered by Mr. Francis G. Caffey, Solicitor of the United States Department of Agriculture. Mr. Caffey made this address before the Alabama State Bar Association at Montgomery, Ala., on July 10, 1915. It is a very learned and a very exhaustive address on the subject.

He shows the necessity of legislation. He shows how the farmers had been deprived of a large proportion of the value of their crop, and how the people rose up and demanded that some law be passed whereby the exchanges should be regulated. He goes on to show that it is very probable that amendments will have to be made to this law from time to time. I ask, Mr. President, to be allowed to incorporate as a part of my remarks some parts of this address, which I have placed in brackets. I would like to read it to the Senate, but I want to rush along and not take up too much time.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

State laws relating to the purchase and sale of cotton for future delivery have failed to accomplish their intention. They have been various in form, but their prevailing assumption is that dealing in cotton futures is gambling, because it is a guess or bet on the value of an article not in possession, frequently not even grown or planted, and is therefore wrong, morally or economically, or both. The cotton exchanges have encountered little difficulty in adjusting their rules to these statutes. In general, by the use of a system of symbols for actual cotton, they have theoretically eliminated transactions in nonexistent commodities and thereby stripped from the business the features which State laws declare to be unlawful. In addition, the Federal Constitution is an undoubted embarrassment to the drafting of effective legislation by a State, aimed to correct some of the effects of dealing in cotton futures, which are conceded to be evil.

The consumption of cotton is remote from the places in which it originates. An overwhelming percentage of it moves in interstate or foreign commerce. The prices to producers are inevitably influenced, and in large measure fixed, by transactions in States other than those in which it is grown and in foreign countries. The prices producers receive for spot cotton in primary markets are almost entirely dominated by quotations on future exchanges. For many years a large proportion of the membership of both spot and future exchanges have felt that there were abuses in the methods prevailing on some or all of the future exchanges. Contemporaneously, the feeling among producers and spinners that they were unfairly treated had been deep and becoming widespread. Facts of this kind ultimately led Congress to comply with the long-standing demand for an attempt by it to afford relief.

At nearly every session of Congress since 1884 bills dealing with the regulation of cotton futures have been introduced. A schedule of 120 of these has been made. (See note at end.) They have generally been based upon the post office and post roads, or the commerce, or the tax clause of the Constitution. Previous to the Sixty-third Congress three passed the House. Another, the Hatch bill, passed both Houses at the Fifty-second Congress, and failed only because of a parliamentary situation in the House, in which it originated; near the end of the session, in March, 1893, the test vote on certain Senate amendments, resulting in 172 ayes to 124 noes, was taken under a rule which required two-thirds, not a majority only, for affirmative action.

At the first session of the Sixty-third Congress the Senate incorporated in the tariff bill a clause, known as the Clarke amendment, imposing a tax, at the rate of 50 cents a bale (of 500 pounds), on each sale of cotton for future delivery, equivalent to $50 on each so-called exchange contract, involving 100 bales. The Senate receded from its insistence upon that provision only after the House had shown clearly that it favored some action on the subject, but disagreed as to the particular method proposed and indicated strongly that the matter would be taken up comprehensively at the next session.

When the second session of the Sixty-third Congress convened, the situation was that each House had previously gone square on record separately as desiring a wholly destructive measure. A great deal of sentiment in favor of wiping out future cotton exchanges still persisted in both houses. Investigation, however, had impressed, or further consideration did impress, a majority that properly regulated exchanges had an important and useful economic office to perform, which it might be possible to continue. The bill which finally became law on August 18, 1914, was, accordingly, constructive; designed to preserve the good, and remove the evil features of transactions as then conducted. The unanimity with which, at the hearings before the House Committee on Agriculture, the bill was approved is notable. Its enactment was urged on behalf of producers, merchants, and spinners. It was also substantially indorsed—there was no material dissent in principle, or to any large extent in detail—by the representatives of the great future exchanges at New York and New Orleans.

After opportunities had been afforded to all interests to express their views, the committee made an illuminating report. This ought to be read by anyone concerned with the details of the circumstances under which the cotton futures act grew into being. The committee also availed itself of the results of investigations which had been carried on for some years by the Department of Commerce and by the Department of Agriculture.

The substance of the committee's findings of the general facts may be briefly summarized thus: Exchanges, in their original conception, are essentially useful institutions, capable of performing great service for the country. The price of cotton is so variable that hedges constitute the only effective means by which merchants and manufacturers may avoid speculation, and confine themselves to their own particular fields of commercial endeavor, when they sell cotton goods for forward delivery, in advance of having them in hand or even manufactured. These consist of safeguarding every sale by a purchase on a future exchange, for delivery in a month approximating the date when needed, of an equivalent quantity of the raw material involved, or vice versa. Purely speculative transactions, because of the permanent conflict of interests between speculators, tend to stabilize prices, and are helpful rather than injurious. Whenever variations on an exchange in the prices of the commodity dealt in do not reflect changes in actual commercial values, the institution has ceased to perform the true economic functions for which it was organized. To the extent that an exchange is not a substantially correct barometer of genuine market values, there is something wrong. The degree in which quotations fail to express the normal operation of the laws of trade is the measure of the evils practiced. The bad features of exchanges are excrescences, largely the creation of artificial manipulation. These can be eliminated without unfairness to, or interference with, legitimate business. The methods of the exchanges in this country have been harmful, and have resulted in injustice, particularly to farmers.

The exchange contract customarily in use before the act was passed did not permit a party to require the delivery of any particular grade. The party obligated to deliver was entitled to tender cotton of any grade recognized by the rules of the exchange. Contracts specifying middling, as the basis of the agreed price, ordinarily resulted, and might always result, in money adjustments being necessary. If the scale for adjustments had been in exact conformity with the differences in value of spot cotton of the grade contracted for, and of the grade or grades of which symbolic or actual delivery was made, no injustice or economic evil could have occurred. Instead, however, under the old practice, the differences were fixed by arbitrary rulings of exchange committees, which members were compelled to accept. This was the so-called "fixed difference" system. The result was that the prices on exchanges, upon which the public relied, and upon which they must rely if exchanges are to perform the purposes for which they are organized, not merely did not reflect actual values, but were subject to the widest possibilities of manipulation.

Doubtless experience will demonstrate that this statute ought to be altered in some respects. But a dispassionate examination of the law itself, and of the legislative history of the bill which finally became law, as well as of its predecessors back to 1884, can hardly fail to create three impressions: First, Congress has made an honest effort to do justice to all; second, if the evils at which the statute is aimed persist, and can not be eliminated by amendment, eventually the business of dealing in cotton futures will have to be carried on otherwise than upon exchanges; third, in its present temper Congress is determined to exercise its undoubted power to destroy the exchanges rather than to see its deliberately expressed judgment thwarted by subterfuge or evasion.

Injustice is always a grave matter. When clearly discerned, persistence in it is criminal. When proven, if no remedy be proposed, it engenders radicalism, from which extreme consequences are apt to follow. The wrongs to the producer of cotton, as well as to the manufacturer and to the consumer of cotton goods, resulting from the methods of conducting dealings in cotton futures, long prior to the Sixty-third Congress, had become so manifest to every exchange that candor and the uncontroverted evidence, alike, compelled admission of their existence. The inability of the farmer, with exactness, to specify the means employed to deprive him of the fair economic share of the fruits of his toil afforded no satisfaction to the intelligent, thoughtful cotton exchange broker. What should be done was of concern to everyone; it was not a class or sectional issue.

The intervention of Government agency should have been, and has been, welcomed. Honest and patriotic members of exchanges cheerfully accepted release from shackles which tradition had imposed, and which they themselves had not had sufficient initiative to break. They were glad to escape from the pressure of the possibilities of unfair competition. In the past these had induced them to participate in a system which was indefensible. They are gratified to be freed from the odium heaped upon them, always with a measure of propriety, frequently unduly, by those whose respect and good will they preferred to enjoy. They recognize that shafts hurled at them, though often misshapen and poorly aimed, nevertheless bore points forged in truth.

The United States cotton futures act is an attempt to eradicate injustice. It is framed in the interest of all; producers, spinners, exchanges, and the country. It seeks to revive genuine, unfettered competition; to give a free market place to the makers and to the users of a great American crop. Even though it should prove defective in some of its details, because of its motive it will be a benefaction, both to the exchanges and to the public.

Mr. DIAL. I say, Senators, with all due respect to Congress, that this law is wrong. I have no criticism whatever to make of its framers. If the law had turned out as they intended, it would be all I or anyone else could ask if exchanges are to be tolerated at all. It is a long act, and complicated.

Mr. McNARY. Does the Senator mean the United States cotton futures act?

Mr. DIAL. Yes; the United States cotton futures act of 1914. There are two sections in that act, and this is where the trouble comes in. As I said before, I do not claim to know all about cotton. It would be silly for me to arrogate any such knowledge. And, as I have also said, I have no criticism to make of the framers of the present law, if it had operated as they intended it. Of course, they meant well, and if this law had been put into operation the way they framed it, and no doubt the way they thought it would operate, it would be almost a perfect law, so far as I know, if you are going to allow exchanges to exist at all. I am not here to say whether exchanges ought to exist or not. Sometimes I think they ought, and then again I think they ought not, but I do not care to complicate this particular problem with a discussion of that point.

There are two sections involved in the law. One provides that at the time the contract is made the specific grade must be specified. If it had stopped there it would be all we could ask. That is what ought to be done, because when we go to a broker and buy a bond, we do not just buy bonds; we buy some particular bond or some particular stock. It is unfortunate to my mind that the framers of the law allowed another section to be put in which permits the seller of the contract at his option to select any of the grades that are tenderable to be delivered upon that contract.

I wish to go back just a little bit. I am too fast in my story.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President—

Mr. DIAL. I yield to the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. STERLING. Just what does the Senator mean by the seller of the contract? Is it the assignment of the contract first made?

Mr. DIAL. I will explain that. I am glad to answer any questions Senators may ask, because it seems they are greatly interested. This is more a conference than a speech.

I desire to lay down a proposition or two. My contention is—get this point, as a judge down in my State frequently says, this is the milk in the coconut—that the price of the actual commodity, the spot cotton, is controlled almost universally by the future contract market. There is no question about that. I will prove it. I made the assertion just a short time ago in a brief reference to this matter. We men in the South know that to be true. Buyers will not bid on cotton in the morning until they get a report from the exchange.

I was home on election day. A farmer came in and said, "I owe the bank some money and want to pay it." "All right, sit down." We get the market quotations by wire. I said, "What did you get for your cotton?" He said, "I got 20½ cents a pound, but the wagon just ahead of me got 21 cents. I unloaded my cotton, took my mules down and fed them, and the next man that came up got 20 cents." Now, why is that? That is $5 a bale variance in less than an hour. That is on account of the future contract market controlling the situation. I think that makes out a prima facie case that proves that the price of spot cotton is controlled by the future contract market.

I am going to answer the question of the Senator from South Dakota now. The interest of the grower and the interest of the owner of the cotton—he might be a merchant or might buy the cotton—and the interest of the purchaser of the contract is identical. Of course, they want the price of the actual cotton to go up. A contract means 100 bales. The man who has bought a contract is in an identical position with the farmer, the producer, or the owner of the cotton. If you had bought 100 bales of cotton at a warehouse, you would want the price to go up, and the man who bought the contract wants the price to go up, otherwise he does not make any money.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President—

Mr. DIAL. I yield to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. OVERMAN. As I understand it, the man who sells the cotton contract probably never saw a bale of cotton and has no cotton, but sells it by wire.

Mr. DIAL. He buys or sells paper cotton.

Mr. OVERMAN. He never saw cotton and does not know what cotton is, and yet he is there gambling on the exchange and buying and selling it.

Mr. DIAL. Yes; that is true. These are the facts. The price of spot cotton is controlled by the future contract market, and the interest of the farmer and the purchaser of the contract is identical. The producer is the man we are trying to help.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President—

Mr. DIAL. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. The Senator stated a while ago that one of the provisions of the law was to the effect that the contract of the seller had to state the grade of the cotton. Then later he referred to another section which permitted the seller—perhaps I am misstating that—

Mr. DIAL. No; the other section permits the seller to select the grades to be delivered.

Mr. POMERENE. Does not that entirely nullify the first provision?

Mr. DIAL. No. I am coming to that in just a moment. As a matter of fact, Senators, the first provision of this law has never been put into effect on the New York Exchange.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President—

Mr. DIAL. I yield to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. CURTIS. Before the Senator leaves the point which he has been discussing, he stated a moment ago that one farmer had sold his cotton at 21 cents, I believe—

Mr. DIAL. Twenty and one-half cents.

Mr. CURTIS. Yes; and the next man who came along got half a cent less, and the next man still another half cent less. What brought about that condition? Was there a wire from headquarters or what was it?

Mr. DIAL. That was brought about, according to my contention, by the action of the future contract market. They get their market reports generally down in my country in the small places every 20 minutes.

No doubt the future contract market had declined, and the spot man was simply following the future contract market, not that the cotton had deteriorated in value. There is no doubt that the second bale of cotton was actually worth as much as the first bale, because it was raised and ginned under the same conditions, but there was a decline of $5 a bale in less than an hour, brought about in the way I have explained.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President—

Mr. DIAL. I yield to the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. STERLING. To what does the Senator from South Carolina attribute that decline of $5 a bale within that short period of time?

Mr. DIAL. I will come to that in just a little while. Will the Senator please call my attention to it if I do not answer him in a moment?

Answering the question of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE], the first provision of the law was never put into operation on the New York Exchange. I went to the Agriculture Department last summer and tried to find out why. They said they did not know. In the New Orleans Exchange they have put the provisions of that law into operation in a very limited way, but never on the New York Exchange. There is where we have been hoodooed or whatever you may see fit to call it. We have been deprived of the benefit of the first provisions of the law. I do not know what the difficulty is; I am not accusing the Department of Agriculture of any dereliction, but unfortunately we pay for it; we suffer because we have not had that law fully in effect. They simply said the traders were not dealing that way, and that they would not make that kind of a contract.

The Agricultural Department admitted the present law does not operate fairly and justly.

Senators, under this law as it was passed in 1914 there were 20 grades of cotton tenderable on a contract. Under that law the seller of the contract had the right to tender all of the quantity in any one or all of those 20 grades that he saw fit. A little later that law was amended and limited to 10 grades tenderable on a contract. But here is what I am complaining of, that the law still allows the seller of the contract to select all the quantity in any one or all of those 10 grades he may prefer, irrespective of the use to which the purchaser of the cotton may want to put it. I know of no other commodity in the world where the seller selects the quality of the article the purchaser has to buy.

Mr. NICHOLSON. May I inquire of the Senator who grades the cotton?

Mr. DIAL. We have United States graders.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Government officials?

Mr. DIAL. Yes. There is no complaint about the grades or the grading when done by Government graders. The Government has graders even in many of the little country towns.

Mr. STANLEY. Is it mandatory upon the farmer to grade his cotton?

Mr. DIAL. No; it is the right of the farmer or the buyer to do it, but it is not compulsory. The Government has not a sufficient number of graders scattered over the country to grade all of the cotton.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me to interrupt him—

Mr. DIAL. Certainly.

Mr. HEFLIN. There are hundreds and hundreds of market places in the South where there are no Government graders. I think there are really very few markets in the South where there are expert or Government graders.

Mr. DIAL. The buyers, the mill, and exporters have graders of their own. Such a correction of that law will bring, I believe, the greatest help that could possibly be rendered to a suffering people.

Mr. STERLING. Does the dealing on the exchange to which the Senator has alluded, and of which he gave an illustration a little while ago, work sometimes the other way, so as to increase the price of spot cotton?

Mr. DIAL. Yes; it works the other way sometimes. To answer the question of the Senator from South Dakota, asked a moment ago, let me read from a New York paper just last week, July 26, as follows:

The really important movement in the cotton market to-day came just before the close, when prices had a perpendicular drop of over 30 points under heavy selling by one of the leading commission houses and private cables from Manchester to the effect that there was no demand nor any prospects of trade revival until September or October. The market closed barely steady at a net decline of 23 to 29 points.

This is about the saddest picture one could well draw. We see scattered around in our country the farmers, poor people in a great measure, in a little section down there about 500 miles wide and 2,000 miles long, inhabited by perhaps 25,000,000 unorganized people, probably half of those darkies, a great number of them tenant farmers, having to borrow money or to buy goods on credit to make a crop, and yet they can sit back in their little homes in March, for instance, before they have planted their cotton seed and look in the morning paper and see what their cotton will sell for next October, next November, next January, and during the whole of the next crop season.

I do not know whether Senators may notice those quotations in their papers or not. Some of them do not quote all of the months ahead in that way, but they do quote them all at different times. For instance, I have in my hand now a quotation for next October—high 12.35, closed at 12, and went as low as 11.97. Here is a quotation for delivery next March at 13 cents high, went as low as 12.68, and closed at 12.70. Then as far ahead as next May the quotation is 13.12 high and closed at 12.76.

It is true, I will say to the Senator from South Dakota, that it does go up sometimes, but that is the exception and not the rule. Thus the people know just what their crop will be sold for before they have planted it or started to make it, and they have no way to help themselves. It is absolutely impossible for them to do anything. The whole South is just as helpless as a newborn babe.

The complaint I make about it is this: As I said, in 1919 we made less than 12,000,000 bales of cotton, yet on the New York and New Orleans exchanges alone they sold over 104,860,000 bales. We do not know how many contracts were sold in Liverpool, in Bremen, in Japan, and other countries of the world. There are about 151,000,000 spindles in the world; of these there are in the United States about 34,000,000, and in England about 59,000,000 spindles. In Liverpool, for instance—England does not raise a bale of cotton—they have not any actual cotton to sell, yet they have this great exchange that has grown up there not only buying cotton to supply their own demands but reselling to Germany and Austria and various other countries of the world. Under the provisions of the existing law they can sell this paper cotton just like this man sold the other day in New York. They have not a bale of real cotton, but they sell spurious cotton, paper cotton, watered cotton, counterfeit cotton, or whatever you may be pleased to call it.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, I have followed the Senator from South Carolina with a great deal of interest, and I do not want to interrupt him—

Mr. DIAL. I am glad to be interrupted. I hope the Senator will ask me questions.

Mr. STANLEY. But if I catch the argument of the Senator correctly, under these contracts sellers of cotton may furnish any one of 10 or more different grades?

Mr. DIAL. Yes; any one of 10 grades.

Mr. STANLEY. What practical good does the cotton planter get from the Government grading if any one of 10 different grades may be used in filling the contracts, and most of the cotton is sold through the exchanges?

Mr. DIAL. They have a graduated schedule of prices. If one gets middling, he pays a premium on the cotton; if he gets below middling, he gets a discount. I am not complaining about grades now; I am not complaining about the graduated schedule of cotton prices. However, there is too great a difference in prices between grades.

Mr. STANLEY. If I apprehend the Senator, that is not what I mean. As I understand, a sale is made for the future delivery of cotton. When the time comes to make the actual delivery—if there is an actual delivery under the contract—the contract may be filled by any one of 10 different grades?

Mr. DIAL. Yes; that is optional with the seller.

Mr. STANLEY. What is the use of having the cotton graded if any one of 10 grades may be used to fill the contract?

Mr. DIAL. The use of it is this: The grader has nothing to do with the contract except to see that the cotton is properly classified. He can not classify middling cotton as low middling cotton. The Senator might sell cotton to me and I would say, "This is low middling." He would call in the Government grader and he would say, "It is middling." That is where the Senator would be protected in that respect. There is no harm in that; I am not kicking about that.

However, take the case which I just read about a while ago of a man in New York selling cotton when he did not have a pound of cotton. I want to give Senators a practical illustration of this thing, if they will excuse me for a personal allusion. I am interested in a little bank down home. There is a poor man down there, a farmer working with his own hands. He acquired a nice little home. He is an honest, straight man. He bought Government bonds; his people helped to fight the World War. He had some cotton on hand year before last. He wanted a little money. Our little banking institution let him have $10,000 on 120 bales of cotton. Cotton went down. I urged him to sell at 41 cents, but he did not do it. He came up like a man and put a mortgage on his plantation. The other morning, after this New York man sold out his paper cotton, this farmer woke up and found that his 120 bales of cotton was worth 30 points less, and $1.50 a bale on 120 bales would be $180.

That is more than one of his sons would clear in 12 months digging it out of the ground. I am trying to prevent that kind of procedure.

While I am talking about selling cotton, let me put the position of the South a little bit straighter with the Senate and with the world, if I can. There has been a great deal of criticism as to why we did not sell cotton when we could get 40 cents a pound for it. Of course, we ought to have sold it, but there was only a certain demand in the world for cotton. This demand could only absorb so much cotton; the world could only pay for so much cotton. If more of it had been dumped on the market, the prices would have gone down quicker, and perhaps lower. I am not trying to defend ourselves for holding it; I urged my friends to sell; but I say that they are not to be blamed for holding it.

My first consideration is for the man who goes out on the ground and works his money out of it and makes crops and adds something to the wealth of the country. It makes me tired to sit here and hear Senators claiming that it requires $1,500 or $1,800, and so forth, to support a family of three or four or five in a city. Those people work about seven hours or stay about the office about seven hours. They have not really been introduced to work; they do not know anything about it. Let them visit a farm. I am not one of those oratorical financiers and a great bawler for the farmer; but we certainly ought to pass just laws whereby every man may receive his rights under the Government. I endeavor to get beneficial results. Cotton is sold like second-hand clothes.

Senators will see how this scheme operates with the seller of the contract having the right to deliver all of the quantity in any of these 10 grades or to mix it up as he may see proper. Suppose a Senator over there were the president of a cotton mill and he were to get an offer for all the goods he could make in the next six months, and say he is using 1,000 bales of cotton a month.

He receives a satisfactory offer for his cloth and accepts it. He then hedges on the exchange a thousand bales per month for the next six months, but when the time comes for delivery he knows that the seller may not deliver him the kind of cotton he can use because the purchaser has no option in the matter; hence, he sells out his contract. The seller might deliver him grades of cotton that would not be spinnable in his mills and unsuitable for the cloth he is making. If he were to accept the cotton that was tendered him, perhaps he could not use a pound of it and would have to raise extra money to pay for the kind that he could use, besides paying all carrying charges on the offgrades and taking chances of getting rid of it the best way he could.

Mr. SIMMONS. Then the hedging operation is not of much help?

Mr. DIAL. It is as a speculative proposition only.

Mr. STERLING. When the owner of the cotton mill asks his agent that a thousand bales of cotton for each month of the year be furnished him why does he not specify the kind of cotton that he wants for the particular mill?

Mr. DIAL. He does; but he does not do it on exchanges.

Now, coming to the point, here is the way it works: If he knew that he could get the kind of cotton delivered that he used, he would make the contract and stand up and demand delivery; but this is what they do: Knowing that that is not the law, the speculators will not trade in that way. The mill gets its order and then goes to a cotton buyer and makes a trade with him. The buyer has put into his hands a great multitude of orders, and he manipulates the market. The cotton mill man sees it is too dangerous for him and he gets out of the way; he buys specific cotton from John Jones, for instance, but John Jones sells not only to that mill but to a number of other mills. He sells short in New York and beats the market down. For instance, speculators sell 100,000 or more bales in New York or New Orleans without intending to deliver a bale of cotton, and that beats the market down. Then they have their agents over the country to scoop up the actual cotton. That is the way it works.

Mr. OVERMAN. If I understood him aright, the Senator from South Dakota desires to know if the cotton mill man should buy a hundred bales of fair middling cotton whether when he wants the cotton he can get it.

Mr. DIAL. Not on the exchange contract.

Mr. OVERMAN. He can not get it on the exchange. What does he get?

Mr. DIAL. Oh, he will have to take anything that is tendered of the 10 grades. The seller may tender it all in one grade or he may mix it up in 10 grades and the buyer can not demand the grade he needs. He has to sell out his contract or take whatever is tendered him.

Mr. MOSES. That is not the way that cotton is bought by the cotton mills.

Mr. DIAL. No; I say it is not done in that way when cotton is bought by the cotton mills.

Mr. MOSES. The cotton mills in my State, for instance, buy their cotton from their own agents scattered through the South.

Mr. DIAL. That is true in a great measure. They may not have to go to the big dealers, but they make future contracts with them to be delivered. The dealer will sell them 1,000 bales of December cotton at so many points above the price of January cotton, for instance.

Mr. MOSES. The Senator is now speaking of the cotton broker doing business on the cotton exchange in one of the big cities.

Mr. DIAL. Yes.

Mr. MOSES. But, as a matter of fact, the large cotton mills of the country do not buy their cotton through cotton brokers on the exchange.

Mr. DIAL. Various mills employ different means.

Mr. NICHOLSON and Mr. STANLEY addressed the Chair.

Mr. DIAL. I yield first to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Does it not often follow when brokers and cotton dealers sell quantities of cotton that they have not in their possession that the speculators finding them short immediately go after them and raise the cotton market out of sight? So if that be taken into consideration, as well as the practice of selling short, does it not make a fair average?

Mr. DIAL. No; by no means. That is what Mr. Caffey said in his speech must be the result; but he said time would demonstrate perhaps the need of an amendment.

Now, here is the way it has been operating: The cotton world knows that the South will produce 60 per cent of the cotton of the world. The growers in the South borrow the money to make their crop, their paper will mature early in the fall, at which time the farmer is compelled to sell his cotton at whatever price he may get for it. The world knows that and sells paper cotton on the exchanges; the speculator sells it, and the millman and exporter who have hedged, knowing that they have no option whatever, will sell out their contracts. I believe, Senators, that there are a few spot dealers in the United States, possibly four or five, who control the price of spot cotton as effectively as the packers control the price of meat.

In this connection I want to say to my Republican friends that they are interested in the subject deeply, not directly and immediately as we are in the South, but when the cotton exchanges are permitted to manipulate the price of cotton and it declines and is beaten down to less than its value, the people of the world then are getting their wealth at the expense of the people of the United States. I do not know how much, but perhaps one-third or one-fourth of the value of each crop is taken away from the farmers under such manipulations.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President—

Mr. DIAL. I will ask the Senator to wait for a moment. Japan is a large user of our cotton, consuming, perhaps, 600,000 bales a year; Germany and Austria consumed from 2,500,000 bales to 3,000,000 bales; Spain uses 300,000 bales, and other countries of the world use large quantities, but we in the South stand still and allow this one-sided, unjust law to keep us almost in bondage. I am not asking for sympathy; I am asking for a correction of the unjust law which imposes a one-sided contract. I now yield to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I am very much interested in the speech of the Senator from South Carolina. A moment ago he said that four or five spot dealers practically control the spot market.

Mr. DIAL. I said I believe that to be true.

Mr. HEFLIN. The Senator means by manipulation of the exchanges under the present law?

Mr. DIAL. I think it is very probable they do.

Mr. HEFLIN. The Senator does not mean that they manipulate the spot price independently of the exchanges?

Mr. DIAL. No; I mean they sell down on the exchanges and then go around and pick up the spot cotton.

Mr. HEFLIN. They sell the fictitious stuff and beat down the price of real cotton?

Mr. DIAL. Yes. I will give my friend from Alabama an illustration: Suppose there is a bank in the country with, say, 1,000 shares of stock; and suppose a man should go in the neighborhood of that bank and commence to sell its stock to be delivered. He has not a dollar of the stock, but he commences to sell its stock and he continues that operation until he has sold five, six, seven, or eight times the amount of the actual stock. He could run down the price of the stock and then buy in the real stock and probably bankrupt the institution. Taking operations on the Liverpool exchange, the exchanges in this country, and the other exchanges of the world, perhaps every bale of cotton that is raised in the United States is sold twenty-five times over.

Now, Senators, what I want is this: I want this contract to represent actual cotton. It ought to be convertible into actual cotton, and I want it to be an honest contract. I want each party to the contract to have equal rights. I want a man when he sells anything to be forced under the law to deliver the actual article. If he sells milk do not let him deliver buttermilk. I do not want him to be allowed to sell cotton and then deliver any one of 10 grades of cotton at his option. I want him to be forced to specify whether it is middling, strict middling, middling fair, or whatever kind he sells. Then, if the mills of this country—and they realize that the prosperity of this country depends upon the success of the farmer—if the mills of this country buy or hedge their contracts for future delivery, if they have to hedge at all, let them stand up and demand delivery. In that way we will find that the price is stabilized and will run steadily along; it will never decline as it has heretofore.

Senators, I hope I am not a crank. I never have been accused of it down home, but I am more enthused on this proposition or as much enthused as I ever was on any one in my life. I do believe that the price is depressed many cents a pound every month in the year by reason of the manipulation.

Now, I come around to talk about the exchanges. I am not trying to put the exchanges out of business. In fact, I care very little about the exchanges. I am trying first to help the man who produces this cotton, who digs it out of the ground, who adds wealth to the world. I believe in treating the darkies fairly in paying them what you promise them, and in paying them when you promise them, but the system that has grown up in our country can not be tolerated any longer. The idea of employing laborers to prepare, plant, and cultivate the crop, and keeping them there for a few months, and then turning them loose while the cotton is maturing, and then expecting to go out and hire them back to gather it is all wrong. The price of cotton ought to be enough to employ labor all the time and let them improve the land. Something will be said about the cost of production of cotton. I saw a statement a short time ago from a New York firm, a very responsible firm, with connections in the South, to the effect that cotton could not be produced for less than 17 cents a pound. Now, we will all differ in the Southern States, no doubt, as to what it will cost. One will tell you that it will cost 17 cents, and one will tell you that it will cost 30 cents, and one will tell you this, that, and the other. Perhaps they are all telling the truth, but let me tell you how it is done. I hope the Senator from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] will listen to me on this point.

If one had to go out and buy the land, if you had to go out and hire the labor and get the mules and all the machinery, and so forth, and raise the cotton, and pay for everything, there is no telling what it would cost to raise it; but the way half of it is raised, and possibly more than half, is by small tenants, largely darkies, and that is the reason why we have never gotten the price that we ought to have gotten for it.

"John Jones and his wife and about five or six children raised cotton. It did not cost him much to live." No; he did not hire labor, but what did they do? His wife cooked for him, she ironed for him, she scoured for him, and she helped work the crop. He paid her nothing. No account is taken of that. His children went to school two or three months in the year, perhaps, and sometimes did not go at all. They would go out in the field before sun-up and work until after sundown, and they did not get any pay for that. Their services were not taken into consideration in the cost of growing this crop. Therefore he may have raised his crop for 10 or 12 cents a pound; but I submit, Senators, that all of the work that goes into the production of the crop should be paid for, or at least estimated for, according to its actual fair and reasonable value.

We have gotten into this unfortunate condition in the South, and the time has come to change it. I make bold to say that this practice was wrong in the beginning, and it is wrong now; and I do not believe there is a man in the Senate, if he will go to the trouble of understanding the amendment I propose, who will vote against it.

Some people will say that I will destroy the exchanges. I have no particular ill will toward them. I am not here representing anybody in particular. I am here trying to represent the people of my section first, and next the people of the United States. I am endeavoring to represent everyone. I did not know much about this law until recently, because I presumed that you gentlemen up here passed just, honest, and fair laws; but with all due deference you have not done it in this case. I do not say that you did it intentionally, but you did it because it was not brought to your attention, and you have not familiarized yourselves with the operation of this law.

Mr. RANDELL. Mr. President—

Mr. DIAL. I yield to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. RANDELL. I infer from the Senator's remarks that he attributes the present low price of cotton to trading on the exchanges. Am I correct in that?

Mr. DIAL. In a great measure.

Mr. RANDELL. Does the Senator know whether or not tobacco, rice, and hides are traded in on future exchanges? I will say that I am told they are not.

Mr. DIAL. None of them has gone down as low as cotton.

Mr. RANDELL. Relatively, I understand, they are just as low as cotton. I know that the rice people of my State are making a great deal more noise than the cotton growers, and neither of the three is traded in on future exchanges.

Mr. DIAL. Very well. My contention is that ever since the Civil War, every year, cotton has not brought what it ought to have brought, and it has not brought what it would have brought if the conditions had been understood.

I am not trying to destroy exchanges. I care but little about them. I am not trying to get a contract that is unfair to anyone. I am not asking favors. I am merely asking for justice. If the exchanges can not exist under an honest law, then, in the name of justice, let them get out of business, and the quicker the better.

This would stabilize the price of cotton. It would aid us to get a better price—a regular price—and would help us to pay our debts and buy from the other sections of this country and of the world. It would help the farmers wonderfully and would not hurt manufacturers. I urge you to give a more careful consideration to the condition of the farmer. At present he is raising his crop under difficulties. When he ships his cotton he pays as much for freight now for a $50 bale as he did a short time ago for a bale selling at $200. The railroad labor is getting double what it got a year ago. This cotton is manufactured into cloth by laborers that are paid about twice what they were a year ago. Therefore, the cloth is returned to the farmer, and he pays almost double for it that he did a short time ago. Cotton has kept up the balance of trade of the United States since the Civil War.

Now, Senators, to reiterate, here is what I want: I offered an amendment here some time ago that went to the Agricultural Committee, and I made a talk before it on the 24th day of May. No report has been made on that amendment, notwithstanding the chairman said he was ready to report it favorably. Yesterday I had printed an amendment which I propose to offer to the Capper-Tincher bill, and it is a little bit different from the one that went before the Agricultural Committee. I want Senators to study these propositions and at the proper time see if they can not help to put a just law on the statute books. I want the man who sells the contract to be forced to deliver what he sells, and not let him keep on selling water, water forever, and depressing the price of cotton.

I have an idea that if the cotton mills of this country, both North and South, would hedge their contracts in case they feel that they should hedge them, and if they would stand up and demand delivery of cotton a great deal of the South's trouble would be solved. That is the greatest good that could result to the people of my section from any imaginable law, and it should not be withheld from them 15 minutes; and I believe Congress will correct this law. It is claimed it is fair to let the seller of the contract select all of the 10 grades. Suppose we reverse this and let the purchaser select all for awhile.

Senators, I did intend to say something more, but I understand that it is desired to have an executive session. I ask to have inserted in my remarks a telegram that was sent to the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANDELL] by W. B. Thompson, of New Orleans, La. I understand that Mr. Thompson represents the cotton exchange. This shows their side of the case. I offer this, understanding that he says I am wrong, but I offer it to prove that my contention is right. I ask that it be printed as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the telegram referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NEW ORLEANS, LA., May 5, 1921.

HON. JOSEPH E. RANDELL,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Your letter April 29 and wire May 3. In my opinion future-contract trading is essential. The abolition of the future market would be a vast misfortune to all engaged in cotton production and merchandizing. It is true that in the late deflation campaign, when constructive speculation was paralyzed and destructive speculation stimulated and in fact encouraged by the attitude and acts of one branch of the Federal Government the producers should have been protected from the injurious results of excessive bear speculation, and should be protected should any excessive selling develop during the abnormal period of readjustment. But the way to make such protection effective is through temporary prohibition of speculative short selling, and not through the destruction of the future trading system. The future markets may be destroyed directly, as under the Caraway bill, or indirectly, as under the Dial bill. Senator DIAL's fifty-fifty argument sounds plausible enough, but in practical effect it would drive sellers from the future market and make said market innocuous. The fault with DIAL's argument lies in the fact that the obligations assumed by the buyer and seller in the future contract are not equal. If the buyer could demand that even 50 per cent of contract delivery should be two specific grades, designated by him (the buyer), he would naturally demand the grades which seller would have most difficulty in securing, even if he could secure same at all. Such a contract would make seller's position so hazardous that eventually there would be no sellers, either speculative or hedging. Having gone through a period during which the speculative short seller had all the advantage, now that trend of events and the attitude of the administration favors a revival of buying, I think it would be most unfortunate for us, by destroying the future markets, to deprive cotton of the benefits of constructive buying.

W. B. THOMPSON.

Assuming, Senators, that you traded with me to deliver you 10 automobiles, and I had the selection of them at the market price, would I not naturally tender you the kind that you could not use, perhaps too many of one kind? This practice reverses the laws of human nature. It cancels all the laws of merchandising. Who ever heard before of the purchaser of an article letting the seller select the article he should use, particularly when that article has to be used by machinery?

I apologize for having taken up so much time, Senators. I do not want to get a reputation for being an extremist. I do not want to have to make many talks in the Senate. I do not like to speak. I have gotten to the age where if I write what I say I can not read it without my glasses, and if I put on my glasses I can not see my audience, and therefore I just eat the subject raw; but I hope I have at least given you the ground upon which you can investigate this matter, and the more you look into it the more you will be convinced that it is no wonder that we have a depressed feeling. I am not looking at the matter from a sectional point of view at all, but it is one in which we are all interested.

I ask Senators to get this speech of Mr. Caffey and read it. That will put you to thinking on the subject.

In conclusion, my remedies are:

First, correct this unjust law.

Second, let the South produce a living at home and raise cotton as a surplus crop.

Third, the South should increase its banking facilities—stronger banks—and build up export companies.

Fourth, let the mills demand delivery of cotton on contract.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I apologize for getting up at this late hour; but I am quite sure that my colleague, in the enthusiasm of the debate, did not mean what he said when he said that the present law was an unjust one, and that he had had confidence in Congress, and trusted them, and yet there was on the statute books an unjust, unfair, and dishonest law.

I have the fortune or misfortune of being the author of the present law. I want to say that the smallest number of men understand the peculiar nature of cotton to its grades.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I will ask my colleague to yield. I certainly meant no reflection. I said that the framers of the law deserved great credit and praise. It never entered my mind to make a reflection on my colleague.

Mr. SMITH. I understand, Mr. President; but I just want in a few words to show that the present law as now upon the statute books would be absolutely just if it were not for the unjust discrimination practiced between the grades as to the intrinsic value of the grades. I do not know who is responsible for introducing this discrimination, the exchanges or the manufacturers. The practice grew up in the New York and New Orleans exchanges that whenever they sold a contract with the option on the part of the seller to deliver any grade of cotton the exchange had the right also to fix the difference between that grade and what was known as the basic grade, middling. "Middling" is the so-called basic grade, with a premium for the grades above middling and a discount for the grades below middling. The exchanges sold basis middling, and then when specific fulfillment was demanded, if lower grades were tendered overvalued them to a point where the purchaser could not dispose of it without a loss.

To illustrate: I buy 100 bales in New York, basis middling, at 10 cents a pound. I conclude that I will take up the cotton rather than settle on margins. I demand the cotton. They deliver me a hundred bales of good ordinary and strict good ordinary, the two lowest grades, and fix the difference between 10 cents, the price of the basis middling, and these grades. Suppose they fix the difference at 8 cents, when the commercial market would not take them at anything above 6 cents.

Mr. DIAL. Your law fixes that.

Mr. SMITH. Just a minute. We appointed a commission, with Herbert Knox Smith at the head of that commission. He went to New York and studied the conditions, and came back and recommended that Congress pass a law abolishing what was known as fixed differences, so that when a man took up a contract the seller of the contract had to tender him every grade according to the commercial price of that grade, and could not fix the difference.

We drafted the law in conformity with the recommendation of Herbert Knox Smith, and provided in that law that the differences should be fixed in six reputable spot markets, so that if anyone felt that he had been aggrieved or that the price of the grade tendered had been too high, the Department of Agriculture was empowered to settle the matter by ascertaining the average price of the grade or grades in dispute in six bona fide spot markets at a given time.

Mr. President, our bill was passed with that in view. Then we concluded that if we left the grading of the cotton to the trade at large the man who produced it would not be in much better fix than he was before, because I can bring in, and will bring in, before this discussion stops the Liverpool samples of cotton, the New York samples, the New Orleans samples, the Memphis samples, and show you that middling between these markets varied almost a grade, and the other grades in proportion. Therefore it was essential to establish a fixed official standard.

We then passed the standardizing act and authorized the Agricultural Department to fix the grades of cotton, white cotton, upland cotton; not staple cotton, but upland cotton.

We provided under that act that no cotton could be tendered in fulfillment of a contract that was not standardized by the Government, and that the price of the grade tendered would be fixed then by the six spot markets. That looked like protection enough, to that extent.

We soon found that the trade had taken advantage of this, and had standardized more than the nine grades that were in existence when the law was passed, and had standardized blues and sandies, stains and tinges, had run the whole gamut of cotton, and standardized practically all cotton.

Therefore, under the law anything was tenderable that was standardized, and everything had been standardized, and we were in about as bad a fix as to the number of grades that could be delivered as we were before we restricted them to the standardized grades.

Next, they were making a difference of about 2 cents a pound between good ordinary, which was the lowest grade of so-called white cotton and middling. I got an appropriation in an Agricultural appropriation bill authorizing and empowering the Agricultural Department to spin into yarn and to test the tensile strength and the bleaching qualities of every grade of cotton from good ordinary to middling fair, to see whether or not the manufacturers of this country and the dealers in cotton were justified in making the radical difference between middling and the grades below. I have here in this envelope, and I want at some time when I have more time for Senators to see, the result of that Government official test. Here are the homespun made out of the same kind of yarn, from good ordinary, which is now bringing anywhere from 5 to 6 cents a pound lower than middling, making as good cloth, bleached as white, tensile strength just as good as middling.

Mr. DIAL. There is no question in my mind but what they make too great a distinction between the different grades. But I want to ask my colleague if he does not think this law would be improved if the seller were compelled to deliver specifically what he contracted to deliver?

Mr. SMITH. I state without qualification that this law would be improved if the people who manufacture and buy this stuff would give the intrinsic value of the thing they buy. That is what I mean. If a millman knows that good ordinary, outside of the foreign matter that is in it, will make as good cloth as middling, why does he not give as much for good ordinary as for middling? We do not need any law for him to do that.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It costs more to bleach it and to make it into cloth.

Mr. SMITH. Not one penny more, according to the Government test, the result of which I have right here. Here is the Government test as to the bleaching. Let me read the Senator what the Government said about the bleaching process.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am only asking for information.

Mr. SMITH. The five grades of yarn were spun under similar conditions, with the same speeds and settings. The five grades of yarn were bleached in the same bath, remaining the same length of time, two and one-half hours. Here we have No. 20 yarn. Here is the bleached homespun, with the tags on it, and the goods made from good ordinary is just as white and the tensile strength practically as good as that which was made not from middling but from middling fair. To be perfectly fair, there is necessarily in the lower grades more foreign matter, more dirt, and more trash, and in the manufacturing process there was a certain amount of loss. That is put in percentages underneath the other figures. The percentage of loss was about 12 per cent average. So that the only difference between good ordinary, white, upland cotton, and middling was about 6 per cent.

I then introduced an amendment to the cotton futures act providing that in order to make surety doubly sure nothing should be tenderable or deliverable below low middling, and there is not a cotton man in this country who does not know that if you take the ordinary upland cotton, and take a good running lot from low middling to middling fair, it all can be spun in the same mill, on the same set of looms, and the same spindles and make identically the same cloth.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Senator will pardon me just a moment, because I want to understand it, I confess my ignorance and I am asking purely for information—

Mr. SMITH. I will be glad to give it if I am able to.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The waste in the middling fair was 7.32?

Mr. SMITH. Yes, sir.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And the waste in good ordinary was 16.47?

Mr. SMITH. That is from middling fair, not from middling. Here is the middling. Middling is the standard.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But the waste in the middling fair, which is the highest grade, was 7.32?

Mr. SMITH. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The waste in middling was 10.38, but the waste in good ordinary was 16.47, which makes the 6 per cent?

Mr. SMITH. I said about 6 per cent.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But it is nine and a fraction per cent beyond that in the middling fair.

Mr. SMITH. Yes. If the Senator will observe the tensile strength, they reach about the same figure. The difference is practically negligible. They run along from 59 and 60 up to as high as 69.5 for the very highest possible grade.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is what I was thinking about a moment ago when I asked if the expense was not greater. I did not mean that the expense of the spinning or of the bleaching was greater, but when a man had bought a pound of cotton in which there was a waste of 16 and a fraction per cent—

Mr. SMITH. As against 10.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And then another pound of cotton in which there was a waste of only 10, of course, he would lose 6 per cent of his raw material.

Mr. SMITH. All right. Let us get down to real facts in this. Let us suppose that I buy a bale of good ordinary and a bale of middling. The difference in their value is determined by the foreign matter in the two. There is 10 per cent waste in one, 16 in the other. Therefore the difference is 6 per cent. That means 6 pounds out of a hundred, or out of a commercial bale of 500 pounds 30 pounds of cotton. A man can sit down and calculate exactly the difference in the intrinsic value between good ordinary and middling by knowing the amount of foreign matter they carry, and that is about 6 per cent.

But, in addition to that, they have penalized every grade now below middling. When cotton was around 45 cents a pound they made a difference of from forty-five to fifty dollars a bale; and I think my colleague will bear me out in that.

Mr. DIAL. More than that.

Mr. SMITH. I want to state, further, that when we turned everything over to the Government somebody got the administration to issue an order that nothing below middling should be used in filling Government contracts. Horse collars, ordinary blankets, horse blankets, any and everything that was made for Government account had to be made from middling or above. The result was that it gave the speculator the chance of his life to say, "Your Government will not have anything below middling, and therefore any grade below middling is at a discount."

Any shrewd millman, if he wanted to, could have bought good ordinary at fifty or sixty dollars a bale below middling, converted it into Government articles, and sell them as being made of middling, and no man could have told the difference; it was just as good as middling. That is one reason why it is alleged that we have such a plethora of the low grade, because of that unfortunate order.

I took these yarns and went to the President of the United States and called his attention to what would probably be the result of that order. He said to me he did not know that test was in existence.

I do not know whether the results of the Government experiment are accurate or not. The mill people know; I do not. The Government says, "Here is the tensile strength, the bleaching quality, and the waste incident to the different grades." This was done at Danville, Va., and at Clemson College, in South Carolina, under Government auspices. They say, "Here is the result. Practically good ordinary is just as good as middling, barring the foreign matter and the waste incident to the converting."

I had the law amended so that they could not deliver any grade standardized, but that nothing below low middling should be delivered in the fulfillment of a contract. The thing for us to decide is, is there any difference in fact in the intrinsic, commercial value, or as converted and expressed in terms of cloth and yarn, between middling and middling fair?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Except the waste.

Mr. SMITH. Except the waste. If the 10 grades—low middling, strict low middling, strict middling, good middling, strict good middling, and middling fair, and then the stains and tinges of like quality making up the 10 grades—will produce, without any detrimental result, identically the same cloth, and are intrinsically worth the same, how can any man be hurt in demanding specific fulfillment when he is getting cotton that will make the same cloth?

Mr. DIAL. May I ask my colleague if that is not another way of getting the cotton from the farmer for less than it is worth?

Mr. SMITH. If the man who buys the cotton knows that a bale of cotton that is graded as middling fair is worth no more than low middling, I can not for the life of me understand how, as between two traders, we are going to make him pay by law unless the man who sells it is informed by his Government and it is proven that it has been a fictitious, unwarranted difference, and that he should not be allowed to get it.

I want to amend the law in this respect, that hereafter on any contract based upon a deliverable grade, if the Government test proves what they have alleged in the preliminary test is true, on any contract for the future delivery of cotton, specifically fulfilled, that any arbitrary difference made that does not reflect the real intrinsic difference shall bear a tax that will tax it out of existence. I would make them toe the mark. I would say to them, "We will let you deliver 10 grades, but if you say low middling is not worth within 3 cents a pound of what middling is worth, and the test proves that it is worth just as much, you shall pay a tax on that that will prohibit the contract."

What I do not want is to have my cotton crop split in two, and because a shower of rain happens to fall on one part of it that I am to lose $10 a bale, when the man who converts it into cloth makes as good cloth out of that cotton as he does out of the cotton he got before the shower ever fell. That is what we are entitled to have decided. If I am a mill man and under the 10 grades allowed now by the Government can prove by a Government test that the bleaching qualities and the cloth-making qualities of one grade are just as good as the other, barring this difference of 6 per cent loss, then let that per cent of loss be fixed in the contract so I will not be swindled out of half the value of my cotton merely because a man says it is good ordinary and is worth $30 a bale less than middling.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President—

Mr. SMITH. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. DIAL. We are all trying to drive at the same purpose, to get a just law, but my colleague must know that if he had gotten the sample out of some other bales of cotton there might have been a difference. You can not standardize the sample you get out of one bale by the sample you get out of some other bale. There is no doubt that there is a distinction in the grades. Last year when they were buying cotton so many points under the price of certain cotton, certain cotton went below nothing.

Mr. SMITH. Yes. They had good ordinary, for instance, $50 a bale below middling. Middling then dropped $50 a bale, and therefore we would have to give the fellow good ordinary cotton and pay him boot to take it. That is where it would go if we followed that analogy. That is actually true. If they were putting good ordinary at $50 a bale below middling, and then middling went down 1,000 points, good ordinary being the lowest one, where would good ordinary go? There you are! It was worth exactly $50 a bale less than nothing.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President—

Mr. SMITH. I yield to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. SIMMONS. There is one thing about this matter that I can not understand. I do not profess to know much about the future cotton situation, and I do not profess to know much about the difference in the grades of cotton, but the Senator has stated and stated repeatedly in his argument that there was a plethora of low-grade cotton in this country.

Mr. SMITH. I said alleged; I do not know specifically.

Mr. SIMMONS. That means there is not much demand for low-grade cotton in this country by the spinners, does it not?

Mr. SMITH. I would prefer to put it this way, that on account of the discrimination against low grade, both by the Government and by the trade, perhaps the principal part of the cotton that is left is below middling.

Mr. SIMMONS. The point I am making is this: If it be true that there is no demand coming from the spinners for those low grades, I can not understand the statement of the Senator. If those low grades sell in the market for 5 cents a pound less than middling and if the cloth which is made out of the low grades is intrinsically just as valuable, why there should not be a greater demand on the part of the spinners for low grade at half the price of the other?

Mr. SMITH. The Senator does not know but what there is such a demand. I do not know.

Mr. SIMMONS. I understood the Senator to say there was a plethora of that in the market because there was no demand for it.

Mr. SMITH. It is alleged that that is true.

Mr. SIMMONS. It would seem to me, if the balance of the Senator's statement is correct, that the demand would be greatest for that. Why should not the spinner, if he can buy low-grade cotton and make intrinsically just as good cloth out of it for 5 cents less, buy the low-grade cotton?

Mr. SMITH. Is the Senator informed that he is not buying it?

Mr. SIMMONS. I was taking the statement of the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. SMITH. I said that it was alleged. I do not know. I wish I did know. If I can find any means by which I can ascertain just what is the character of the cotton that is being bought and converted, I am going to do it. Common sense would tell anyone that if I can get rid of a 6 per cent waste in the conversion I would do it, and I understand that the mill operatives object to handling it.

Mr. DIAL. If the Senator will allow me to interrupt him again—

Mr. SMITH. Certainly.

Mr. DIAL. As a matter of fact, the higher grades of cotton have been growing in demand. Labor does not like to work the off-grade cotton, because there is too much waste and too much breakage. The tendency is toward the higher grades of cotton, and we are trying to improve it for that reason.

Mr. SIMMONS. I understood the Senator to assert that the difference in the price of low-grade cotton was many times greater than the waste between the low grade and the higher grades.

Mr. SMITH. It is, and I think my colleague will agree with me on that.

Mr. DIAL. Yes; I think that is true.

Mr. SMITH. The average will be the same, however. To sum it all up, it means that if the Government test approximates the truth, the Government ought to rearrange the whole system of grades and include in one grade all cotton that could be converted easily into the same yarns and cloth, regardless of the color or foreign matter. Let them be classified in that way. There is not a buyer in the country who, when he comes to buy cotton for his mill, will not take what is called an even running lot in the grades that his mill can combine and spin. For instance, strict low middling, middling, strict middling, and strict good middling could be combined and spun into the same yarn and used to make the same cloth, but there is not one buyer in a hundred who buys one specific grade, because between good middling, strict good middling, and middling fair it takes a pretty good eye to tell the difference, even in the creamy colors.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator what would be the justice of any grading system that would take four or five different qualities of cotton, which were all of different grades, and classify them under the same grade?

Mr. SMITH. I am going upon this theory, that if the difference in color made no difference in the quality of the yarn or the cloth that might be made, and no incidental expense of conversion was involved, then they should be classified upon their mill value and not upon the incidental color.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. But what is the use of having any classification at all? If you can blend all grades into one and possibly make cloth out of it in the mill, why do you need any grading system?

Mr. SMITH. We would not need any grading system, except that from low middling down to strict good ordinary there is a difference in the foreign matter to the extent of 6 per cent, and that ought to be taken into account. That is the only point I have made.

Mr. WILLIAMS. There is some slight difference in the breakage?

Mr. SMITH. Yes; but it is negligible.

There is another class of cotton that is made in the same field from the same stalk known as stains and tinges. Just as the boll is matured and before it opens, the frost destroys the life of the plant and throws down or precipitates, in frosting the boll, a little tannin that leaks through the opening and puts a stain on it, and it is called stains. The tensile strength and quality of the cotton is just as good as middling fair if it is kept out of the weather, but we have included good middling tinges and good middling stains with the standard grades.

The present contracts prohibit by taxation the delivery of anything outside of the 10 grades specified. If we want to start a reformation, the reformation should be in educating the people what their cotton is worth according to grades as compared with middling. If we can enforce it by law, let us enforce it by law.

Why, Mr. President, here sits the Senator from Georgia [Mr. WATSON], there is my colleague [Mr. DIAL], and here is the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANDELL]. They will agree that a farmer can drive up any street of the ordinary southern town with his bale of cotton and if there are half a dozen buyers in that market and he, without them knowing it, asks each to grade that bale of cotton, I doubt if any two will grade it the same grade.

Mr. DIAL. Not only that, but the same man will possibly not grade it the same the next day as he did that day.

Mr. SMITH. Precisely. When we stop to think that there is $5 a bale difference between middling and strict low middling, what a temptation it is for the man who buys it, dealing with the poor devil who does not know anything about grading, to just come and look at it and say, "This is strict low," and thus get it for a cent a pound less than middling. Then when he ships it out he can ship it out as middling and make $5 a bale in addition to his commission.

The man who produces his cotton and bales it and brings it to the market is entitled to have standard weights and measures intervene and say, "Here is a set of samples; go and compare it," just like I would take a yardstick, and when a man tells me that he has sold me half a yard I would measure it and see if he had. If he had short-measured me, I would know about it, or if he had short-weighted I would know about it. That is what I am pleading for now.

Mr. President, at the proper time I am going to take the floor and go exhaustively into this matter.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Does not the Senator from South Carolina think he had better have a conference of the cotton boomers themselves so they can agree among themselves?

Mr. SMITH. The Senator does not mean to say cotton boomers?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The friends of cotton, then.

Mr. SMITH. I wish to make this observation in all seriousness, that the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] is just as vitally interested in the prosperity of the cotton farmers as I am. The looms of New England and the South have a monopoly of the really spinnable cotton of the world, for whatever else may be said, those who will make a microscopic test of it will find there is no cotton produced in the world that has the same nature of fiber as the cotton produced in the South.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, there is just one thing I wish to suggest as a subject for the Senator from South Carolina to contemplate before he comes forward to exhaustively argue the matter. Even if we can regulate the New York and New Orleans exchanges, and all the exchanges in the United States, would we not have a good deal of the same substantial trouble growing out of the fact that we could not regulate the Havre and Hamburg and Liverpool exchanges; and if they continue this abuse will it not have substantially or to a large extent the same effect upon the farmer? I do not ask that question to be answered now. I merely desire the Senator to think about it before he goes exhaustively into an argument of the subject.

ROANOKE RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, from the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 7208) to extend the time for the construction of a bridge across the Roanoke River in Halifax County, N. C., and I submit a report (No. 243) thereon.

The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] is very anxious to have the bill passed this afternoon, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and it was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge authorized by act of Congress approved March 1, 1919, to be built by the county of Halifax, N. C., across Roanoke River between Hills Ferry and the ferry near the town of Halifax, in said county and State, are hereby extended one and three years, respectively, from the date of approval hereof.

Sec. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DISPOSITION OF WATERS OF COLORADO RIVER.

Mr. LODGE obtained the floor.

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me to ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill which I think will involve no discussion?

Mr. LODGE. I was about to move an executive session, but I yield to the Senator if the matter to which he refers will lead to no debate.

Mr. BURSUM. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate bill 1853.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The title of the bill for which consideration is asked by the Senator from New Mexico will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. A bill (S. 1853) to provide for a compact commission between the States of Arizona, California, Colorado, Nevada, New Mexico, Utah, and Wyoming and between said States and the United States, respecting the disposition and utilization of the waters of the Colorado River for irrigation and other uses, and for other purposes.

Mr. BURSUM. A bill identical with the Senate bill, the title of which has just been read, has been passed by the House of Representatives, and I offer the House bill as a substitute for the Senate bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that the House bill is before the Senate Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, let us have the facts in relation to this matter. The fact is that the Senate Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation in reporting the bill recommended an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert in lieu thereof the House bill. Therefore, the House bill is identical with the Senate amendment, and the Senator from New Mexico desires that the House bill may be passed instead of the Senate bill as proposed to be amended by the committee; and that should be done.

Mr. BURSUM. It is my desire to substitute the House bill for the Senate bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. HARRISON. Reserving the right to object, I desire to ask whether there is a unanimous report of the committee on the bill?

Mr. BURSUM. The report of the committee is unanimous.

Mr. KENYON. Does the bill carry an appropriation?

Mr. HARRISON. There is an appropriation of $10,000 authorized by the bill.

Mr. KENYON. I believe it is a good thing to understand what is embraced in the bills which we are passing, and I suppose it is not out of order for Senators to inquire.

Mr. LODGE. I inquire what is the character of the bill?

Mr. BURSUM. It is a bill to obtain by agreement instead of by litigation an arrangement between western States under the Colorado Basin relative to the disposition and utilization of the waters of the Colorado River for irrigation and other uses. All of the States under that basin have passed legislation relative to the subject, and have, through their governors and the agent appointed by each State, asked for the passage of this legislation. This bill simply proposes to grant the authority of Congress.

Mr. LODGE. I now understand the purpose of the bill. It is a good bill and ought to pass.

Mr. BURSUM. I move that the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 6877) to permit a compact or agreement between the States of Arizona, California, Colorado, Nevada, New Mexico, Utah, and Wyoming respecting the disposition and apportionment of the waters of the Colorado River, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BURSUM. I now ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the House bill 6877.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That consent of Congress is hereby given to the States of Arizona, California, Colorado, Nevada, New Mexico, Utah, and Wyoming to negotiate and enter into a compact or agreement, not later than January 1, 1923, providing for an equitable division and apportionment among said States of the water supply of the Colorado River and of the streams tributary thereto, upon condition that a suitable person, who shall be appointed by the President of the United States, shall participate in said negotiations as the representative of and for the protection of the interests of the United States, and shall make report to Congress of the proceedings and of any compact or agreement entered into; and the sum of $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby authorized to be appropriated to pay the salary and expenses of the representative of the United States appointed hereunder: Provided, That any such compact or agreement shall not be binding or obligatory upon any of the parties thereto unless and until the same shall have been approved by the legislature of each of said States and by the Congress of the United States.

Sec. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to, as follows:

Whereas the Colorado River and its several tributaries rise within and flow through or from the boundaries between the States of Arizona, California, Colorado, Nevada, New Mexico, Utah, and Wyoming; and

Whereas the territory included within the drainage area of the said stream and its tributaries is largely arid and in small part irrigated, and the present and future development necessities and general welfare of each of said States and of the United States require the further use of the waters of said streams for irrigation and other beneficial purposes, and that future litigation and conflict respecting the use and distribution of said waters should be avoided and settled by compact between said States; and

Whereas the said States, by appropriate legislation, have authorized the governors thereof to appoint commissioners to represent said States for the purpose of entering into a compact or agreement between said States respecting the future utilization and disposition of the waters of the Colorado River and of the streams tributary thereto; and

Whereas the governors of said several States have named and appointed their respective commissioners for the purposes aforesaid, and have presented their resolution to the President of the United States requesting the appointment of a representative on behalf of the United States to participate in said negotiations and to represent the interests of the United States: Now, therefore.

Mr. BURSUM. I move that the bill (S. 1853) to provide for a compact commission between the States of Arizona, California, Colorado, Nevada, New Mexico, Utah, and Wyoming and between said States and the United States, respecting the disposition and utilization of the waters of the Colorado River for irrigation and other uses, and for other purposes, be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

MOVING-PICTURE INDUSTRY IN FOREIGN COUNTRIES.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President—

Mr. LODGE. I yield to the Senator from New York, who, I understand, desires to introduce a resolution.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Out of order, I ask unanimous consent to introduce a Senate resolution calling for certain information from the Department of Commerce. I ask that it may be read. It is only four lines long.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the resolution will be read.

The Assistant Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 121), as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of Commerce be, and is hereby, requested to report to the Senate, if not incompatible with the public interest, the development of the moving-picture industry in foreign countries and the present effect and probable future effect upon the industry in the United States of the importation of films of foreign manufacture.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I desire to understand the object of the resolution.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The resolution calls upon the Secretary of Commerce to furnish the Senate with data and information concerning the very important developments internationally in the moving-picture business.

Mr. HARRISON. Is it simply a Senate resolution?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is a Senate resolution calling for the information which I have stated.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, from the reading of the resolution my understanding is that it goes further than calling for information, and asks for the judgment of the Secretary of Commerce as to what effect the development of the moving-picture industry in foreign countries will have upon our industry. I believe that goes further than we usually have gone in such matters. It is all right to call for the facts, but it seems to me the resolution is rather broad, calling, as it does, upon the Secretary of Commerce for his conclusions and judgment as to what the effect of the development would be upon our industry.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I see the point which is made by the Senator from Washington.

Mr. JONES of Washington. It is merely a suggestion.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I will modify the resolution to meet the objection of the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES]; and I ask that as modified the resolution may be read.

The resolution, as modified, was read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of Commerce be, and is hereby, requested, to report to the Senate, if not incompatible with the public interest, the development of the moving-picture industry in foreign countries and the extent of the importation of films of foreign manufacture.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made, and the resolution will be printed and lie over under the rule.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 10 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, August 5, 1921, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, August 4, 1921.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O God, Thou art still speaking. Light and life Thy providence still bestows. It cheers our drooping hearts; it quells our rising fears, and gives unto us the blessed assurance that Thou wilt never leave nor forsake us. Thy hand beckons us and we are satisfied to follow on. Thus would we approach the threshold of our duties, and may the commissions of sacrifice and service be engraven on all of our hearts. Encourage us to press on even with clouds of doubt above and ruts of discouragement below, and fear not, till God shall stop the conflict and call us home. Through Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

CLERK OF THE HOUSE PRO TEMPORE.

The Speaker laid before the House the following communication:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
CLERK'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., August 3, 1921.

Hon. FREDERICK H. GILLET,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

DEAR SIR: Desiring to be temporarily absent from my office, I hereby designate Mr. John H. Hollingsworth, Chief Clerk of the House of Representatives, to sign any and all papers for me which he would be authorized to sign by virtue of this designation and of clause 4, rule 3, of the House.

Very respectfully,

WM. TYLER PAGE,
Clerk of the House of Representatives.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks on the bill H. R. 6611, known as the Sweet bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the Sweet bill. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, has the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN] withdrawn his objection?

Mr. LINEBERGER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN] made objection yesterday on the general principle of objecting to a request on the part of my colleague from New York [Mr. FISH], predicated, as I understand, upon some controversy between him and Mr. FISH regarding an article in a newspaper. My request is simply to extend my remarks in order to voice my opinion of the bill and the conference report particularly.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I will have to ask the gentleman to defer his request until the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN] is present. Personally, I shall not object later.

Mr. LINEBERGER. I will say to the gentleman I am sorry that he insists upon objection, because I do not desire to take up the time of the House on this matter. I would like to express myself in this case by means of an extension of remarks, but, if I am forced to do so, I shall have to obtain, under a different parliamentary situation, permission of the House to speak.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I am not making any captious personal objection. But I think the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN] should be present.

COMMISSIONS IN ARMY BY MEMBERS OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I present the privileged resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee presents a privileged resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 169.

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to ascertain and report to the House whether any Member of the House is at present holding a commission as an officer in the service of the Army of the United States; and if so, whether the holding of such commission vacates the seat of the Member holding the same.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I do not care to discuss the resolution.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman from Tennessee yield to a question?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Certainly.

Mr. MONDELL. Does the gentleman's inquiry include the question as to whether a commission or appointment or position in the Reserve Corps affects the seat of a Member?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I think it will necessarily involve that. I think it will be the duty of the Judiciary Committee to report upon that question. If that element were not involved, there probably would be no necessity for the investigation.

Mr. MONDELL. I realize that, and hence my question, in order that we may be quite certain that the inquiry would involve the question of the Reserve Corps.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I will say that that is within my own contemplation, and I imagine the Judiciary Committee will do that.

Mr. MONDELL. I think the language is broad enough to include the Reserve Corps.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. The Reserve Corps is made a special part of the Army of the United States in the Army reorganization act.

Mr. DYER. I think, if the gentleman will permit, the resolution ought to be amended to include the Reserve Corps, so that there may be no question about it in case it appears and the committee is called upon to act.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I will say to my friend from Missouri, I do not think there is any doubt about it, but if the Judiciary Committee, after investigating, finds there is a doubt, then I think we can amend the resolution.

My DYER. Why not do it now? The gentleman has in mind one reserve officer. He has in mind no Regular Army officer, I am quite sure.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, the resolution is so broad that I can not conceive that there is a doubt about it. The Army reorganization bill, as the gentleman from Vermont has just pointed out, makes the Reserve Corps a part of the Army. I do not think there is any question—

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I move to lay the resolution on the table.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I move the previous question, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri moves to lay the resolution on the table.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the yeas seemed to have it.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present, and I object to the vote for that reason.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count.

The Chair proceeded to count.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, that would not get a roll call. There has been no division.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, at the request of the gentleman from Wyoming and others on this side, against my own judgment, I withdraw the motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri withdraws the motion. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

ENROLLED SENATE BILLS SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled Senate bills of the following titles:

S. 488. An act providing for an exchange of lands between the Swan Land & Cattle Co. and the United States;

S. 530. An act to quiet title to certain tracts of land in the city of Walters, State of Oklahoma;

S. 1434. An act to provide for the relief of the Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland, Baltimore, Md.; and

S. 997. An act conferring jurisdiction upon the United States District Court for the Eastern District of South Carolina to hear and determine the claim of the owners of the Danish steamship Flynderborg against the United States, and for other purposes.

Mr. RICKETTS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker pro tempore signed the same:

H. R. 6611. An act to establish a veterans' bureau and to improve the facilities and service of such bureau, and further to amend and modify the war risk insurance act.

ADMINISTRATION OF INDIAN AFFAIRS.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, under the rule recently reported and adopted I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the bill (H. R. 7848) authorizing appropriations and expenditures for the administration of Indian affairs, and for other purposes; and pending that motion I want to see if we can agree upon time for general debate.

Mr. HAYDEN. How much time does the gentleman suggest?
Mr. SNYDER. I have requests here for 1 hour and 30 minutes.

Mr. HAYDEN. I have requests for nearly that much time. That will be agreeable to me—one hour and a half.

Mr. SNYDER. I suggest that the time for general debate be one hour and a half on a side, one half to be controlled by the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] and the other half by myself.

Mr. CANNON. This is to be for general debate? You do not anticipate action?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Oh, yes. We want to pass the bill to-day.

Mr. CANNON. If there is any hope of its passage, you will have to have a good quorum.

Mr. SNYDER. We shall have to take our chances on that.

Mr. CANNON. Well, do you want unanimous consent?

Mr. SNYDER. No. We are operating under the rule.

Mr. CANNON. When was the rule brought in?

Mr. SNYDER. It was brought in about a week ago, making it in order to-day or any other day that the House could find it convenient to bring it up, so that we are moving now to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering this bill, and we are attempting to fix the time for general debate.

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I do not desire to take the floor myself in opposition to the bill, but I suggest that if there be any Member of the House who wishes to oppose this bill in general debate he ought to have control of the time instead of two gentlemen, both enthusiastically in favor of the bill, controlling all of the time of the debate.

Mr. HAYDEN. I will say to the gentleman that I am, reluctantly, in favor of the bill.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no; not reluctantly. The gentleman is back of the bill. He is the one that is pushing it. I have no objection to that. I do not know that I have any objection to the bill.

Mr. HAYDEN. I propose to allot time to gentlemen opposed to the bill. I have requests of that kind.

Mr. SNYDER. And I propose to do the same.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WALSH. Does the rule under which this bill is brought up for consideration require the general debate to be confined to the bill?

The SPEAKER. It does not.

Mr. WALSH. Well, what is the necessity, then, for one hour and a half on a side if they are going to talk about other matters?

Mr. MANN. Well, that is a good use of time.

Mr. MONDELL. Several gentlemen have asked for time.

Mr. MANN. That has been done in the last week or two to good purpose.

Mr. MONDELL. We have had some very excellent debates while the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] was away.

Mr. WALSH. I will go away again if by absentsing myself I can bring about something beneficial to the country. [Laughter.]

Mr. SNYDER. I desire to say that all who have asked for time, desire to talk on the bill or on Indian affairs with the exception of one Member.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield now to me in order that I may submit a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. SNYDER. I will.

ADJOURNMENT OVER UNTIL MONDAY.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn until Monday.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn until Monday. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADMINISTRATION OF INDIAN AFFAIRS.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask that my unanimous-consent request be put.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the time for general debate be limited to three hours, half to be controlled by himself and half by the gentleman from Arizona. Is there objection?

Mr. CANNON. I object, but I have no objection to their talking an hour and a half on a side. I do not want to close general debate by unanimous consent. I have no objection to gentlemen talking. We have been educating Indians world without end. What is the gentleman's request?

Mr. SNYDER. For one hour and a half of general debate on a side.

Mr. CANNON. You do not propose to close general debate to-day?

Mr. SNYDER. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. You will not have a quorum here.

Mr. SNYDER. We propose to close general debate at the expiration of three hours, and then take up the bill under the 5-minute rule.

Mr. CANNON. Well, proceed in your own way. I shall not make any agreement by unanimous consent that will dispense with a quorum, and you have got to stay here.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I have nothing further to say on the proposition.

The SPEAKER. Objection has been made.

Mr. SNYDER. I do not understand that the gentleman objected.

Mr. CANNON. I do object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I think we ought to have a quorum here.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. BLANTON. We ought to have a quorum here.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas makes the point that there is no quorum present.

Mr. BLANTON. I will withdraw the point, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNYDER], that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 7848.

Mr. CANNON. Unless you agree that you can conclude your talking—

Mr. SNYDER. I have no desire to prolong discussion.

Mr. MONDELL. We want to discuss the measure fully.

Mr. CANNON. You want to discuss it fully, without a quorum.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from New York, that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 7848.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] will please take the chair.

Thereupon the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 7848, with Mr. BURTON in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 7848, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7848) authorizing appropriations and expenditures for the administration of Indian affairs, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Bureau of Indian Affairs, under the supervision of the Secretary of the Interior, in addition to the duties now required to be performed by existing law, shall direct, supervise, and expend such moneys as Congress may from time to time appropriate, authority for which is hereby granted, or that may be available from other sources, for the benefit, care, and assistance of the Indians throughout the United States for the following purposes:

General support and civilization, including education.

For relief of distress and conservation of health.

For industrial assistance and advancement and general administration of Indian property.

For extension, improvement, operation, and maintenance of existing Indian irrigation systems and for development of water supplies.

For the enlargement, extension, improvement, and repair of the buildings and grounds of existing plants and projects.

For the employment of inspectors, supervisors, superintendents, clerks, field matrons, farmers, physicians, Indian police, Indian judges, and other employees.

For the suppression of traffic in liquor, peyote, and other deleterious drugs.

For the purchase of horse-drawn and motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles for official use.

And for general and incidental expenses in connection with the administration of Indian affairs.

SEC. 2. That annual estimates shall be submitted for the consideration of Congress as provided by section 5 of the legislative act approved March 3, 1901 (31 Stat. L., 1009).

Mr. SNYDER. I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY].

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, this measure simply makes in order the items which have been carried for many years in the Indian appropriation bills. I helped to take a number of these items out of the last Indian bill through points of order, but it was the most futile effort possible, for they were reinserted in the Senate and in the end nothing was accomplished. I am opposed to legislating on the point-of-order principle, where one man can prevent action by the entire body, and therefore I shall not oppose this measure. I sincerely hope, however, that it will give us the opportunity to get down to the fundamentals of our Indian system and inspire us to constructive remedies for an intolerable situation.

I had the pleasure of serving during the past two years on the Indian Affairs Committee, presided over by that most tireless worker and able chairman, the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNYDER]. [Applause.]

During those two years one of the most thorough and complete investigations ever undertaken by a committee of the House was held by that committee. Those hearings left with me certain well-defined convictions, and I am glad to have this opportunity of presenting them, in the hope that I may help a little in the solution of a problem whose very existence in this year of grace is a shameful reflection upon American efficiency and American justice.

Mr. Chairman, no failure or maladministration in Government service can reflect so directly upon the Nation as in our relations with the American Indians. They are wards of the Nation, not of any State or community. They are disfranchised and inarticulate, forced to look to Washington for every need.

It is therefore a peculiar responsibility resting upon every Member of Congress to interest himself in their welfare. Yet that responsibility is not often realized. I do not have a single Indian in my district, and until I was made a Member of the Indian Affairs Committee cared little about the question and knew nothing except what I had learned in little-headed discussion of Indian appropriation bills and in casual visits to a few Indian reservations and Indian schools.

Two years' intensive study has convinced me that Congress has abdicated its functions and powers for many years to a bureau. The result has been just what a great writer on constitutional government said must always follow bureaucracy. "A bureaucracy," said he, "is sure to think that its duty is to augment official power, official business, or official numbers, rather than to leave free the energies of mankind." That is an exact statement of the attitude of the Indian Bureau, which is the embodiment of bureaucracy, a despotic, arbitrary domain which has been permitted to exist and to flourish in this land of the free.

We hear a great deal about bureaucracy in other departments of the Government. Let me say that I have no fear of any bureaucracy exercising despotic sway over free men. In the full control of their own property, with the right of free speech and the ballot, a mightier weapon than the musket, Americans have always ample remedy against any set of public officials who might undertake to rob them of their liberties. Free Americans may always abolish bureaucracy and send bureaucrats into oblivion by a peaceful but effective revolution at the ballot box.

There are certain requirements necessary to establish a real bureaucracy. There must be a subject and helpless people. There must be a class of ruling officials, and there must be possible power and profit out of the exploitation of the subject people.

These characteristics of bureaucracy are all present in the Indian Bureau and nowhere else in our Government. Here are the American Indians, without the rights of citizenship, subject to every whim of their power-seeking rulers, but possessed of $1,000,000,000 in money and property. Here is a vast ruling organization, with 6,000 employees, whose very existence on the public pay roll depends upon the exploitation of those under them.

There are many black pages in the history of America's dealings with the red men, the native inhabitants of the continent. The first word the Pilgrim Fathers and the Jamestown colonists heard from Indian lips was the word "welcome." They were the type, then, of whom Columbus wrote to his sovereign:

There are not a better people in the world than these, nor more affectionate, affable, and mild. They love their neighbors as themselves.

The American Indian held it a crime to take pay for food. They extended their hospitality with open hands, but the response in the end was written in fire and blood.

Then, in 1775, the Continental Congress, in the midst of the War of the Revolution, realized the deadly danger of the enmity of the Indians. The Congress agreed to the report of its Committee on Indian Affairs, beginning with these words:

That the securing and preserving the friendship of the Indians appears to be a subject of the utmost moment in these Colonies.

The very first treaty made by the Continental Congress, acting for the United States of America, was the treaty made with the Delaware Indians. In that treaty, after the help of the Indians was guaranteed, the hope was held out that a State would be created and the Indians assured possession, with representation in Congress.

Other treaties were made and a great number of the Indians fought loyally under the new flag of the United States. So important was their help that Gen. Washington declared that if they had been enemies instead of friends the Revolution would not have ended in American independence.

Mr. Chairman, the manner in which that loyalty and friendship were repaid need not be elaborated here. From the very beginning of national history the Federal Government has had exclusive jurisdiction of the Indians of America. Out of the provision in the Constitution that "Congress shall have power to regulate commerce with the Indian tribes" has grown our system of dealing with the Indians.

From 1789 to 1849 Indian affairs were under the control of an Indian office, which was under the War Department. The office of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs was created by the act of 1832, and in 1849 this office was transferred to the newly created Department of the Interior.

During this period the "reservation" plan was adopted and the Indians in the Eastern States were moved to western territory and segregated there. The Government assumed the guardianship of the persons of the Indians and also acquired, through treaties and laws, the complete control of their property. Lands were sold and the funds were placed in the Treasury, to be expended by the Indian Bureau for "such objects as will best promote the comfort, civilization, and development of the tribes entitled to them."

Under these treaties the Government agreed to give supplies, goods, and money for a certain period. When the periods expired there arose the system of "rationing" through which gifts of food and other supplies were made to the Indians.

Through all these processes the Indians and their property were brought completely under the control of the Federal Government. The Indian was a native-born American but he was not a citizen. Gen. Cushing called him a "domestic subject." Daniel Webster applied to the Indians the legal definition of "perpetual inhabitants with diminutive rights." About the best characteristic of the anomalous status of the Indian was that he was a "ward of the Government."

For many years the futility and injustice of the whole system was seen and denounced by a great many Americans. In 1885 the Board of Indian Commissioners, a commission created in 1869 at the request of President Grant, made an earnest plea that all Indians born within the territorial limits of the United States be declared citizens.

Finally, in 1887, Congress definitely and deliberately decided to end the system by breaking up the tribal governments and stopping the "rationing" policy. The Dawes Act, known as the general allotment law, was passed in that year. This law undertook to confer citizenship upon every Indian allotted land under its provisions or under any law or treaty. It further provided that "every Indian, born within the territorial limits of the United States, who has voluntarily taken up his residence separate and apart from any tribe of Indians and has adopted the habits of civilized life, is hereby entitled to all the rights, privileges, and immunities of such citizens."

For an entire generation it has been the express purpose of the American Congress to individualize the Indians, to give them homes of their own, to help them become self-supporting, and to make them citizens of the United States.

It has been the purpose of Congress to end the system of guardianship and make the Indian a citizen instead of a ward. Congress said clearly some 34 years ago that the guardian's first duty to his wards is to make them competent to take care of themselves.

I contend that that purpose has not been carried out in good faith by the Indian Bureau. I have no hesitation in saying that, with all the record of injustice in the past, the blackest page of our dealings with the Indians is to be found in the Indian Bureau system of the past 30 years. With 330,000 souls to be dealt with, less than one-fourth the population of my home county of Allegheny in Pennsylvania, less than one-third of the number of immigrants coming to this country from foreign lands in a single year, the problem has been growing greater with each passing year and Federal expenditures increasing by leaps and bounds. The shame of broken Government promises of the distant past is overshadowed by the deliberate and long-continued effort to hold these Indians in chains against the express will of the lawmaking body.

Mr. Chairman, the Indian Bureau has multiplied its activities, its employees, and its expenditures many fold in 30 years and has actually prevented a solution of the problem. It has held to all the Indians under its care and has reached out for others who had been self-supporting and living free from its restrictions. Once corralled by the bureau, it has been an almost impossible task for an Indian to break loose from a system which, by its very nature, degenerated, degraded, and destroyed. The Indians have been kept prisoners on reservations, under arbitrary control and without personal and property rights. They have been segregated in a way to encourage and perpetuate savagery and the use of worthless languages.

The bureau has sought to make such use of the Indians' funds as would unfit them for the management of their own affairs and their own property. The money appropriated for the service of the Indians has not been directed to strengthen their manhood and fit them for intelligent citizenship and a place as self-supporting members of America. Instead it has been largely spent in building up a great organization, with a thousand ramifications, each adding new restrictions upon these wards of the Government and making it still more difficult for them to escape the toils and traps laid about them. The whole purpose has been to make the American Indian an Indian instead of an American.

If a real effort had been made to fit these Indians for citizenship and to set them free, certainly the bureau, in a generation, would have decreased its activities and each year would have been a lessened overhead expense. As the Indians were born, educated, and grew up to maturity they would be given the chance of a free-born American, to make their own way in life, unfettered by external power. By this time, we might have reasonably expected that the Indian Bureau would have decreased its activities until it functioned only for the benefit of the old Indians, who, in 1887, had no education and no opportunities to know the duties and obligations of American citizenship.

Mr. Chairman, the facts show a vastly different situation. Year by year since that time the bureau has increased its activities and its organization.

In 1832 when the bureau was first established it was confidently predicted that in 25 years the Indian problem would be solved and there would be no further need for the bureau activities.

In that 25 years the entire cost of Indian administration was $50,000,000, less than the sum spent in the past four years. During this period whole Indian tribes were removed to distant reservations, provisions were furnished, and annuities paid. From the lands sold under these treaties the Government received two dollars for every one spent.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I will yield, but I would like to continue my statement.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Were there more Indians then than at the present time?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Not under the control of the Indian Bureau. The fact is, that when Congress passed the Dawes Act with the intention of giving Indians individual homesteads and making them citizens, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs reported 243,399 Indians on the bureau rolls. In 1920 the commissioner reported 336,337 Indians on the bureau rolls. That increase does not mean any real increase in the number of Indians, it means that the policy has been to hold fast to all the Indians possible and to round up other Indians who have been outside the fold, wherever and whenever they can be corralled. Every additional Indian brought within bureau control was a reason for greater expenditures and increased organization and no opportunity has been lost to accomplish those ends.

Almost entirely through items on appropriation bills, and without authorization in any statute, divisions and sections have been added, until to-day this agency of the Government is a nation within a nation, a duplicate organism which performs almost every act undertaken by every other department of the Government. It is legislative, executive, and judicial in its functions. It acts as judge, jury, prosecutor, and executioner. It is a mammoth anomaly in American form of government.

The hearings before the Indian Affairs Committee during the past two years show that this bureau has 6,000 employees, not including 12,000 Indian employees. There are scientists and laborers, judges and policemen, accountants and blacksmiths, irrigationists and foresters, carpenters and chauffeurs, physicians and dentists, druggists and rangers, lawyers and farmers, teachers and messengers, stockmen and merchants, oil and gas experts, cooks, waiters, and followers of every other vocation known to modern civilization.

In 1887 there were in the bureau an account division, finance division, files and record division, land and law division, and education division.

Since that time there has been added a purchase division, a probate division, an inspection division, and forestry and irrigation divisions. The number of employees has been multiplied many times.

New sections have been added to all these divisions, and the present organization shows in the education division such sections as employees, schools, law and order, industries, construction, health, and statistics.

Over and above all these divisions and sections is the inspection division, with its supervision of activities in the field and in the office. It is quite natural that such a system must have its inspectors and inspectors of inspectors. In the inspection division there is a special supervisor over the reimbursable industrial appropriations. There are two special supervisors over the probate division. There are two supervisors, one hospital supervisor and one chief supervisor, over the health division. There is a chief supervisor and an assistant supervisor over the irrigation division. There are 10 district supervisors over the schools. There is a chief supervisor and an assistant supervisor over the courses of study in the schools. There is a chief supervisor over the agriculture division. There is a chief supervisor over the live stock division. There are three supervisors over the receipts and disbursements of funds. There is a supervisor over Indian employment. There is a supervisor over Indian traders. Then over all this vast inspection service there is a chief inspector and four separate assistants whose duties are to make special investigations, presumably of the work of the other inspectors.

The forestry division was organized in 1909. The diagram furnished by the bureau shows that it contains six sections: Protection of forestry, forest surveys, sales of lumber, manufacture of lumber, forest extension and grazing.

These are in turn divided into a host of subsections, each with its employees. These subsections are: 1. Construction of roads, trails, bridges, and telephone lines. 2. Establishment of range stations. 3. Maintenance of forest control. 4. Suppression of forest fires. 5. Prevention of timber trespass. 6. Prevention of destruction by insects. 7. Education as to proper use of forests. 8. Establishment of boundaries. 9. Examination of timber. 10. Detailed estimate of amount of timber. 11. Systematic appraisals of timber values. 12. Preparation of contour maps. 13. Regulation for particular salaries. 14. Preparation of contracts and bonds. 15. Presentation of sales to timber operators. 16. Supervision of logging operations. 17. Disposition of slash from lumbering operations. 18. Records of transactions. 19. Conducting of logging operations. 20. Establishment and manufacture of sawmills. 21. Operation of sawmills. 22. Sale of sawmill products. 23. Supervision of cutting operations by Indians. 24. Encouragement of natural reproduction. 25. Planting of trees. 26. Assistance in management of stock. 27. Supervising grazing in Indian lands. 28. Preventing damage to forests.

Did you ever hear of a private business organization so divided and subdivided into futility and foolishness? No business corporation could last a month on such a system. There is a separate agency for conducting logging operations; another for supervising logging operations. There is even a separate branch to encourage the natural reproduction of trees. Whether that means an employee who stands guard over the acorn and the shoot and sapling until it reaches maturity in the great oak I do not know, but rather think it does.

Little wonder that the Indian is baffled and completely confused by a complicated system which will puzzle a college professor. Everything is directed from Washington and complaints and requests run a long gauntlet before finally reaching a remote and haughty administrative authority.

There are frequent changes of administrative heads. New rules and regulations are imposed. The procedure of to-day may be reversed to-morrow.

In view of the exact facts, there was considerable justification for the remark of the old Indian chief in council. After a representative of the bureau had spoken, he was asked to take part in the discussion. He responded with this speech:

Everyone who comes to us from Washington is a liar. The bald-headed ones are the worst. This man is a bald-headed liar.

Then he sat down, his last word spoken. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, it simply passes belief to note the vast overhead in forestry operations, and this is made more astounding when it is known that there is a Forestry Service in the Government, organized for exactly this same kind of work. In the Forestry branch in the Indian Service there is a chief who receives $3,500 a year. There is a chief supervisor of forests, 2 supervisors of forests, 2 expert lumbermen for supervision and inspection, 2 forest assistants, 2 deputy supervisors of forests and a cruiser, who are available for assignment to special work on various reservations, 15 deputy supervisors and rangers in charge of various reservations, 40 forest assistants and scalers employed in the administration of timber sales, and about 100 guards. There are 165 persons employed in this expanding service. The assistant commissioner, after making the above statement, said that there are 115 employees and that the salaries would not exceed an average of $1,200 per annum.

That would mean $138,000 per year for salaries alone. There is an item of $400,000 carried for "Industrial work and care of timber" in the 1920 appropriation bill. And it is safe to assume that a major portion of it will go to timber work.

The timber is presumed to belong to the Indians and to be sold for their benefit. During the past 10 years, with unprecedented high prices for lumber, all the timber cut under the supervision of the Forestry branch was valued at $15,000,000. The Indian owners received an infinitesimal fraction of that sum for their direct benefit.

Every division in the Indian Bureau shows practically the same state of affairs. Extensive and expensive organization, with diminishing benefits to the Indians and increasing benefits to the bureau—that is the uniform story throughout.

In the early days of the Indian Bureau the annual appropriation for the entire service was around $800,000 and this met all treaty obligations, the transportation of Indians to reservations, rations, and supplies. The 1920 Indian appropriation bill carried $15,346,108.84. In the early days there were 5 agency superintendents. Now there are 150.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH. Have the expenses of this department been increasing during recent years?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Yes; increasing to the extent of millions of dollars.

Mr. ELSTON. That is hardly accurate. They have been decreasing during the past several years.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. No. I mean to say that whereas in 1887 the expenses of the Indian Bureau were $5,000,000, in 1920 they were more than $15,000,000, an increase of $10,000,000 a year, long after Congress had decided to make the Indians self-supporting men and women.

Mr. WALSH. The more they make themselves self-supporting the more it costs to take care of them.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I would rather say that the more efforts made by the Indian Bureau to keep them from becoming self-supporting, the more money it costs the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, how has this gigantic organization, with its tremendous expenses, been built up? How has it been possible to not only perpetuate but to increase greatly the task definitely undertaken 30 years ago, that of making competent, self-supporting Americans out of some 300,000 assimilable American Indians?

It could be done in but one way—making the Indians incompetent and keeping them incompetent. The system depends upon branding the Indians as inferior and incapable of taking care of themselves.

In answer to a question of mine, Commissioner Sells stated that every self-supporting Indian should be a citizen and have all the rights that go with citizenship. He emphatically declared that a vast number of the Indians are not self-supporting and therefore must be protected and guarded by the bureau.

Now, we have been hothousing the Indians for a century, and there never was a normal Indian who could not have been made into a competent, self-supporting individual in the 21 years required to make a competent citizen of a child born to any American parents. But the average Indian is not self-supporting, and as long as the present system continues he can not become self-supporting. His opportunities are bounded by the reservation and there is no chance for his development. His chances to make money are in the hands of agents and officials who thrive upon a system which depends upon his being a nonsupporting, incompetent individual.

What is the exact situation? It can be seen by a study of the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs for the fiscal year 1920.

That report shows that 26,949 Indians were engaged in other industries than farming and live-stock raising. What were these industries which would help make competent, self-supporting citizens? They were basket making, beadwork, pottery, blanket weaving, lace making, fishing, woodcutting, and wild rice gathering.

Three thousand nine hundred and thirty-five basket makers had an income of less than $25 a year. Two thousand seven hundred and fifty-five beadworkers had an income of less than $20 a year. Five thousand five hundred and fifty-seven blanket weavers made less than $120 in the year. Two thousand one hundred and forty-four fishermen made less than $80 a year.

Two hundred and twelve lace makers made less than $30 a year. Five hundred and sixty-six pottery workers made less than $15 a year. One thousand three hundred and fifty wild rice gatherers made less than $10 a year each.

Each worker of the entire 26,949 had an average income of $69 for the entire year, or $5.75 a month.

Is that the method in making self-supporting citizens. Yet there are teachers for these occupations, these soft, nomad trades. The Indians are encouraged to do this kind of work, which in itself unfits them for a place in a real productive community and industry.

But let us look a little further into the employment of these Indians as revealed in the report of the bureau. Twelve thousand two hundred and twenty-four Indians were employed by the bureau itself during the year. They earned or were paid $1,586,141, or $130 a year. That means that they had an income of a little more than $10 a month on which to be self-supporting citizens.

There were 11,038 employed by private parties. These did a little better than those in the bureau service. They received the munificent pay of $220 a year, or less than $20 a month, on which to be self-supporting citizens. The only work they could secure was that which might be offered adjacent to the reservation, and under such limitations they did the best they could. Still, $20 a month does not mean self-support in these days of the high cost of living.

There were 40,962 farmers, and they cultivated an area of $90,700 acres. They raised crops worth $4,437,572. That means that each farmer had 22 acres and received about $110 for the effort for the entire year.

Is it any wonder that a case can be made out by interested parties against the competency of Indians who have only such opportunities. If they are incompetent, the bureau is responsible. With a fair chance and the shackles removed from them they can prove their right to the title of self-supporting individuals, but they can not do it under such obstacles as now prevail. If one-tenth the effort made to persuade, hire, and force the Indians to remain in tribal masses is made to persuade them to become part of American life, the Indian problem will be solved to the benefit of all concerned. All that is necessary is to carry out the thought of James Russell Lowell, "The 'Great American Idea' is to make a man a man and then let him be."

The adults in the Indian reservations can not become self-supporting under these conditions. What, then, of the children who are growing up to-day? Are they being educated into self-supporting Americans, with the education needed to make them able citizens?

The figures show last year 21,056 children eligible for school were not in school because of lack of facilities. That means that one out of every four Indian children is deprived of all opportunities to secure the fundamentals of education absolutely essential to a worthy place in the American community.

Has Congress not appropriated the money for Indian schools? Since 1887, the date of the Dawes Act, $115,000,000 have been appropriated for schools for Indians. The commissioner's report states that the Government has school buildings on the various reservations valued now at $15,660,373. That means that money enough to provide a $40,000 school building for every 200 children has been furnished by Congress. The report, however, states that the money has been spent to build 2,450 schools. That means a school building for every 33 Indian children.

Building so many schoolhouses and scattering them so widely has certain fixed results. It keeps the children on the reservations amid all the obstacles imposed by such conditions. It keeps them from learning the ways of outside life in American civilization, and holds them fast to outworn traditions and outgrown customs. It makes necessary more employees. The pay roll of the Indian school system last year amounted to $1,727,000. In the past 10 years we have spent over $600 for the education of every Indian child in the United States.

The enrollment of pupils in a mission school on the Red Lake Reservation in Minnesota is evidence in point. There are 88 Indian pupils enrolled, and it takes $125, approximately, out of tribal funds to maintain each child a year. There are children on the list who entered the school eight years ago, and who had 60 months schooling before being enrolled there, and who are still in the third grade. Not a single child is above the sixth grade. One of the few sixth-grade pupils was enrolled 10 years ago, with 66 months previous schooling.

The American Government has expended a sufficient sum to give every Indian child a high-school education. The money has been expended, but the children have not had the education. Therefore they are doomed to be incompetent, and because of that condition the guardianship of the Indian Bureau must be continued.

Guardianship, did I say? The commissioner's report for 1920 shows that among 206,808 Indians scheduled 73,573 have tuberculosis and trachoma. The surgeon general of the Public Health Service made a survey of Indian schools in 1912 and reported that 8,940 children out of 39,231 had trachoma. One out of every three Indians afflicted with these dreaded diseases. Yet millions have been spent for the purpose of guarding them from the dangers of mingling with the whites and risking the contagion of their diseases, mental, moral, and physical.

Guardianship? Yes; the bureau distributed last year rations and gifts to a cost of $367,081. It is the most expensive system of outdoor relief in the world, and these bureau hand-outs were given in many instances to those who had large sums of money in the Treasury of the United States. Almost every dollar of it was a waste of money and far more. It was pauperizing, degrading influence upon human beings. It made the Indians who were given such humiliating bounties feel their utter helplessness and realize their degradation.

Take the report of the Committee on Expenditures in the Interior Department during the Sixty-second Congress. In two large volumes, known as House Report 1336, this committee details a state of affairs which for fraud, debauchery, and gross betrayal of justice has never been excelled.

This House committee investigated conditions on the White Earth Indian Reservation in Minnesota. They say on page 20 of the report:

These White Earth Indians, the remnant of the once powerful Chipewewa Nation, are rapidly succumbing to the effects of extreme poverty and the white man's diseases, and betrayed by their lawful guardian and their mixed-blood relatives, are now despoiled of their heritage.

It is, indeed, a sad commentary upon the administration of the Interior Department, and more particularly upon the Indian Bureau, that notwithstanding the fact that they have about $4,000,000 in the United States Treasury and that millions of dollars of their own have already been spent, ostensibly for their relief and civilization, the condition of a very large part of the tribe is far worse than when the first treaty was concluded with them at Fort McIntosh in 1785. When one considers their present condition and reflects on the treatment they have received, he is forcibly reminded of the words of Thomas Jefferson, "When I reflect that there is a just God, I tremble for the future of my country."

Guardianship? Yes; there are 55,141 Indian families outside the Five Civilized Tribes. Of these, the commissioner's report shows that 44,195 are living in permanent houses. The quality of these houses may be understood when it is known that 14,200 of them have no floors. Besides these, 10,496 families live in tents, tepees, and so forth.

These conditions actually exist to-day after all our efforts and our expenditures. They are the sure results of the bureau system of government.

The salary list of the bureau in 1920 was $4,507,586. There is a reason in every dollar of that sum for the continuance of the present system.

The bureau depends upon the retention of these Indians in the position of helpless wards, huddled together on reservations, and therefore every effort is made to hold to the system.

The Indians are encouraged to remain on the reservation. If any are educated elsewhere, they are encouraged to return. They are taught that their homes, their property, and their future prosperity lie within the confines of the reservation. If a young Indian marries, his reservation-born child has a place on the tribal rolls and a share in the funds locked up in the Treasury. If his child is born outside the reservation, it loses any claim to a share in the pot at the end of the bureau rainbow.

There are many inducements held out. Those vast irrigation schemes, paid for out of alleged reimbursable funds, which are seldom reimbursed, work both ways. It is a mortgage hold on the property of the Indians and an implied promise that the work will be done and in the end the mortgage will be canceled. Within recent years there has been built up a vast system of loans to Indians, known as "reimbursables." The money is appropriated from the Treasury and spent for a multitude of purposes according to the whims of the bureau agents. All this money is supposed to be paid back to the Government by the Indians. The loans are a lien on the property of the Indians and thus become chains to hold them to their places. They are modern bureau inventions for the one great end—bureau perpetuity.

Exclusive of the last two years, there had been expended in reimbursables for industrial purposes alone, $3,036,936. This money has gone for live stock, cattle, sheep, milch cows, horses, farming implements, seed, fencing material, and many other things.

Both before and after the loan there are red-tape restrictions and regulation which destroy independence and individuality. The chief of the industry section summed these up as follows:

A presurvey is made by the superintendent before anything is sold to the Indian, and his needs are ascertained usually by the farmer in charge of the district in which the Indian lives. If the situation of the Indian is such as to indicate that he will make good use of the team and wagon, etc., it is sold to him, because it is the duty of the farmer to follow him up and see that he does make good use of it.

That outline shows clearly the good use of these reimbursables. They serve as bribes to good Indians, that is, those who are obedient to the bureau in every detail and then they serve as a splendid method of keeping these Indians good for all time to come. But it is a shameful thing to enmesh men in such perpetual debt obligations.

On the Blackfeet Indian Reservation, for instance, out of a total of $344,017 advanced as reimbursable funds, only $48,132 had been repaid at the time of the hearings.

When asked what the Government will do in order to enforce payment of these loans, the commissioner and assistant commissioner both declared that the policy had not been determined. The chief of the industry section gave the real situation clearly when he said:

I think it would be safe to allow these delinquents to stand for an indefinite period, you might say, providing the Indian is making an ordinary effort to make his agreement good. It is largely, in my estimate, a part of their education along business lines.

I leave it to the Members of this House to decide just what kind of education along business lines is involved in a system of loaning money to Indians on the assumption that it will be paid back and then to allow the loan to run on, with no effort to collect it, as long as the Indian submits to every kind of restrictions and allows his mind to run uniformly with the Indian Bureau. It is certainly not the kind of business education calculated to make competent citizens.

Such a system offers endless opportunities for fraud and extortion and is certain to lead to bitter resentment, even though there be no misconduct in the transactions.

Capt. Perauk, Ute Indian chief, made a statement concerning the members of his tribe which might be applied to every tribe. He said:

Some of them owe on reimbursables, and they take that out, but they have no way of knowing how much they pay on that when they don't know how much they are getting, they can't keep track of it.

The whole tribe are troubled about this, and can't understand why the agent does not tell them how much they are going to get, and how often.

The payment they had last time was to have been $100, and none of them got more than $80, some $50, some $40, and they want to know where the rest of their checks went, from $20 to $80 held out, on each check.

This goes to show that the agent is crooked, and they have the proof of that.

The Indian farmer makes them put their thumb mark on the checks, and then takes them and has them cashed; they don't know how much he holds out, as they don't know how much the checks are for.

They want to know why the agent is allowed to rob them this way.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman from New York yield me a little additional time?

Mr. SNYDER. I yield 10 additional minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Then besides the loans made to individuals and presumed to be reimbursable there are tribal loans, in which the entire tribe is involved. On the Blackfeet Reservation more than $250,000 was invested in a tribal herd of cattle. It was stated in the hearings that the herd numbered 4,800 and that it was valued at $300,000. What is the situation now, when the price of cattle has dropped to less than half its figure? Such a herd to-day is worth less than one-half the amount expended for it. Who is to pay the loss? It was bought on a reimbursable system and the money was to be taken from the tribal funds. Will the Indians, who had nothing to say about the plan, have to stand a loss of more than $100,000?

There is more than the injustice to the Indians involved in such a plan as dealing with herds of cattle and sheep, which are always more or less a gambling venture. There is a deeper matter of perpetuating tribal property and tribal systems. Such herds and their possession delay the day of individuality. They put property on a tribal basis and hold Indians to the reservations. They evidence a return to the days when all possessions were in the hands of the tribe and nothing in the hands of individuals. The whole system is wrong and should be abolished, and the individual Indian should be encouraged to stand out as an entity, depending upon himself to become self-supporting instead of dealing with him as a tribal mass.

On the Cheyenne River Reservation in South Dakota is a tribal herd of sheep. That herd cost $25,957 originally, and the expenditures for employees, feed, and so forth, have amounted to $4,927 more.

The value of the herd, together with all receipts for the sale of products, shows a net gain of $1,140. But the inventory was made when sheep were worth many times more than they are to-day. Who is to stand the loss? The Indians, who had nothing to say about the investment, or the Government, which made the investment? It is safe to say that in the final analysis the Government will lose the money and the Indians will have another course in business education.

Mr. Chairman, how in the name of all that is sensible can the Indians pay back this Government-created debt? Take the Pimas, whose outlook was the occasion of considerable felicitations by the Indian Bureau employees during the hearings. There is an irrigation system which June 30, 1918, had cost $449,683.62, with an estimated cost to complete of $170,000 more. Besides this, $43,137 had been loaned to individual Indians for industrial purposes, all of which was to be paid as reimbursables.

The total income of the 6,253 Pimas for 1919 was $271,049, and this included crops raised, stock sold, native industries, sale of timber, and wages earned. That means that each Indian had an income for the entire year of $43.35, or $3.60 per month.

Can the Government take out of an income like that sufficient to reimburse itself for these expenditures? Such a task is the nearest approach to squeezing blood from a turnip that could well be imagined. Congress will simply be compelled to annul the debt, and the sooner it is done and the whole practice discontinued the better for everybody.

Two hundred Pima Indians working at the most menial tasks in American industry can make more in a year than the entire tribe made after all these "orphan asylum" methods have been given full sweep.

Gen. Pratt, founder of the Carlisle Indian School, and better acquainted with the Indian problem from an administrative standpoint than any man in America, has expressed it more forcefully than I could. He says:

Lo, "the poor Indian" doesn't half express it. Driven forcibly from his ancient home, corralled on a reservation, robbed of his rights, and finally reduced to a state of practical peonage, he is deliberately kept in a state of savagery and denied the privileges of citizenship and the protection of the courts of the land which originally belonged to him alone.

Mr. Chairman, you may take any group of Americans you choose, segregate them on reservations, and put a bureau over their affairs; let that bureau take their money and spend it for them without informing them of the amount or the purpose; take the land on which they live and sell it or lease it without their consent; give them royalties from oil wells and mines, but no opportunity to work them themselves; educate them to believe that outside their narrow walls and barriers great perils lurk and certain ruin impends; require that every act, no matter how simple, must have the O. K. of an agent whose position depends on the perpetuation of the system.

Does any sane man deny that such a process can fail to breed a race of cringing creatures, unfit for responsibilities of any kind? Yet there is no more need for bureaucratic control of Indians than of the Bohemians, Slavs, Poles, Hungarians, French, Irish, German, English, Scotch, or any other of the nationalities that have been merged into American citizenship. Would any sane man argue that because of such treatment these segregated souls were forever incompetent and should never have a chance to meet life's responsibilities as men and women?

That is the story of Indian control. The very fact that the spirit of many thousands of Indians has not been broken and they still dare to stand for their rights is evidence that they are not an inferior but a superior race. They are worthy of freedom and a fair start and a square deal in the race of life in the midst of American civilization.

The reservation system may have served a good purpose in compelling the Indians of other days to forsake their wild, nomadic ways. But its day is long since passed. It is to-day a breeding place of idlers, beggars, gamblers, and paupers. It is a prison pen where human beings are doomed to live amid sad memories of their ancestors and among the ghosts of the dead. The sooner the whole tribal system and the reservation policy is abolished the sooner we write "finis" to one of the blackest pages of American history.

Compare the American community of 7,500 with the Indian community of the same number, and you will no longer wonder at the lack of Indian development.

In the American community the people are citizens. In the Indian community the vast majority are helpless subjects.

In the American community the officials are elected by the people. In the Indian community a bureau agent has arbitrary authority.

In the American community there are banks, where depositors control their own accounts. In the Indian community there are no banks and the Indians have no right to control their own money.

In the American community the public funds are reported and audited. In the Indian community there is no itemized account of Indian expenditures and the Indians are not told how their money is spent.

In the American community the individual has his private possessions, to be held against the world. In the Indian community the individual may be shorn of his possessions at the whim of a bureau agent without redress.

In the American community there are theaters, movies, lectures, recreational and educational programs. In the Indian community there are no recreation halls and get-together meetings are forbidden.

In the American community there are public libraries and open forums for public discussion. There are no libraries in the Indian community and open forums are forbidden.

In the American community there are physicians and dentists giving competitive service. In the Indian community there are perhaps two Government physicians, who are paid the same salary, whether they give service or not.

In the American community there are public schools, grade and high, fitting the youth for the duties of life. In the Indian community there is an Indian school to the sixth grade only, with teachers for useless occupations, unfitting the youth for real American life.

In the American community there are courts of justice, where wrongs are dealt with according to law. In the Indian community there are police judges, who are absolutely under the control of the superintendent, and whose decisions are without validity until approved by the superintendent.

In the American community no person may be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law. In the Indian community no Indian has any right to life, liberty, or property which a bureau agent is bound to respect.

In the American community offenses and crimes are dealt with under exact laws. In the Indian community the Supreme Court has ruled that certain heinous crimes, if committed by an Indian against an Indian, are outside the jurisdiction of any American court.

In the American community there are farmers' associations, housekeepers' clubs, parents' associations, and other mutual-benefit organizations. In the Indian community they are forbidden.

In the American community there are freedom, development, and democracy. In the Indian community there are serfdom, repression, and autocracy.

Mr. Chairman, to perpetuate such an unworthy system of perpetual tribalism has been the Indian Bureau policy. In order to carry it out there has been a continued effort to delay allotting the reservations to individual Indians.

The fundamental desire of Congress in the act of 1887 has been thwarted by specious objections and arguments. Bureau representatives, knowing exactly what they want, have appeared before the changing Committees on Indian Affairs and have usually succeeded in carrying out their wishes by hook or crook.

The "knockout" argument has been that if these first Americans are set free and given their own homes, they will immediately fall victims to the traps and pitfalls of unscrupulous white men, who are pictured as melodramatic villains, going up and down seeking what poor Indians they may devour.

I have pointed out that the responsibility for the Indian lack of business training rests upon the bureau itself. But putting that aside, it is strange doctrine in America that a law-abiding race must be disfranchised and kept in bondage in order that lawless citizens may be restrained from preying upon them.

It would be more just to put the bureau on the task of dealing with crooks who menace the Indians rather than to permit it to longer submerge and domineer over normal human beings who are capable of becoming splendid American citizens.

The real fear of the bureau is not that freedom to use their own lives and their own property would ruin the Indians, but that it would ruin the Indian Bureau. That is why the bureau is so vociferous in its declaration that the parental, kindly, patient guardianship of the bureau is the only hope of the red man.

Former Commissioner Sells in an address in 1915 said:

If I were called upon to indicate the one important word in our relations with the red man, it would be "patience."

That is the key word of Indian policy. The bureau glorifies "patience" on the part of the Indians and expects them to endure their evils without murmuring. It glorifies "patience" on the part of the American people and expects them to keep "hands off" and allow its experts to continue and extend a preposterous and infamous system.

If I am not mistaken, the American people and this Congress have come to realize that further forbearance is not a virtue but a vice; that the time for "patience" is over, and the time to act has come.

The illogical un-American arguments of the Indian Bureau have been successful in many instances. To recite all such cases would require volumes.

In 1889 Congress passed a law, after the most careful consideration, ordering the allotment of the Red Lake Reservation in Minnesota. To-day, 32 years after that date, the reservation has never been allotted and is still in tribal possession.

Eight years ago an allotment agent, who, by the way, had never had any experience in Indian matters, was named for the Pima Reservation in Arizona. The Pimas have the proud boast that never in their history have they shed the blood of a white man. They were the friends of the forty-niners who were seeking the gold coast of California, and they saved many of the fortune seekers from death at the hands of the Apaches.

This allotment agent has been at the task of allotting 4,800 Indians for the past eight years, drawing a good salary for it, and not one of his allotments had been completed in 1920. After all these years not a single Pima Indian on the reservation is a citizen of the United States, although their brothers, the Pimas in Mexico, have received the grant of citizenship long ago.

On the Menominee Reservation there is a Grand Army post made up exclusively of Indian veterans of the Civil War. Those men are on a closed reservation, where they can not establish homes, agriculture, stock raising, or anything that marks the independent home builder, because the land is not allotted, and there is no individual right of property. There the Indians can not become citizens without abandoning their reservation rights, and although they have pleaded for allotments the bureau refuses to release its hold. These unfortunate people have some valuable timber, and they will not be released as long as the money from the timber can be used.

This fast declining membership in the old Grand Army post are men of wealth, if they could receive 20 per cent of the actual value of the lumber cut from their reservation lands. They are old war veterans whose property is being fast dissipated, and they will go to their graves paupers, without receiving any real benefit from their vast estate. The children of these veterans are noncitizens, treated as noncompetents, given no chance to enjoy their property or to develop as men and women in free opportunity that should belong to all Americans, especially the children of the men who fought our battles.

It is clear that without allotment of lands an Indian can have no chance to become a competent, self-supporting individual. But even where allotments are made, there are countless methods for keeping the Indian in tow. One notorious case is that of William Brass, a full-blood Crow Indian, living on the Crow Reservation in Montana. His wife inherited the allotment of her grandmother and it had been used by William Brass for 15 years. He had fenced it, cared for it, and made it a valuable hay meadow. In 1918 he raised and sold hay to the value of $700 from this 80-acre allotment, besides retaining enough for feed for his horses.

In the spring of 1919 the Montana Farming Corporation, acting under a lease granted through the Indian Bureau, broke into this meadow, tore down the fences, removed his farm implements, and a stack of hay, and plowed his land. The Indian knew nothing about the lease and protested against this wrong with all his might, but was utterly helpless.

In the Indian Affairs Committee I brought the case before Indian Bureau officials, the superintendent of the reservation, and Secretary of the Interior. The latter declared that such a case could not have occurred, and I presented the sworn affidavit of William Brass. After some time, the explanation was given that it was not the allotment of Brass until his wife's heirs were determined, and that therefore it was leased to the Montana Farming Corporation.

It rested in the hands of the bureau to determine the heirs. The Indian had cultivated the land and secured more for it in one year than he could secure in 10 years under the lease forced upon him. He was supporting himself and earning the right to eat his own bread in the sweat of his brow. Over every protest, his land was taken from him and given to a great corporation. Is that the kind of treatment to make competent, self-supporting American citizens?

Remember that this land of the Crow Reservation was the small tract reserved out of the vast hunting grounds of the tribe for these Indians who paid with their blood for their friendship for the white man. The Crows never took up arms against the whites, but they took up arms for them on many a bloody battle field. In the Custer massacre the Crow scouts fought beside the ill-fated commander until they died. The only man who escaped the slaughter was Curly, the Crow scout, who, acting under Custer's express orders, escaped in order to bring reinforcements. It was of the land of this reservation that Curly spoke in 1907 when it was planned to throw open unoccupied lands. At the council Curly rose and said:

I was a friend of Gen. Custer. I was one of his scouts, and will say a few words. The soil you see is not ordinary soil—it is the dust of the blood, the flesh, and bones of our ancestors. We fought and bled and died to keep other Indians from taking it, and we fought and bled and died helping the whites. You will have to dig down through the surface before you find nature's earth, for the upper portion is Crow. The land as it is is my blood and my dead. It is consecrated, and I do not want to give up any portion of it.

William Brass is a full blood of that tribe. The land was his by every right of justice, and into it he had put 15 years' work, care, and attention. In a single day he was dispossessed and the great tractors of the Montana Farming Corporation cut through the soil that was "dust of the blood and flesh and bones of his ancestors." Because the Indian Bureau had not determined the heirs, which they alone could determine, this Indian's farm was taken from him and leased for a long period, and he was left despoiled, helpless, and alone.

Mr. Chairman, this power of determining heirs is one of the greatest in the arsenal of the bureau for its own perpetuation. It means that an Indian's estate is rarely settled. The Indian owner's will means nothing, and the Indian Bureau exercises complete judicial authority, and the Indian heirs have no day in court. There have been cases where by will Indian owners left their land to their widows and the widows' deaths occurred before the endless routine could be completed. I have been told that on the Omaha Reservation three sets of heirs died while the Indian Bureau was determining who were the heirs. Such actions rob the Indians of all faith and initiative. They can never be secure in their temporary rights, and they are made paupers in spirit even when they are not made paupers in property. Real assistance to the Indian would mean a scrupulous and sacred regard for the possessions which are his own. He should be urged to develop himself and his property and given absolute confidence that no one can disturb his rightful ownership. The present policy makes a fearful, craven creature instead of a self-sufficient man, and such a result is inevitable.

In the commissioner's report for 1920 it is stated that 234 Indians were given patents for their lands. They are called fee patents, but a note explains that the owners of these lands can not sell them. In another table it is stated that certificates of competency were issued to 86 other Indians.

If we take the entire number and assume that each Indian was freed entirely from the guardianship of the bureau, the fact remains that on such a basis the problem is perpetual. There were 6,000 Indian births in 1920, while only 320 Indians were declared competent and given their property. Congress has passed laws removing restrictions and it has created competency commissions, but with little success. The competency commissioners are composed of Indian Bureau agents, and Solomon himself would have doubts cast on his competency were he an American Indian appearing before the commissioners.

But even the Indians who are declared competent to manage their own property and are given fee patents and made citizens still do not escape the guardianship of the bureau. During the hearings I asked Commissioner Sells this question: "After the Indian has been declared competent and his property given him he is no longer retained on the rolls, is he?" "Not unless he has tribal property," was the commissioner's reply.

There is the string which still holds these Indians. No matter how able and competent, the Indian can not be loosed entirely until all tribal property is adjusted. The tribal property can not be disposed of until the rolls are made up, and the rolls are made up by the Indian Bureau. The fact that not a single tribe in the United States has had its affairs finally wound up is an indication of the speed made in the solution of this old problem.

But that is not all. When an Indian is declared competent it does not mean that his wife is competent. An alien coming here from darkest Africa may become a citizen in five years and his wife and minor children become citizens by that act. Not so with the first Americans. The Indian father may petition to receive his lands by grant of competency and may receive it, while his wife is still incompetent, incapable of a single action without the consent of the bureau. The children must be passed on as to competency also before having any rights whatsoever.

Such a policy ties the whole family to the bureau. If it is to be continued, generation after generation will see a segregated group in our midst, never assimilated and never Americanized.

I have seen a letter written within the past year by a woman belonging to the Omaha Tribe in Nebraska. She has a half interest in her father's allotment of 160 acres. She is declared to be incompetent, and, therefore, business must be done for her through the bureau agents. The land was leased for $10 an acre, secured by a bond, and providing for payments necessary for the support of the woman and her invalid husband. Here is what was done, as written by this woman herself to the Indian Bureau:

This lease has been canceled. In its place is a lease that pays the rent in a share of the grain raised. This is made by your office, but I do not know where, when, or how I am to get my rent. I do not know that it is secured by any bond or anything, and it is doubtful if I can travel to look after the grain that is to be paid in rent. It is also doubtful if the share of grain that is to be assigned to me will pay the taxes. It is certain that you have exchanged for me a lease that would have provided for all my necessities for one out of which I can not secure a pound of meat or the necessities of life for myself and family. I am now a pauper, without any benefits from my land, and I am forced to submit my wishes through the same persons and office that has placed me in that position. The same officials who looked after the welfare of the white man renter must submit my statement to you, and his story weighs with you against me.

That is the kind of business judgment which is used for the benefit of these "wards of the Government," who, if left to themselves, would so surely come to poverty. For my part, I believe the average Indian has better business judgment for himself than the average Indian agent has for him.

I have been told of a contract made by a superintendent for the building of a barn for Mrs. Metana Lyon, a full-blood Omaha Indian woman. She is listed as incompetent and the superintendent transacted the business for her. The barn cost $1,275, while other barns in the vicinity—larger, better, and more complete—cost $525.

Is it worth while to spend millions of dollars of the taxpayers' money in order to inflict upon helpless human beings such business judgment as that?

Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, what can be said of a condition such as is evidenced by a recent incident at the Winnebago Reservation in Nebraska? The men of this tribe have been citizens of the United States since 1887. They have had an annual celebration on a certain tract of land. This land this year was cultivated so that the crop might be removed before the end of July, when the celebration was to take place. The owner of the land is Charles Fisher, and it was patented in fee to his father many years ago. The son has been a voting citizen for years.

These citizens advertised their celebration and made all their plans. Their own baseball team has been winning many victories, and they made arrangements for games. Then two weeks before the date of their picnic notices were posted by the superintendent stating that the celebration could not be held. The notice stated that it would be inimical to the interests and welfare of the Indians at this time, but that he would arrange a celebration for them later in the fall. The notice closed as follows:

All persons, therefore, are forbidden to go upon this land for the purpose of preparing for or taking part in the proposed powwow. And anyone so doing will render himself and his belongings thereon subject to ejection and the penalties of the laws of the United States relative to trespass upon Indian lands. The law will be enforced.

SUPERINTENDENT.

If such autocratic authority is used over such advanced Indians as the Winnebagos of Nebraska, who have had allotments of their own and citizenship in most cases for a generation, what would be the limit on closed reservations, where no allotments have been made and no citizenship granted? It is impossible to portray in words too strong the degradation which must follow such unworthy authority backed by the power of the United States Government upon a subject people.

No foothold of control is overlooked. One Indian appeared before the Indian Affairs Committee who was declared by the bureau officials to have an income of $90,000 a year, an income equal to the salaries of any 12 Members of the House. He testified that he had been overseeing employees on his farm last summer. Inquiry revealed the fact that the Indian Bureau is allowing this Indian $300 a month to spend, with an extra order for an automobile occasionally. The rest of his "income" is in the guarding hands of the bureau to be held for his heirs, though he has no children.

In 12 years there will be a fund of a million dollars in that one account, with heirs to be determined and endless complexities to be handled in the manner most beneficial to the bureau.

It is as certain as day following night that to leave discretion in the hands of the bureau as to competency of Indians means that in 2021 there will still be a large number of incompetent Indians kept as wards for the support of the Indian Bureau. The Indian Bureau can not exist without the Indians, and the bureau will never go out of existence with the consent of those who make up its personnel.

As a matter of theory, the bureau officials know what should be done. Former Commissioner Sells said to the committee:

I want this record to contain the statement from me that among the most noble characters that I have ever met, and some of them as intelligent men as I care to meet, men who have the highest ideals of devotion to duty, patriotism, love of family, and industry, if you please, have been men every drop of whose blood was Indian.

That is a high tribute, but it is apparently the same kind that was paid the Hebrews by ancient Pharaoh. They were supporting his great empire by making bricks without straw. They were among the most "noble characters he had ever met." They had the "highest ideals of industry, if you please," and so he returned a scornful negative to the appeal of Moses, "Let my people go."

Surely if these full-blood Indians are as intelligent men as one would care to meet, of noble character, and industrious, they are needed in the great American community as citizens and as partners in a self-governing commonwealth. Commissioner Sells paid them a splendid tribute. He admired them so much that he would do everything for them, except the one thing of value—taking his organization off their backs and letting them go as free men.

Oh, the former commissioner was even willing to have them become citizens. In answer to another question of mine he said:
